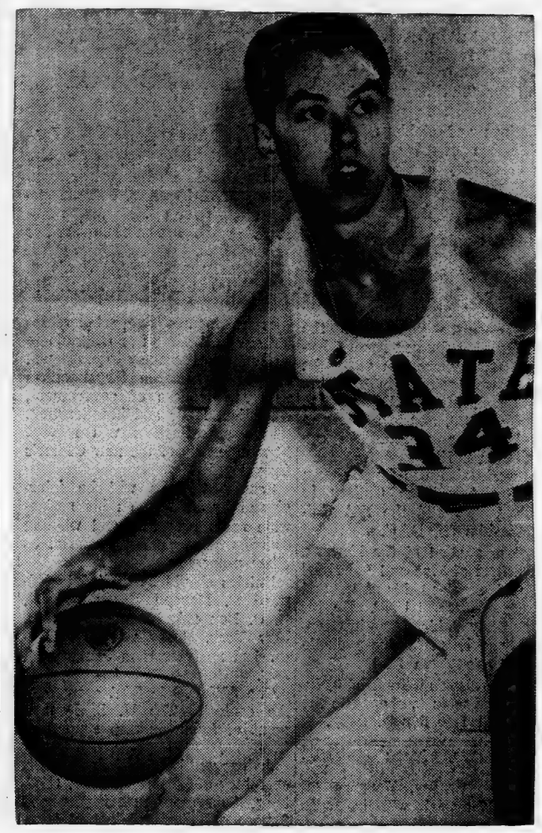
Larry Lakins, a 6-6, 225-pound service returnee, is the only newcomer to the State starting five. He's a sophomore and is counted on heavily for the future. Another 6-6 forward, Pete Auksel, rounds out the starters. Jim Whitfield, at 6-5, is the best jumper on the team and should see a lot of action.

Cunningham's 25 points against Maryland gives him an even 20-point average for nine games—seven of them UNC victories.



A new starter, though a "regular" all season, has entered the scene for Carolina. Mike Cooke, a cool performer in clutch situations, earned a starting role against Maryland after he scored 14 points at Wake Forest. Monday night he hit seven of 10 field goals and added 15 more points to the scoring total. The Mt. Airy junior has hit 30 of 53 shots for a 56.4 percentage.

All the Tar Heels were hot cent for the first half and 54 Brown, seven of 11, Charlie Shaffer and Bryan McSweeney three of six,, and Ray Respess two of four.

Brown's 19 points raised his average to 14.9. Yogi Poteet follows with a 13.1 mark. Shaffer is per cent for the game. Cunningham bucketed 11 of 21, Larry against the Terps—they hit 68 per averaging 9.8, Respess 8.2, and Cooke 7.7.

State Frosh Return For Second Bout

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina's freshman basketball team seeks its seventh win of the season tonight when the Tar Babies stage a return engagement with the N. C. State frosh.

The 6:00 match is a preliminary to the UNC-NCS varsity game.

Ken Rosemond's cagers, after rolling to a perfect 5-0 record through the Christmas holidays, have split games with Duke and Wake Forest since then for their present 6-1 standard.

The Tar Babies, in their first game with State, came away with the better part of a 74-57 score. That game, played before the varsity-alumni contest on December 12, was a comical display of fouling and more fouling. Officials handed out 37 fouls with Carolina being called 19 times.

The refs were also in for some heavy action when Kurt Dunstan rushed off the State bench and took exception to remarks made by Carolina's Mark Mirken. Fists flew but there were no casualties. Dunstan was later banished from the game for excessive rough play.

Bob Bennett, UNC's leading freshman scorer, will lead the Tar Babies into tonight's action. The 6-8 Pennsylvania center is averaging over 15 points a game and scored 25 against Wake Forest last time out.

Carolina will be without the services of the other half of its rebounding tandem, however. Mirken, the 6-6, 210-pound board bear, has left school due to disciplinary difficulties.

Rosemond will choose his starting forwards from the trio of Bill Harrison, Jimmy Smithwick and Earl Johnson. All three have seen much action already this year with Smithwick putting on some fine shooting exhibitions on occasion.

Johnny Yokley will probably start at one guard position with either Ray Hassell or Jimmy Moore taking over the other backcourt spot.

State will probably start Dunstan at center with Hal Blondeau and Bill Moffitt at the forwards and Ray Hodgdon and Doug Fowler at guards.

Moffitt and Hodgdon scored 11 points apiece in State's last appearance here.

NFL Outbids AFL By 2-1 In Pro Draft

(UPI) — The young American Football League has signed about a dozen of the glamor-boys from the 1962 college crop but on the whole has been out-bid again by the National Lague in the competition for new talent, a United Press International survey showed yesterday.

The National League, while grabbing off its own share of the college stars, also has numbers on its side. NFL clubs have outbid AFL rivals by a ratio of 2 to 1 or better for the players selected on the first 10 draft rounds of each league.

Cincy, Loyola Lead Ratings; Duke Ranks 5th

NEW YORK (UPI) — Unbeaten Loyola of Chicago ran its season record to 15-0, but lost ground in its battle to overtake Cincinnati as the nation's No. 1 major college basketball team in the United Press International ratings.

For the seventh straight week the Bearcats from Cincinnati, now 13-0, headed the UPI ratings and received all 35 first place votes from the board of coaches.

Illinois (11-1) and Arizona State (14-1) held onto the third and fourth spots, respectively, while Duke moved into fifth.

North Carolina's Tar Heels, surprised by Wake Forest, 78-70, slipped from 12th to a tie for 21st in the ratings. Georgia Tech, Wichita, Ohio State, Missisippi State and Oregon State rounded out the top ten.

Cincinnati, Loyola and Niagara (No. 18) are now the only unbeaten major college teams, though sixth-rated Georgia Tech did not fall until Monday night. Mississippi State knocked Tech out of the elite group in an 81-69 rout.

Tar Heels Capture 67-65 Overtime Win From State

★ ★ ★

Smith Relieved, But Admits Goof On Winning Play

By HARRY LLOYD

Coach Dean Smith took a satisfying sip on a soft drink and breathed a sigh of relief as he met the press outside the team's dressing room after the breathtaking win over N. C. State here last night. He was the man who had called the signals for the winning Tar Heels, and the minor fact that the signals hadn't been carried out meant little to him.

"That wining play didn't turn out the way it was supposed to," said the Carolina coach of Larry Brown's 10-foot banked jump shot seven seconds from the end of the cliff-hanging battle.

"We were going to call time out with eight seconds. I signalled to Larry, but he misunderstood and thought I meant to set up the play and shoot in five seconds.

"We wer going to sup up a screen from the sideline for Brown or work it in to Galantai for a shot from the lane."

On the most controversial play of the game, which occurred in the regulation play with Carolina leading by 65-63 and it appeared that Galantai had banked in a turn shot, Smith had this to say:

"One official called it two points. The other said that the state man was calling time out with 'momentary possession' when Galantai took the ball away from him and shot."

The play gave state a chance to come down and tie the game up, sending it into overtime.

"We give Brown the quarterbacking duties. He calls a lot of the defensive signals, but in the first half only," quipped Smith. "He came through like a real clutch player out there tonight.

"We're a lot more confident with Cunningham in there—he lifts the team. He can go up and get the ball." When Smith was asked about the foul difficulty that Cunningham got in again before fouling out, even then he expressed pleasure. "If Billy gets fouls jumping for the ball, it's all right. Before tonight, he was committing silly little fouls.

"State was tough underneath. They have a good basketball team. We were joking earlier about the size of their starting five. It's heavier than the line on their football team.

"Our trouble was taking advantage of our breaks. We'd steal the ball, then throw it away without taking a shot.

"It wasn't one of our better games, but I'm sure State had a lot to do with that."

Brown's Late Shot Brings Eighth Win

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina had to fight for its nationally-ranked life here last night. The Tar Heels survived, 67-65.

But it took forty minutes of pulse-pounding regular play and a five-minute overtime period before UNC was able to subdue a surprisingly-strong, fired up State College Wolfpack.

Given a second life when Jim Whitfield put in a layup at the end of regulation time, N. C. State went into overtime with a distinct advantage over the Tar Heels—Billy Cunningham was out of the game on fouls.

But Carolina, as it has all year long, came through in the clutch.

Off the jump ball at the start of the extra period, Charlie Shaffer missed a long jumper. State got the rebound but aiso missed.

After another exchange of miscues, the Wolfpack again came down with the ball. This time, Whitfield once more was called on to pull it out for State. But the big redhead charged Mike Cooke underneath the UNC basket, Carolina took possession, and a timeout was immediately called.

With 1:53 remaining, UNC went into a freeze with magnificent Larry Brown at the controls. Brown dribbled for exactly one minute and 46 seconds. He then jumped and let fly from 12 feet out.

The ball banked into the net, UNC had the lead, and pandemonium broke loose in Woollen Gym..

State called time out with four seconds left, but Ken Rohloff's long desperation in-bounds pass was intercepted by Mike Cooke. Cooke, a defensive gem all night, passed to Brown and another page was turned in this ancient rivalry with the hated Wolfpack.

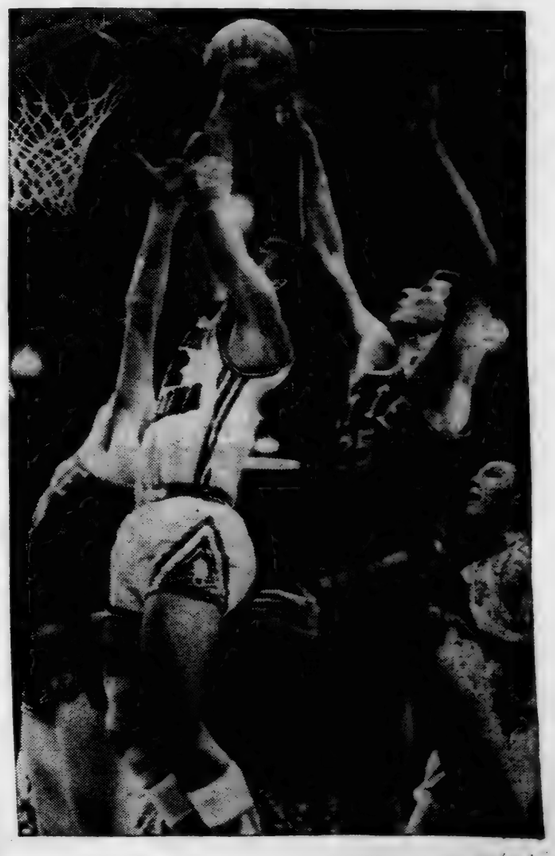
Last night's battle will surely go down in history as one of the most exciting games ever seen here.

N. C. State led 34-33 at halftime, due in large part to a three-minute scoring famine faced by the Tar Heels midway through the period.

UNC fell further and further behind in the second half and as late as the 9:26 mark trailed by eight points. When Whitfield canned two free throws at that point, Carolina was down at 55-47 and in deep trouble.

But Carolina's beloved sophomore, Cunningham, re-entered the game from a foul-inflicted tenure on the bench and ignited a rally which cut the lead to two at 63-61.

He fouled out with 1:20 left in regulation time but not before stealing the ball and feeding Yogi Poteet for a fast break lay-up. This play was the second of two Poteet half-court romps, the first tying the game at 63, the second giving UNC a cherished 65-63 advantage.



On Cunningham's foul, Jon Speaks missed his free throw. But first Brown and then Shaffer missed one-and-one situations for Carolina, setting the stage for Whitfield's last-second lay-in.

In the preliminary, the UNC frosh swamped State's Wolflets for the second time this year, 86-58.

Dorm Court Convicts 2 Residents

Tuesday night the I.D.C. Court tried and convicted three dormitory residents. Charges ranged from disorderly conduct (disturbing others) to property damage. The sentences imposed by the Interdormitory Court ranged from Official Reprimand to General Probation from dormitory activities. Two of the students were sophomores and one was a freshman.

The property damage consisted of the removal of a staircase bannister from one of the dormitories by a student who had been drinking. The Attorney General's staff found that the bannister had been in poor repair previous to this incident and had apparently come off in the student's hand. The defendant thus received the court's lightest sentence, an Official Reprimand.

Broken Lock

The other two students were charged and convicted of knocking open a locked door thus breaking the lock. They received General Probation restricting them from all dormitory activities and a warning not to reappear before the I.D.C. Court during their probation.

Earlier this year the I.D.C. Court has met several times. Two students have been removed from all University Housing for a conviction of shooting off firecrackers. This is generally the minimum penalty imposed for any firecracker incident.

Earlier, students have been fined by the court for distroying dormitory property.

Clemson Ordered To Admit Negro

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (UPI) — A federal appeals court Wednesday ordered an end to school segregation in South Carolina—one of the last two Southern states in which there has been no lowering of color barriers.

State officials indicated they would appeal the order to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Wednesday's ruling involved Harvey Gantt, a 20-year-old honor student who is seeking admission to all-white Clemson College. The court held that Gantt should be admitted later this month when the second semester commences on Jan. 28.

Gantt has been studying architecture at Iowa State University.

He says he wants to attend Clemson because it is about 1,200 miles closer to his home.

Wednesday's order was returned by the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, one of the highest courts on the federal legal ladder. The next step up, if the order is appealed, likely would be the Supreme Court itself.

The appeals court ruling overturned a decision by federal district Judge C. C. Wyche, who held that Gantt failed to meet application requirements at Clemson.

The appeals court said, however, that Gantt's "qualification for admission is unquestioned" and it accused the college of frustrating Gantt's 18-month effort to meet requirements.

South Carolina officials did not appear surprised at the appeals court ruling although a legal battle will continue, it is known that steps were taken weeks ago to assure that any court-ordered desegregation of Clemson would be carried out peaceably.

Gantt, interviewed at his Charleston home, said he considered integration a secondary issue in his bid for admission.

"My reason for going to Clemson is not to integrate the school but to get an education."

C. Van Woodard Is Speaker Here At 8

C. Van Woodard, History professor at Yale and strong exponent of integration, will speak tonight at 8 in Howell Hall. His address is sponsored by the UNC chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

Woodard, who received his Ph.D. here, received the American Council of Learned Societies' $10,000 prize last year for his work in the humanities.

The sponsoring AAUP is a group concerned with academic freedom and the promotion of educational improvement. Dr. L. P. Spruill is the president of the UNC chapter. There are 140 members of the Association on campus.

JAMES BALDWIN

James Baldwin, author of the best-selling novel "Another Country, will speak at North Carolina College tonight at 8:15 in B. N. Duke Auditorium on "The South's Demand for New Leadership."

Baldwin, who has been described by Time Magazine as "The most bitterly eloquent voice of the American Negro," is visiting Durham under the auspices of the NCC student chapter of the NAACP.

Tickets for the speach are available at the Y-Office and the Community Church Office. Admission is one dollar for adults and fifty cents for students.

Dillon Says Tax Cut Is Mandatory

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Kennedy administration indicated Wednesday that the unbalanced budget going to Congress Thursday will be followed by another deficit — financing program next year.

Treasury Secretary Douglas Dillon said the government faces the prospect of many more deficits if Congress fails to approve the President's tax cut program. Even if it is approved, he said, there will be some more "deficits."

The President sends Congress at noon Thursday his budget for the fiscal year starting uly 1. Based on his proposed tax reduction, the $99 billion spending plan calls for a substantial deficit.

Dillon, addressing a freedom bond rally, made clear that the administration expects to submit another unbalanced budget next year. But like the President he saw the tax cut as the economic hope of the future.

Quiet Hours To Go Into 24-Hour Effect

Dormitory Quiet Hours will go into effect 24 hours a day starting Sunday, January 20. This ruling will be enforced by the I.D.C. throughout examination period, as has been the case in the past.

Violations may be reported to the Interdormitory Council Representative or any other dorm officer.

Unnecessary noise, loud radios and record players or any noise which disturbs study or sleep will constitute a violation.

One Student Suspended By Council

The Men's Council acted in three cases Tuesday night; it suspended one defendant and found two others not guilty.

All three students were accused of cheating on quizzes before the Christmas holidays.

In the first case the defendant was seen referring to notes by two classmates who advised him to contact the teacher concerning the matter. He asked them to allow him a few days to make up his mind as to what to do. When he was approached several days later by the same two students, he lied and said that he had spoken to the teacher.

At a third meeting one of the witnesses notified the defendant that he had spoken to the teacher himself and turned the matter over to Dean Long.

The sentence of suspension in this case was for one full academic semester, meaning that the student may apply for readmission to school in the fall semester. A grade of "F" is recorded in the course but all other grades are dropped without penalty.

Lack of Evidence

The other two alleged violations resulted in not guilty verdicts because of lack of evidence. In the first instance, a student was reported for cheating on several occasions during a quiz. But witnesses and the students involved testified that they did not observe any such honor code infractions. An examination of the papers revealed no striking similarities.

In the second case a student reported another member of the class who appeared to be looking upon a third party's paper. The alleged offender was seated some ten rows away from the person who reported him and the distance between his paper and the third party's was three or four feet.

The papers bore similarities, but they appeared to relate closely to the test or class notes. Because of the uncertainties surrounding both the identification of the defendant and the comparison of the papers, the Council returned a not guilty verdict.

The final meeting of the Men's Council will be held during the semester break, and will deal primarily with infractions which occur during the examination period. A member of the attorney general's staff will be in the Council Room in Graham Memorial every day from 10 to 12 in the morning and 2-5 in the afternoon; Campus Code or Honor Code matters may be referred to him at that time.

Infirmary

The following students were in the infirmary Wednesday: Beverly Brune, Helen Ellis, Elizabeth Metts, Nancy Coleman, Patricia Hume, Marian Miller, David Miller, Charles Williams, Charles Shelton, William Love, Guy Crampton, William Waring, Dailey Derr, Carroll Gray, Robert Bolan, Jon Harrell, Bertan Dean, Otis Stepp, Fred Harrison, and Robert Richardson.

The APO Book Exchange will be closed Feb. 9th at 1 p.m. and Feb. 10th all day.

Institute Formed In Outdoor Drama

Chancellor William B. Aycock announced yesterday the founding of the "Institute of Outdoor Drama" to be a part of UNC.

The new institute will fulfill a national need for a central clearing house for information, advice, auditions and production assistance for the many outdoor dramatic productions and community pageants that are held all over the United States.

William Trotman, a veteran of the Carolina Playmakers and a native of Winston-Salem, was named director of the Outdoor Drama Institute. Trotman is an actor, playwright, director, production manager and stage and scenery designer. He is returning to Chapel Hill from Houston, Texas, where he has been resident designer for the Ford Foundation-backed Alley Theater.

The purpose of the Institute of Outdoor Drama is threefold:

1. To stimulate interest and dedication to the outdoor drama movement—to inform, place and train new talent and to redirect established talent.

2. To provide complete advisory service on every phase of planning and producing—to gather the people who have worked and advised in the past and to solicit their support, cooperation and service.

3. To act as a respository for information to include publicity samples, architectural plans, photographs and financial information.

Chancellor Aycock also announced a board of directors of the Institute, including Prof. Harry E. Davis, chairman of the UNC Department of Dramatic Art; Paul Green, Pulitzer Prize winning dramatist who is author of several outdoor dramas now running annually; Professor Samuel Selden, former director of the Carolina Playmakers and dramatic arts chairman at Chapel Hill who is now head of the University of California (Los Angeles) Theater Arts Department; Kermit Hunter, playwright and chairman of the Division of Fine Arts, Hollins College, Va.; John Ehle, special assistant to the Governor of North Carolina and on leave as a member of the faculty in Radio, TV and Motion Pictures at Chapel Hill; John Parker, business manager of the Carolina Playmakers and Charles Milner, director of the University Extension Division.

Campus Study Rooms Listed For Exams

The Academic Affairs and Communications Committees have issued the following list of available study rooms during exams:

Saunders 110 & 111 (both open all night); Hanes 104, 105, 106, & 210 (all open all night); Peabody 105 (library, open until 10:30 p.m.); and Phillips 220, 212, & 222.

Further suggestions are Wilson Library, Alumni Building, Craige Dormitory, Howell Hall reading room, Church study rooms (Baptist, Episcopal, etc), Graham Memorial (open until 3 a.m. all pre-exam nights), and Departmental libraries (BA, Art, Pharmacy, Medical, Nursing, Education, Music, Public Health, Law, Physics & Math, etc.)

Cosmopolitan Club Slates Ball Feb. 9

A semi-formal Valentine Masquerade Ball will be held by the Cosmopolitan Club on February 9 from 8-12 p.m. at the Chapel Hill Country Club.

"Exams will be over, and it will be the first 'after exams' campus weekend," said Maria Elena Bravo, a foreign student from Spain.

A limited number of tickets, at $2.50 per couple, may be obtained at Lenoir Hall today from 12-2 p.m. and from 5-7 p.m., or by calling Miss Bravo at 968-9132.

"Don't worry about a costume to wear," Miss Bravo said. "Bring a mask and the Cosmopolitan Club will provide the orchestra, dancing, food, and fun."

The Cosmopolitan Club, a non-profit organization, is the only campus organization designed especially for foreign students. Its purpose is to bring forth a better understanding between foreign and American students.

The club's membership is composed of around 100 foreign and American students. Such countries as Pakistan, Japan, Indonesia, Norway, Ecuador, and Viet Nam are represented.

Student Legislators Need New Approach

The Student Legislature is frequently criticized by observers, the student press, and other branches of Student Government for a multitude of reasons.

These attacks are often grounded in personal prejudices, or the impression that the legislators are "afraid" to do anything but compromise. Many observers express disillusionment that the body bogs down in parliamentary entanglements. If these criticisms are ever to be valid and fair, a much more fundamental charge must be leveled, and answered by the campus political parties and the legislators.

Any representative, legislative body is based on the theory that the will of the people (in this case, the student body) can best be carried out by their elected representatives. If this were not true, the work of the legislature could be carried out by simply presenting every issue in the newspaper, and asking the public to respond, yes or no.

In addition to the difficulties of communication, the objections to such a system are many. The decisions on most bills would have little more value than a man-on-the-street poll. There would be a minimum of intelligent study given to any legislation, and only the most superficial considerations would be taken into account.

The most serious and basic charge that can be leveled at the Student Legislature is that a majority of their votes amount to exactly this. The current crop of student legislators probably represent as qualified a body as could be elected; but only in their potential. By refusing to educate themselves in the laws, concepts, and needs of student government, the majority remain no more valuable to the legislative process than would, the man-in-the-street.

In the oath of office, every legislator promises to "uphold the (Student) Constitution of the University of North Carolina." Most of them have never even read it. The basis of the Student Government is explained in the "Codification of Statutes," which every legislator is supplied with, at the expense of student funds. Yet, the codification remains unread by most legislators.

It is doubtful that more than 20 per cent of the members of the body have any sort of philosophy of student self-government. How can a person make anymore than a superficial decision on a bill if he has no concept of the role, the statutes, and goals of Student Government.

The philosophy of a student government can be as sophisticated as that of a national government. In both, the conservatives prefer a limited government and the liberals work for a broad-base government. Unfortunately, most of those who would claim to be in-the-middle are actually on-the-outside.

When the student legislator reads the codification and the Constitution, he begins to be qualified to sit in the body. When he analyzes hs voting and formulates a governmental philosophy, he is qualified to stand for reelection on some basis other than "how many votes he can get," or how "nice" a guy he is.

Only with such an approach can the Legislature overcome the traditional criticism, and take a responsible and consistent approach to the problems of the campus.

—Harry DeLung

Selling Education . . .

In the next three months the state Legislature will be considering budgetary requests. Included in these requests will be those of the University — for higher faculty salaries, capital improvements (including the student union), etc.

Per usual Carolina students will make an attempt at lobbying with the legislators for the University budget. This generally takes the form of visits to Raleigh by students who talk to the legislators from their home counties, and attempt to put over the point that the students want these requests as much as the University does (particularly such student-oriented items as the union). Lobbying also goes into the home county directly, with letters to the town newspaper, talking with local groups and officials, and talking with family and friends.

Some students, educators and political leaders have questioned the value of such lobbying. How much good does it really do? Is it worth the great effort exerted? And — Is this the proper sphere for student action?

One recent proposal is that the students (under the direction of the State Affairs Committee) switch their attention to the general state of higher education in North Carolina, with less time devoted to pure and simple lobbying for money.

This proposal would have students go into a less glamorous area which is of more long-term importance. Instead of talking about the University now, they would have to be qualified to speak about the future of the Consolidated University, name changes, liberal arts and professional schools, athletic programs within the University . . . Although of less importance in the near term, this proposal, if properly implemented, could reap the University and its students considerably more benefits in the future. (JC)

Nina & Jackie: A Difference

To the Editors,

I have been struck by the recent proliferation of literature around the campus, distributed by the Student Peace Union. I would take this opportunity to respond to a suggestion from one of their number, put forth to end the current arms race, which they consider as inevitably heading toward nuclear holocaust.

The suggestion of which I speak was taken from Aristophane's' Lysistrata. It advocates that the women of the world band together and deny the men their favors until disarmament and an end of violence have been achieved.

Notwithstanding the fact that this approach overestimates the power of women, I condemn it as biased and therefore leading to appeasement.

Gentlemen, a REALISTIC appraisal of the world scene would readily reveal a difference between Jacqueline Kennedy and Nina Khrushchev.

. . . Rare In This 'Atmosphere'

To the Editors:

Bravo to the DTH's lead editorial (Jan. 12) by Leonidas Capetanos!

It was thoughtful, and a refreshing change. A college paper shouldn't have to lower its style and content to the level of the broadest commercial readership. This one often has.

Capetanos' article hinted of no cynicism; it was proudly idealistic, and moral without apology.

In the local "atmosphere," such is rare, too rare.

For I have heard it charged that this student body (with all its different points of view) seems immersed in sub-conscious defeat.

Here was someone writing creatively, touching cosmic levels, communicating personally, including the beautiful—in the DTH!

But cool attack, deft cuts, skepticism, and pessimism can overcome such inspiration. It is a living thing, and you can choke it to death with a madras tie. And be accepted.

Bravo to Capetanos!

Bravo to the unlocked door and the better room within!

Bravo the opportunity of UNC and the individuals brave enough to find themselves!

Bravo to the DTH which occasionally comes through!

Chewing Gum Habit Is Bad

To the Editors,

It was during the Christmas holidays, I ate my lunch every day at the Inn. One day I saw a foreign student in line, several persons ahead of me. I talked to him occasionally at Graham Memorial when I went there to read. He was chewing gum, and if he had not been making such a display of it I would have passed it up. But it was too much. I got out of line and went up to him and said, "Where did you get that gum? Don't you know I don't let you chew gum in public,"

He kept on chewing his gum, but when I got in the dining room he beckoned me to join him and his companion, a graduate student from Sweden. He brought up the subject of gum-chewing. He said it was not done in his country in public, but he understood it was done in this country, that there was millions of dollars spent on gum in the USA every year.

I said that was true, but only common people chewed gum, or picked their teeth, in public in America.

Later I talked to a professor who said people pick their teeth in France, that tooth picks were provided in the restaurants in Paris. But this is not Paris. You should get the food from between your teeth promptly after eating. But you should carry stimudemts in your pocket and clean your teeth in a lavatory. And if you must chew gum, do it in the privacy of your home.

At one time, some of the students advocated tooth picks on the tables at Lenoir Hall. Now wouldn't that be something. The Tooth Pick Parade leaving Lenoir Hall! Never!

Cafeteria Hairs–Ech!

To the Editors,

Not being quite as intelligent as our astute scholars of logic and political science, I would like to bring to mind few facts about something which lies a little bit closer to my heart—food. Since I am one of those unfortunate individuals who, because of a lack of time, finds it expedient to obtain a breakfast in either Lenoir Hall or the Pine Room, I have learned to tolerate those little inconveniences which co-exist in those places; all except for one—those long, black, kinky filaments otherwise known as hairs. I quite realize that the high paid help there is really trying to please us with their morning offering, but tell me, gentlemen, how can we let them know that we really have enough hairs of our own, and we actually don't need any of theirs? Now we really can't go to the manager can we? Everyone knows that his feelings would be hurt, and in the following temper tantrum he would probably fire a few bus-boys and God knows we need them.

What I was wondering though, was if you and the rest of our leaders could somehow ask Uncle Terry or Mr. Bill (either one will do) to construct an invisible screen, like a net perhaps, between the food we buy and the hair they shed. Thanks, I knew you would!

News Briefs

The Kennedys And The Clan In 1985

International Press News Briefs
October 12, 1985

President Ted Kennedy, commenting today on the Russian occupation and fortification of Long Island, the Panama Canal and the southern tip of Florida, said, "We are watching these developments carefully and have sent a stiff note of protest to Moscow."

Congresswoman Caroline Kennedy (Dem. Mass.) and Richard King, son of Evangelist Martin Luther King, were married today. The ceremony was performed by Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Frank Sinatra. A lavish reception followed at her home in Hyannis-Port. Thirty-three of the guests were thrown into the swimming pool and all ended up in the hospital. It was later disclosed that the United Nations Ambassador, Peter Lawford, had drained the pool the night before as a practical joke. The happy couple will leave tomorrow on a six-month honeymoon in the Congo.

John F. Kennedy, Jr., announced today he will be in the running for the Democratic nomination for Senator from Mass. His campaign will be "I can do more for Massachusetts."

President Ted Kennedy said today his brother Jack, former President (1960-1968) will come out of retirement and be named Secretary of State replacing his wife Jacqueline who will be given the Post of Secretary of Defense.

Presidential Secretary, Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, mother of the President, celebrated her 95th birthday today and said she has not thought of retiring. She also said that recent talk about a "Kennedy dynasty" in Washington was just Republican propaganda and a lot of rubbish.

When questioned in the Meet the Press TV program last night, Sec. of the Treasury Bobby Kennedy said he did not think the President's nine billion dollar budget was too large. But he did say that the figure of three hundred and fifty billion for foreign aid could be trimmed a little. "After All," he said, "there is such a thing as overdoing it, you know."

Two retirements were announced. will be replace by Teamsters President Jimmy Hoffa. Secretary of Agriculture Billie Sol Estes who was appointed in 1963 by former President John F. Kennedy, Sr., announced his retirement.

President Ted Kennedy said yesterday the recent increase in steel workers' wages from $15 to $17 an hour and the reduction in the workday to three hours was non-inflationary and does not call for a price increase by the steel companies. When told that U. S. Steel closed at 1½ on the N. Y. S. E. last night, he said he thought the stock overpriced, Asked about rumors his family was short 50,000 shares since 1962 he said "No comment."

The Secretary of Consumption issued a stern warning last night that unless the nation returned to a full 25 hour work week again, products will continue to be unavailable or in short supply. He added that the price of hamburger meat will be made higher than the current $21.10 per pound.

Better Teachers?

Federal Gvmt. & Teaching Programs

The New Republic

Despite a lot of talk about aid to education being a priority item for the 88th Congress, few in Washington are betting heavily on major legislation being enacted in the next two years. Last fall there were some indications that the Administration was prepared to make a major departure from tradition, sponsoring new experimental programs instead of merely pumping money into ventures which already sanctioned by Washington to play a creative role have been pushed into the background, and the measures now being spruced up by Presidental Assistant Theodore Sorensen are almost all old hat. Many have been rejected by previous Congresses.

One of the few significant innovations sfill being seriously considered is a scheme for subsidizing teachers' salaries. The new Commissioner of Education, Francis Keppel, has long argued that education gets less than its fair share of gifted college graduates. He has suggested that the cure is higher salaries. But unlike most people he does not want across the board increases. Salaries for beginning teachers, he notes, are competitive with other professions open to young college graduates. What discourages people from entering teaching, and persuades others to leave after a few years, is not starting salaries but propects for advancement. In the normal course of events most teachers reach their maximum pay at the age of 35 or 40, earning from $7,500 to $10,000. That is not a good enough prospect to attract gifted or ambitious men who want to live the upper-middle-class life of their college classmates. It is especially discouraging. Keppel has pointed out, when the low salary reflects limited responsibility. Unless a teacher becomes an administrator he has no more opportunity to influence the young at 40 or 50 than he had when he first became a full-time teacher.

While at Harvard, Keppel played a decisive role in developing team teaching programs to provide experienced and talented teachers with broader responsibilities, putting a group of novice teachers under their supervision and giving them a much larger group of pupils to handle with such assistance. Now that he is in Washington Keppel is said to want the Administration to tackle the financial needs of experienced teachers, perhaps by paying a special supplement to teachers with more than, say, 10 years of teaching behind them. Unfortunately, this proposal has not, at least so far, been tied to any kind of merit scheme. It is simply a longevity grant.

Teachers have long and rightly been suspicious of merit pay schemes in which superintendents and principals rate their staff, for principals tend to judge teachers according to their skill in keeping order and their promptness in filing report cards. They rarely try to determine who is doing the most for his or her pupils. In such circumstances merit pay is a travesty. The New Republic has pointed out in the past, however, that merit pay need not be administered by school principals.

The Administration is sponsoring more and more teacher training institutes, designed to give refresher courses to experienced teachers, develope new curricula and train teachers to use them. If experienced teachers were offered sholarships to spend a year at such an institute, say 10 years after graduating from college, they could be brought up to date on new developments in their field, given the benefit of contact with people from other school systems, and most important of all, given an opportunity to do supervised teaching which benefit from the criticism of outsiders. (of course many teachers would fear such criticism, but this does not make it less desirable.) Such institutes could award special degrees to outstanding teachers and make these eligible for substantial federal salary subsides—perhaps on the order of $5,000 a year.

Unfortunately, such a scheme would be more attractive to young, self-confident students deciding whether or not to go into teaching than to tired self-deprecating men already in the schools. If you propose to give one teacher in four a $5,000 raise, the typical old hand assumes that he will be excluded. So he prefers small raises for everybody, regardless of ability.

Given the ambivalence of the teachers about all efforts to raise their sights, the Administration is unlikely to support merit pay or any other major reform. Yet Congress is rightly skeptical about Administration proposals which would merely pump more money into the existing system. In their heart of hearts many Congressmen feel today's average school mistress does not earn her keep, and that poor communities need a lot of things worse than a new school building. They may be right. Reform will cost money. But without reform more money will often mean only more bored incompetent teachers and more football equipment.

Watch Out For Graduate Students

Instruction to Freshman, or A College Handbook, Chapter I

Genus: Graduate Students

Description: May be any size, shape, or sex. Often to be distinguished by briefcase. Coat and tie are common markings of male bird.

Characteristics: Teaches beginning undegraduate courses. Knows very little about course; teaches it so that learned professor can teach graduate courses. Observant freshman will observe that this practice reverses the ideal of quality education for as many as possible.

Habitat: Has nest in library; uses it very little, but, because he hates noise, in absentia, freshman or any other undergraduate may not enter forset where he nests. Trained keepers do so for the unwashed. May also be found in classrooms and seminar rooms.

Nature: Withdrawn, because of vital concern with important topics, such as, "Cicero's use of Amicitia as a Technical term"; "General William Rosecrans and his Role in the Peninsular Campaign"; and "A Comparison of Two Obscure French Poets about Whom, Hopefully, No One in the Department Knowns Anything".

Treatment: With care, he may grade a course you are taking even if you never see him in the class. Remember that this species is doing Advanced Work—right out on the frontiers of knowledge (if back alleys are frontiers). Never question why they are her, nor what they are doing. They are working on The Paper, or Preparing for Orals. Furthermore, the degree-money coorelation never occurs to them, nor are they going to school because they have nothing else to do.

The female of this species is either married and harmless, or single and neurotic; exercise the utmost caution in approaching it.

Webb To Speak Here Today

The Director of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, James Webb, and Governor Terry Sanford will highlight the 38th annual North Carolina Press Institute which opens today in Chapel Hill.

Although some of the Institute's meetings will only be open to the delegates, due to lack of space, Gov. Sanford's address tonight at 8:30 and Webb's speech tomorrow morning at 10 will be open to the public.

Both of these functions will be held in Carroll Hall.

Air Force Sponsors Information Booth

Freshmen may learn how they can enter the AFROTC program next semester by visiting an information booth in Memorial Hall during spring semester registration.

The booth will be open from 1 to 4:30 on Sunday, 3 February. Applications for the program can be made at AFROTC Detachment offices in Caldwell Annex (behind the Law School) on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, 4, 5, and 6 February.

Second semester freshmen may enter AFROTC with full credit toward the curriculum.

Dolphins Host East Carolina Tonight

By JOEL BUCKLEY

Carolina's varsity swimmers tangle with East Carolina College tonight at 8 o'clock in the Bowman Gray Pool. The Blue Dolphins, who swept six first places and a 58-38 decision from ECC earlier in the season in Greenville, will be out to maintain their mastery over ECC. According to swimming coach Pat Earey, UNC has never dropped a swim meet to this in-state opponent. Going into today's meet, UNC's record is 6-2.

Earey reported, however, that his squad will have its work cut out for them both tonight and in the two following meets (University of Florida and Florida State). He noted that East Carolina had picked up about six boys who were ineligible for their first few meets and that they had been talking up a storm about beating UNC and therefore anticipates this meet to be much more of a test than the first one.

Tonight's meet will feature a duel between All-American Thompson Mann and sophomore whiz Harrison Merrill in the 100-yard freestyle event. Other tentative starters include: Mann, Pete Swift, Merrill or Bill Bloom, Larry Roberts or Harry Schiffman in the medley relay; Thad Adams in the 200 freestyle; Dick Woodrow and Marion Smith or Howard Cone in the 50 freestyle; Barry King and Frank Lea or Mann in the individual medley; Ernie Oare in the diving; Bloom in the 200 butterfly; Scott Smiley and Russell Redding in the backstroke; Mike Bissell and Lea in the 500 freestyle; Tate Kemper and Swift in the breaststroke; and any combination of swimmers in the freestyle relay.

Florida Trip

The Blue Dolphins leave by bus February first for two meets in Florida and what Earey calls "more opportunities to see where we stand." Gainesville and a meet with the University of Florida is the first stop. Last year the Gators smashed eight UNC records as they rolled to a 65-30 win over the Tar Heels in Chapel Hill. This year, Earey said, Jerry Green and a fellow named Livingston lead the powerful Southeastern Conference Champs. Livingston has done 2:06 or better in the 200-butterfly (the UNC record is 2:09.3) and Green has been outstanding in the freestyle and individual medley events. The varsity mentor added that they have plenty of depth, too. The following day they move to Tallahassee for their first meet ever with Florida State University. Earey said that, "He wasn't sure what they have for a team down there, but the grapevine has it that they are a 'strong' club."

Physics Fiends Win Volleyball

The Physics Fiends were crowned All-Campus Volleyball champs Tuesday night as they held off a late Chi Psi rally in the second game to sweep the two-game series. After taking the first game easily, 10-4, the Fiends had to buckle down to preserve a 12-10 win and the championship.

In Tuesday's basketball games Sigma Chi (w) topped Beta (w), 37-13; PiKA (w) whipped the Chi Phi Fish, 54-20; ATO wallopped the Sigma Nu Mavericks, 72-21; SAE took Pi Kappa Phi, 45-33; Phi Gam won over Zeta Psi, 43-37; Delta Sigma Pi rolled over Theta Chi, 61-16; and DKE whipped SPE, 51-35.

UNC Track Team Takes Long Rest

Next engagement for North Carolina's indoor track team is the VMI Relays at Lexington, Va., Feb. 2.

Several individuals participated in the Richmond Invitational Meet last weekend and the Carolina team defeated N. C. State in the first meet last Saturday.

The Tar Heels will battle South Carolina and Clemson in duel meets before competing in the annual Atlantic Coast Conference championship meet here March 9.

Controversy Over Harland Course

Dellinger Replies To His Critics

Men's Council Chairman Walter Dellinger, recently attacked by Chapel Hillians and several state newspapers for his statements regarding cheating in so-called "crip" courses at UNC, answered the charges yesterday in a prepared statement to the DTH.

In his statement Dellinger said he never claimed Dr. J. P. Harland's Archeology of the Bible course contained the "lowest element of the University." However, it was reported yesterday that Harland himself admitted his course was "crip" and that there were undesirables in it. Harland could not be reached for comment.

The Raleigh Times, on February 1, printed statements praising Dr. Harland's courses and calling Dellinger a "very uninformed young man."

The controversy arose after six students were convicted and suspended for cheating in the Harland course. It had been rumored that there had been "mass cheating" on the exam.

In a statement to the Charlotte Observer, Dellinger called the class "one of the campus' few but well known 'crip' courses." Dellinger said this was a reason for the cheating to arise. It was also rumored that Dr. Harland had changed the final exam for the first time in fifteen years. The Student Government Attorney General is continuing the investigation which led to the conviction of the six.

Dellinger stated that his remarks had been directed at "crip" courses in general and not at the Archeology course. He added that he had apologized to Dr. Harland, for any embarrassment he might have caused, but his general statement about "crips" still stood.

The Statement

"During my absence last week," Dellinger said, "several area newspapers carried both editorials and statements by permanent Chapel Hill residents chastising me for remarks I was supposed to have made concerning Dr. J. P. Harland and recent cases of cheating at the University. These editorials and statements were based in part on comments I did not make and in part on comments of mine which were misinterpreted. I have never said that the courses of Dr. Harland appealed to the 'lowest element of the University'. What I did say was that 'crip' courses generally speaking have such an appeal. I did not specifically refer to archeology courses and certainly did not refer to Dr. Harland personally. For any twenty-one-year-old student to speak in such a manner of a man of Dr. Harland's knowledge and experience would certainly be presumptious, and I have apologized to him for any embarrassment misinterpretations of my remarks may have caused.

"I do intend, however, to stand behind remarks I did make concerning the detrimental effect of 'crip' courses on the Honor System, a problem with which student leaders at Carolina have been concerned for a number of years. Minutes of a joint meeting held on December 10, between the Men's Council and the Faculty Committee on Discipline state that there was a concensus of opinion concerning 'the detrimental effect of so-called crip courses on the Honor System'. Although a number of excellent students have taken these courses for a variety of valid reasons, there still exists a general atmosphere of academic laxity in some of the classes. When academic integrity leaves the classroom—and I am not referring to any particular courses — the Honor System ceases to function as it should," Dellinger continued.

"Fortunately, classes of this nature are few in number, and as the academic atmosphere of the University improves, so does the Honor System. The Charlotte Observer stated that 'it would be ridiculous to pretend that cheating is not, like everyhing else these days, bigger, bolder, and more ingenious in its manifestations than it was 15 or 20 years ago.' I could not disagree more with this statement. In spite of the fact that the size of the University has multiplied over the last two decades, I am convinced that the Honor System is growing stronger, not weaker, for every year the University is receiving a better educated, more highly motivated group of freshmen. It would be most unfortunate if this one isolated case of cheating, greatly exaggerated in the press, were to obscure the progress that has been made in recent years, both with the Honor System and with the academic integrity of the University."

One Of Three Suspended In Open Honor Council Trials

One student was suspended, another given probation, and a third acquitted in three open trials held by the Men's Council January 29. All three had been charged with violation of the Honor Code.

A senior who pleaded not guilty to a charge of cheating on a final examination was suspended by the Council for one full academic semester.

A student who had been in the same class as the accused testified that he had seen the accused looking at another student's paper "five or six times" during the examination. A comparison of the two papers revealed four similar wrong answers with resultingly identical grades.

The instructor of the course stated that he had observed no cheating and presented statistics pertaining to the similar wrong answers on the two papers. On three of the questions, the same wrong answers had been given by a majority of the class members (95%, 75%, and 51% respectively).

The fourth answer involved an identically misspelled name.

After receiving his sentence from the Council, the student said he planned to appeal his case.

Plagiarism

A transfer student was convicted after pleading guilty to a charge of violation of the Honor Code. He was sentenced to one semester of definite probation for plagiarizing a book report.

The student was accused by his instructor, who stated that he thought the report was too well written to be the student's work. He said he had read several published reviews of the book in popular periodicals to verify his suspicion that the work was not that of the student.

The instructor said he found portions of the report were taken verbatim from the published works without being footnoted or given source references. His statement also recommended that the student be placed on probation rather than suspension from the University and noted that he had already received a grade of "F" on the course.

The Council brought out in testimony that the student had not known specifically what plagiarism is and that he had never taken an Honor System quiz.

No Watch

A freshman was acquitted of cheating on a mid-term examination. He had been accused by five members of his class.

The five students said the freshman was continually looking on another student's paper during the examination. The accused explained to the council that he was using the other student's paper to gauge his rate of progress on the quiz because he didn't have a watch.

The accused said there was no clock in the classroom and that his watch was being repaired. A Chapel Hill jewelry store confirmed that his watch was at the store on the date of the examination.

The freshman's professor said in a statement there was no evidence of cheating in comparison of the two papers.

In finding the student not guilty, the Council cautioned him against repeating the action.

Clemson Calm At Ending Of Segregation

By HARRY DeLUNG

The South Carolina town of Clemson was quiet and serene last Thursday while Negro Harvey Gantt ate lunch in the school cafeteria with hundreds of white students.

A few of the white students stared, and several went over to talk with Gantt after he sat down.

There were no police evident, and no one yelled or jeered at the solitary colored boy.

The atmosphere was normal, and education proceded as usual in the last southern state to lower its racial segregation barrier in public education (Alabama did so briefly in 1954).

The situation hardly resembled the violence and bloodshed at the University of Mississippi last September. "The difference is good leadership in the state, the college, and the trustees," said the vice president of the Clemson student body, Preston Earle.

Clemson student government officers took an active stand in the recent de-segregation which was in marked contrast to the apathy among student leaders at "Ole Miss."

Plainclothes Cops

Special I.D. cards were carried by the student government officers which gave them authority to act to prevent demonstrations. State Police are stationed around the campus to keep out "troublemakers." Only plainclothesmen of the State Law Enforcement Division (SLED) and the normal college personnel are on campus.

According to Earle and Hal Littleton, a former member of the Student Senate, many of the students resent the presence of the SLED men because it implies that violence is expected.

Earle said he felt the crisis was not over (Thursday). "We will constantly have to be on the watch for trouble."

The two students agreed that the campus chapter of the Young Americans for Freedom (YAF) was the only institutionalized hotbed of strong segregationist feeling. There is no racially moderate organization, as such.

The Clemson student newspaper ran a personality story on Gantt before he was admitted, and printed letters from students with varying opinions. Earle recalled "only one letter that was radically pro-segregationist."

According to the two, the administration would probably prohibit any sort of demonstration, peaceful or otherwise. None have been attempted.

Second Negro Denied Entry At Ole Miss

HATTISBURG, Miss. (UPI) — Dewey Roosevelt Greene Jr. — seeking to follow the trail blazed by James H. Meredith — told a federal court here Monday that he was denied admission to the University of Mississippi because he is a Negro.

Registrar Robert Ellis contradicted Greene's testimony and said the 22-year-old would-be transfer student was turned down because he is not qualified to enter "Ole Miss."

"Race has no bearing in this matter," Ellis said.

The testimony was given before U. S. District Judge Sidney Mize about the time that Meredith was beginning his second semester at the school.

In contrast to the bloody rioting that marked the beginning of Meredith's first semester, the campus was quiet Monday.

Greene's attorneys asked that he be admitted immediately. They said he "could not sit and fester" while the courts decide his case.

The attorneys also asked a contempt of court citation against Ellis. They claim that in rejecting Greene, Ellis violated an injunction against discrimination issued in the Meredith case.

Mize refused a request that Ellis be taken into custody immediately.

Ellis later testified that Greene was refused admission because he was attempting to transfer from a non-accredited school, Mississippi Vocational College for Negroes.

Ellis said a policy against such transfers was adopted at "Ole Miss" two years ago and since then about 200 applicants have been rejected under the policy.

The registrar, who was a defendant in Meredith's suit, said he does not discriminate. "I am under a court order that is very specific in this matter," said Ellis.

Mize, of Biloxi, Miss., is the judge who heard Meredith's suit. He first ruled against Meredith but later ordered him admitted on instructions from the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

UNC Makes Ready For Flu Epidemic

By Hugh Stevens

"We are hoping that Asian Flu will not come, but if it does, we will be ready for it," Dean Charles Henderson said yesterday about the possibility of an influenza epidemic on the UNC campus. "We are just making preparations for a situation that might well develop."

"We don't expect the worse," said Dr. Robert Lindsay of the UNC Infirmary.

Dr. Lindsay and Dean Henderson both emphasized in an interview yesterday that there is no reason for panic on the part of students.

"It is normal to have an upswing in respiratory diseases in the infirmary after semester break," said Dr. Lindsay. "Students go to many areas and are exposed to a variety of ailments that are contacted by other students. But I have not admitted a single respiratory case today."

Dean Henderson commented on the proposed plan to keep flu-stricken students in their rooms and feed them through the facilities of Lenoir Hall.

"We will use this plan only if necessary," he said. "The purpose of such a plan is to relieve crowding in the infirmary and give students the bed rest needed to recover from the flu."

Dr. Lindsay said that the plan could be used because the best treatment for the disease is "bed rest, aspirin, and the average student's strong constitution."

Under the plan, students would be confined to bed in their dorms or fraternity houses, where teams of doctors from the infirmary would make periodic checks.

"With such care, the normal case of influenza should run its course in about three or four days," said Dr. Lindsay. "The prime concern of the doctors will be finding and treating any complications of the disease."

Dean Henderson and Dr. Lindsay declined to speculate on the possible extent of the disease on the campus. Dean Henderson stated in his advisory to the faculty that "the likelihood of an epidemic is sufficient to take preliminary countermeasures." But both men emphasized that an "epidemic" might not occur at all.

Dr. Lindsay listed some precautions that students can take.

"It is probably too late for most students to take the full series of flue shots before being exposed," he said, "but a single inoculation will lessen considerably the severity of the disease."

He also advised students to get plenty of rest and to avoid any undue exposure. He stated that a normally strong resistance is important in avoiding the disease.

Dr. Lindsay declined to name any specific symptoms of Asian Influenza, as it is a difficult disease to diagnose.

"Generally speaking," he said, "a student who is sicker than he would normally expect to be with a cold may well have flu, and should take proper precautions. The disease itself is not too dangerous, but some complications may arise which can be severe."

Both Dean Henderson and Dr. Lindsay urged all students to take precautions to avoid the disease and to get well if they get it. "This situation may never develop into anything severe," said Dean Henderson, "but we will need the cooperation of the students if it is to go smoothly."

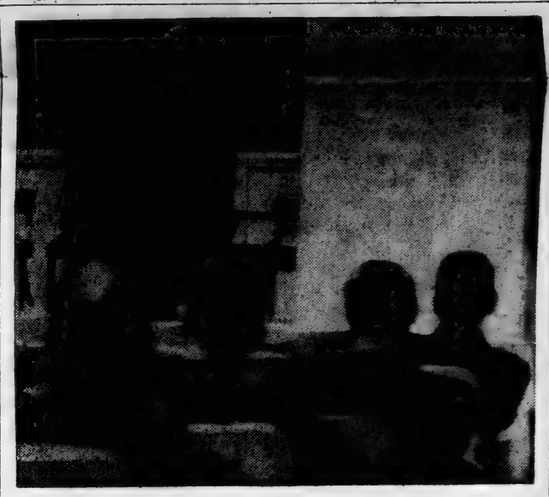
Dean Of Women Will Meet With Seniors

Dr. Katherine Kennedy Carmichael, Dean of Women, will visit the women's residences at 11 p.m. in order to meet briefly with graduating seniors. She will observe the following schedule:

McIver, Tuesday, February 5; Spencer, Wednesday; Whitehead, Thursday; School of Nursing, Monday, February 11; Cobb (East and West), Tuesday.

Alpha Delta Pi, Wednesday, February 13; Chi Omega, Monday; Delta Delta Delta, Tuesday; Kappa Delta, Wednesday; Pi Beta Phi, Monday, February 25; Kappa Kappa Gamma, Tuesday; Alpha Gamma Delta, Wednesday.

UP Forms New Committees For Spring



The University Party will form three new committees to write the spring platform, conduct campus opinion-polls, and run the spring membership drive.

UP Chairman Mike Chanin said yesterday that all interested students were encouraged to apply for the new committees in the Student Government Offices in Graham Memorial.

The Platform Committee will be aided by the Poll Committee and the already-existing UP Grievance Committee. "By going to the students and finding out what they want, we hope to produce a challenging platform for our candidates to run on this spring," Chanin said.

A poll was conducted by the Party at last Saturday's basketball game concerning student opinion on such issues as the Dixie Classic and the scheduling of athletic events. The results of this and the later polls of the new committee will be made available to the public.

The Grievance Committee, which has been meeting in men's dorms since December, will act as a "traveling platform committee," according to Chanin. He added, "We expect this committee to broaden its attention to cover women's dorms and fraternities this month."

Woodward Says 2 Movements Collide

The head-on collision of two movements in the South, the Birchites and the non-violent student demonstrators, spearheaded the crisis of academic freedom in the South, according to historian Dr. C. Vann Woodward. Dr. Woodward spoke on "Academic Freedom in the South" to the University of North Carolina chapter of the American Association of University Professors Thursday night, January 17.

Included in the Birchite movement are the White Citizens Councils and the Ku Kluxers, said Dr. Woodward, who is Sterling Professor of History at Yale University. He said that the other movement, the non-violent student demonstrators, is composed mainly of Negro students.

Dr. Woodward said, "When these elements did come together, it was inevitable that something was going to happen." He said that the South's crisis of academic freedom, which began in the late fifties, reached "somewhat of a peak" during the winter of 1961-62.

"There is and has been for sometime a real crisis in the lower South of academic freedom," he said. "Some of the colleges are still in bad shape," he said. He added that the South has not always come off worse than other parts of the country, and traced infringements of academic freedom which struck academicians in the North during the McCarthy era.

Dr. Woodward based his remarks on academic freedom in the South from what he observed during a three-month trip through the states of Tennessee, Alabama, Missisippi, Louisiana, and Texas last winter. At that time, he said that he witnessed the two movements in action. "It was a rare experience to witness these two movements in action. I fancy it gave me some insight into the tensions and strange political behavior of somewhat a century ago."

Dr. Woodward said that mainly the state colleges bear a heavy proportion of the crisis. The state colleges have a peculiar set of problems to be reckoned with. The Negro demonstrators have been mainly recruited from these colleges and that around these locales the suspicions of the White Citizens Councils center. The reprisals are therefore directed against these colleges.

Dr. Woodward said that one of the worst forms of infringements of academic freedom is the legislative committee investigation. All of the cases of infringement do not get reported in the press or come to the attention of the AAUP. Forms of infringements Dr. Woodward cited included "silently blocked" courses of professors, delayed promotions of professors, and cancelled research grants.

US Annoyance Doctored By Adenauer

BONN (UPI)—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer met Monday with U. S. Ambassador Walter C. Dowling to try to ease American annoyance at British exclusion from the European market and formation of the Paris-Bonn axis.

Students demonstrated against France in both Bonn and Munich in a symbol of the political turmoil into which Europe was thrown by the two actions. The Soviet Union accused France of trying to extend the axis to Madrid and warned it would heighten international tension.

In Madrid, Gen. Charles Ailleret, chief of the French defense staff, held meetings with top-ranking Spanish military leaders to seek closer military cooperation. He told newsmen he talks were going well though Spain was reported cool to the idea of a Madrid-Paris-Bonn alliance.

The European parliament was meeting in Strasbourg, France, for what was expected to be a stormy session. The parliament is made up of Common Market countries and the delegates of five of them—West Germany, Italy, Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg—were aligned solidly against President Charles de Gaulle.

Campus Briefs

Positions Open In Student Secretariat

STUDENT GOVERNMENT SECRETARIAT

Students interested in filling vacancies in the Secretariat should come by the Student Government Office in GM before Feb. 13 and see Judy Clark.

ATTENTION ALL BOTANY STUDENTS

All Botany courses scheduled to meet in Coker Hall will meet in 101 Davie Hall instead.

OUTING CLUB

The Outing Club will meet tonight at 7 in room 302, Woollen Gym. Plans for the Carolina Open Archery Tournament will be completed.

UNC CONCERT BAND

Students interested in joining the UNC Concert Band should contact Dr. Herbert Fred, director of bands, room 110 in Hill Hall, sometime during the current week. The first rehearsal will be held this afternoon at 4:30 in the new rehearsal room in Hill Hall. Prospective members are invited to attend this rehearsal.

PHILOLOGICAL CLUB

Dr. James A. Castaneda, a visiting professor in the Department of Romance Languages will speak at a meeting of the Philological Club at 7:45 p.m., in the Faculty Lounge of the Morehead Planetarium on "Lope de Vega and Gongora."

GM PUBLICITY COMMITTEE

The GM Publicity Committee will meet at 7:30 in the Grail Room.

WOMEN'S RESIDENCE COUNCIL

The WRC will meet tonight at 6:30 in the Grail Room. All members must attend.

There will be a business meeting of the Chem Fems Wednesday night at 8, 101 Daniels Road.

VETERANS

Veterans taking education or training courses under the Korean GI Bill are reminded by the Veterans Administration that they may have to "cram" of double up classes to reach their goal as the deadline for such courses is now only two years away.

Congress has set January 31, 1965, as the cut-off date for the Korean readjustment program of education and training for veterans without service-connected disabilities.

Korean veterans with service-connected disabilities come under a different program and have no deadline.

UNIVERSITY CHORUS REHEASALS

The University Chorus will begin rehearsals this Friday at 4:30 p.m. in the Choral Rehearsal Room of Hill Hall. Director Wilton Mason announces that this group will prepare for a performance of Dvorak's Songs of Nature and a concert version of Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana, to be given later this spring with soloists and the University Symphony Orchestra.

AUCTION COMMITTEE

There will be a meeting of the campus chest auction committee Wed. at 4:30 in the campus chest office.

APO BOOK EXCHANGE

Alpha Phi Omega is operating a book exchange in Y-Court thru Feb. 11 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Students can set there own prices on used texts—APO will keep 10% of the sale price, and the rest is yours.

The APO Book Exchange will be closed Feb. 9th at 1 p.m. and Feb. 10th all day.

COSMOPOLITAN CLUB

The Cosmopolitan Club will give a semi-formal Valentine Masquerade Ball on Feb. 9 from 8-12 p.m. at the Chapel Hill Country Club.

Tickets are $2.50 per couple and may be obtained by calling Maria Elena Bravo at 968-9132. Tickets are limited.

If The Shoe Fits, Wear It

About the second or third day of last semester's finals rumors began circulating that there had been massive cheating during the exam given for Archeology 85, Archeology of the Bible, taught by Dr. J. P. Harland. The rumors were obviously and typically swept up and blown out of proportion.

There have been, in fact, only seven reported instances of cheating on said exam, and one of the accused students was found innocent. However, various communications media throughout the State picked up the rumors and in short time practically everyone in North Carolina was looking to the University for further developments on a real "juicy" issue.

Well, they got their developments. The trouble was the "developments" were none too sensational, so the issue immediately slithered elsewhere. Consequently both Dr. Harland and the Chairman of the Men's Honor Council, Walter Dellinger, suffered some unsought and unnecessary bad publicity.

One aspect of the mess that upsets us is the manner in which statements by and about Chairman Dellinger have been tossed around. He was quoted, rather misquoted, as having said that Dr. Harland's course attracted the lowest element in the University. That is not true. At any rate, Dellinger never made such a statement.

It has been a case of misconstrued implications and misunderstood intentions. When Dellinger made his statement about courses which attract the "lowest element," he was speaking of crip courses in general. He was speaking of courses which continually make his job tougher, courses which create and foster a lax academic atmosphere which in turn becomes a breeding ground for cheating.

We feel that Dellinger has a legitimate gripe. There certainly are courses in this University that attract some of the "lowest element" of the student body. It may be a shame that this statement was picked up in conjunction with the Archeology 85 cheating incident, but nevertheless, it appears to be a statement about which one might say: If the shoe fits, wear it.

* * *

And along these lines, we cannot resist a bit of elaboration.

Various papers throughout the State carried stories about the cheating incident and made the misconstrued statement by Dellinger the focal point of all consideration. Statements were made, condescending editorials were written, and clever apitaphs were composed for "poor, young, uninformed Dellinger."

Apparently, everyone worth his sale has taken a "Harland course," and everyone leaped to the defense of an "intellectual gremlin" who had really never been attacked.

Now we do not propose an attack, indeed, we have never taken a "Harland course," and we would not recognize much of that "lowest element" if we sat next to it all semester. However, we would like to put forth a few observations to those industrious souls who so viciously disposed of Chairman Dellinger.

If you were to be sitting in any University living unit — Dorm or Fraternity, it makes little difference—around the close or beginning of a semester, you would be apt to hear a great deal of discussion on various courses. Students are concerned with the courses they have just finished and they are concerned with what courses they should take during the approaching semester. They want to take interesting courses and they want to take courses which they can pass. It is the same everywhere, always; students are students.

Well then, if a student is down quality points, or if he just wants to pick up a few good grades, the conversation usually manages to get around to Archeology courses. This, in itself, obviously, says nothing. It is simply a statement of fact.

Since the ruckus arose, we have not encountered a single student who does not look upon certain Archeology courses as so called "good bets". Some crass souls, and we've encountered a few, even go so far as to use the term "crip." This may be a term misused or misconstrued, we are not sure. But one thing for sure, it is a term well known, a term loaded with "student insight."

Certainly, we would admit that "sometimes courses are 'easy' because the teacher is interesting;" indeed, we have never encountered a student who did not think that Dr. Harland was interesting. He is one of the most interesting and interested professors on this campus. He apparently takes an interest in his students that scores of other University professors would do well to emulate.

Quite often students will do their best work for professors who show that they are just the slightest bit interested in the student. We all appreciate being treated with some respect. Whether it is earned or not, we will usually respond favorably to it. And this, in itself, may account for the unusual popularity of the "Harland course." Again, we do not know. Does anyone?

There are innumerable reasons why particular courses are "interesting," or for that matter, "crip."

Esquire magazine, in its now-famous "expose" chose to ignore Archeology as a crip, and instead listed Dramatic Art 30 and Classics 31 as the "crips" of UNC. So who's to say?

And surely, it would almost seem that of those individuals who were so quick with their condemnation of Dellinger and their defense of Archeology 85 that: "The lady doth protest too much, methinks." (CW)

"—But Too Cold To Sustain Life As We Know It"

Editor's Role— By Former DTHer

By ROLFE NEILL
Coral Gables (Fla.) Times

(Eds. Note: Rolfe Neill is a UNC graduate and 1953-54 editor of the Daily Tar Heel. He is now editor of the Coral Gables Times.)

Casual acquaintance of ours stopped us on Ponce the other morning to talk about, of all things, newspapers. He has some pretty decided views, it turned out, perhaps qualifying him, if for nothing else, to be an editor.

What moved us most was this query, "How do you think you'll ever be popular if you write things like that?" Later in that reflective spot where editors think things through (the cluttered office, interrupted by phone calls, press agents, staff problems and the body public), we tried to put together a paragraph or two on just what we think a newspaper and its editors are, or at least should be. Herewith:

A newspaper has only two jobs, to print the news in its news columns and to make vigorous, intelligent comment upon the news on its editorial page. It should not go about its task with the idea of making friends, although if its job is done well it will inevitably make many friends.

A newspaper should listen patiently to all its critics, searching their comments, however bitter they may be, for the still, small messages of truth whereby even our enemies show us the higher way.

We should be chary of praise for it is deadening to the soul, though pleasing to the ego. Discount much of what our friends tell us, though acknowledging their thoughtfulness.

Always we must be uncomfortable with ourselves. Have we done our best? What have we left undone or incomplete? Whom have we slighted, by omission or commission? How can we give the reader a better paper than he received last issue?

We must be guided by an affection for the community we serve. We must help to improve it. We must be sympathetic without allowing our tolerance to erode our judgment. We must dissent for reasons of principle but never for perverseness.

We must be fair, which means the occasional eating of crow. As a business, we must be economically strong yet we must risk offense to some of our customers in order to do our job.

Intimidation we cannot countenance. Courage we must have. Humility we must remind ourselves to have more of, for the man with a printing press is pretty near to a supreme judge but with no more than his ordinary share of the brains meted out in the Natural distribution of matter.

And with it all, a generous mixture of humor to laugh at ourselves. Serious business should never be conducted by humorless people.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel will print letters of opinion from any member of the University community. Letter should be typewritten and double-spaced, and free of libel or slander. Letters should be turned in to DTH offices, second floor of Graham Memorial, at least three days before publication is desired. Shorter letters will be given priority.

The Carolina Coloring Book: Fun And Games

Because of the decreasing age of incoming freshmen, the Carolina Information Service has decided to publish a new student handbook. It will be called: "The Carolina Coloring Book."

Here are come extracts from the text :

"Welcome to your new school. It is called Carolina. It is such a big place that you will need help understanding all of it. This book will help you . . .

"First, meet the man who runs our nice, big school. Isn't he nice looking. He looks just like you: a nice little boy. Some people say he even acts like you, too. Why is he scratching his head? He has a problem. See the big list of names. He does not understand them. He is thinking "what's in a name?" Poor Willie, he does not know the answer. Leave him blank. . . .

"See the big man. Everyone at Carolina likes him, especially if he gives them money. He has lots of money and likes to give it away. Those people who get his money like him so much that they call him "Uncle." But he is really not their uncle at all. Color him green. See all the happy students around him. They are calling him "Uncle." Color thei rnoses burnt umber. . . .

"Now meet your new student friends. Aren't they nice? Look isn't that funny? They all dress alike. Don't worry, you just be here a year and you will dress like them, too. Color their shoes, Weejuns; shirts, Gant; and shave lotion, English Leather. What? You say they aren't wearing socks. That's right. No socks. When you come to college you want to be different, to be an individual, so nobody wears socks. Isn't that wonderful? Everybody is an individual just alike. . . .

Color These:

"Uncle"

A Jock

Frat Man

Honor

A Reader

Look here are some more students. Aren't they cute? Well, at least they think they are. These are called "co-eds." They are almost like real girls, except they are more honest and sincere. They come here and face the biggest challenge of their lives: finding a husband. Sometimes they look like indians. They paint their faces up. Color them like a big chief. . . .

These are fraternity brothers. No, they aren't really brothers. They just say that because they live and play together in houses. They called the place they live "The House." Isn't that wonderful. College is full of such deep thought. They are getting ready for a party. No, it is not a costume party. It is a rush party. Color the masks with sincereity and honesty. . . .

Oh, here comes another campus figure. He is called a "jock." He is a professional student. He gets paid to come here and play with "jocks" from other schools. Isn't school wonderful: getting paid to play. Color him with Lifeboy. . . .

While at Carolina, you will learn about student groups. They are lots of fun. It is fun to be a student leader and help your school. It is almost as much fun as the Mickey Mouse Club back home . . .

See the boy with the scissors in his hands. He is the president of all the students. He has just been cutting up the student newspaper. Sometimes he tells the student editors he does not approve of their stories and they should cut them out of the paper. He has just had fun working for the students, cutting out a story from the Bible. Don't color him. Cut him out. The student newspaper is written by liberal students. Color it pink. Why? Ask that man peeking over everybody's shoulder. He knows. He is the American Legion. Color him true blue. . . .

See all the students around the fire. No, this is not a pep rally. This is an honor council trial. They are burning the evidence. They do not need it. They are too smart. They are college students — and besides they have to keep the show going. See the funny bumps under their shirts. These are daggers. They give them to students. The administration likes these students because they give away so many daggers. The administration is afraid it would get its hands bloody if it gave them away. See the girl lying in front of the fire. She was just given a present. The honor council gave her a dagger. It was a surprise present. They gave it to her in the back. Color this one as you want to. There are no rules here . . .

Look at the funny building. It is just half a building. It is our new student union. Carolina is not big enough to have a whole one yet, but we take anything we can get. Color it cheap . . .

There are two funny things at Carolina. They are ghosts. Most people here don't believe in ghosts except these two. They are very real to most Carolina folks. Isn't that funny? Isn't school exciting? One of the ghosts is named Tom. He went to Carolina once and wrote a book about it. Nobody liked Tom much when he was here. But they like him now and wish he was back. Some people call Tom "creativity." He is gone, but do not tell them. Some of them still think he is here.

The other ghost is named "Choo-Choo." He lives here just part of the time. He lives down in the stadium in the woods. It is funny about Choo-Choo. They all know he is really not there, but they go down to the stadium Saturday afternoons in the fall, hoping he will return. He has not come back yet. Some say he will never return, but that will not stop them. They believe in Choo-Choo and expect to see him come back — some day. Color both Tom and Choo-Choo gone . . .

This is the last page. It is blank. This creativity at Carolina. Look hard, maybe you will see it. Some people say it is here. It is very hard to find. . . .

. . . By Any Other Name

By ERNEST STEPP

Poor college students at the University of North Carolina, North Carolina State and Woman's College, they are having problems with the name change issue. It seems that if the schools are renamed the University of North Carolina at . . . Chapel Hill, Raleigh and Greensboro, no one will know what to call the schools.

Actually the problem is very simple and only a slight change in the present plan needs to be made. Instead of putting the names of the city at the end of the long phrase put them in front.

The University of North Carolina would become the Chapel Hill University of North Carolina. State would become the Raleigh University of North Carolina and Woman's College would be the Greensboro University of North Carolina.

The the students at Chapel Hill would go to CHUNC (pronounced chunk), the engineers at Raleigh would go to RUNC (pronounced runk) and the pretty lassies at Greensboro would go to GUNK (pronounced gunk).

Frankly, the whole name change plan is nothing but BUNC (pronounced bunk).

EXCHANGE SCHOLARSHIPS

Applications forms for two exchange scholarships to be awarded for study in 1963-64 at the University in Goettingen, Germany, are now available. They may be obtained at GM or at the YMCA. The deadline for returning these forms is Feb. 15.

Scott, Smithson Get Med Scholarships

Two UNC students have been awarded Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation Scholarships which will support six years of medical education.

John Layne Scott of Brown Summit and William Anthony Smithson of Winston-Salem are among eight college seniors from North Carolina who have been named recipients of the scholarships. They will enter the Bowman Gray School of Medicine next September.

The scholarships, ranging in size from $2,400 to $4,800 per year, provide for the cost of four years of medical school and for two years of hospital or postgraduate training.

Selection of the scholars is made by the medical school committee on admissions on the basis of character, scholarship, potential as a physician and financial need.

Cincinnati Remains On Top

NEW YORK (UPI)— Cincinnati's streaking Bearcats, unbeaten in 35 straight games, were the unanimous choice as the nation's No. 1 major college basketball team for the seventh straight week in the United Press International board of coaches ratings.

Cincinnati added victories over Drake and St. Louis last week to run its season record to 17-0. That earned the Bearcats the top vote of all 35 coaches who comprise the UPI rating board.

Loyola of Chicago, keeping pace with the Bearcats but seemingly unable to supplant them in the top spot, also scored two wins last week for a 20-0 record. It earned the Ramblers the No. 2 spot for the seventh consecutive week.

Duke 15-2, the Atlantic Coast Conference leader, held onto third place; Illinois (12-2), which tops the Big Ten Conference, remained fourth; Arizona State U. (16-2), again was fifth, and Georgia Tech (16-1), tops in the Southeastern Conference, held onto sixth.

In the only changes of the week among the top 10, Colorado (12-3) and Stanford (12-4) swapped places with the Buffaloes taking over seventh place; Mississippi State (14-4), a half-game behind Georgia Tech in the SEC race, advanced from 11th to ninth, and Oregon State (12-4) slipped from ninth to 10th.

Wichita, 10th a week ago, headed the second 10 grouping this week. Utah State was 12th; UCLA was 13th; Ohio State, the national champion the past two seasons, was 14th; Colorado State U. was 15th; Notre Dame and Texas tied for 16th; DePaul was 18th, and Auburn and West Virginia tied for 19th.

Mental Health Program Is Urged By JFK

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy asked Congress Tuesday to approve radical new plans to prevent mental retardation and to cut the nation's mental cases in half within the next 10 to 20 years.

The President, whose sister Rosemary is under care for a mental handicap, asked specifically for creation of hundreds of comprehensive community mental health centers throughout the nation.

The plan would require Congress to approve spending $31.3 million this session. With the participation of states, the bill would run into hundreds of millions of dollars.

First Congressional reaction to the Kennedy messsage was warm. Speaker John W. McCormack, D-Mass., said it "points the way for a compassionate people to extend a helping hand to those who must depend so much on their fellow men."

Sen. Ralph Yarborough, D-Tex., said the message was "timely," coming when a "new national approach is badly needed." He commended Kennedy for filling a "great void of national friendship" in the field of mental health.

Mindful of Expenses

The President said he was mindful of the need to hold down expenses on new programs at a time when he was asking for tax cuts and deficits in his $98.8 billion budget.

But Kennedy said "for too long the shabby treatment of the many millions of the mentally disabled in custodial institutions and many millions more now in communities needing help has been justified on grounds of inadequate funds, further studies and future promises."

"We can proscrastinate no more," Kennedy said.

The depth of Kennedy's feeling about mental health obviously stemmed partly from the fact that he has a sister who has long been under private care for a mental handicap suffered at birth.

He said many mental hospitals and homes are so understaffed, unpleasant and overcrowded that "death too often provided the only firm hope of release" for the mentally ill.

But now, Kennedy said, new knowledge and drugs "make it possible for most of the mentally ill to be successfully and quickly treated in their own communities."

He said the community health centers, based for instance in local general hospitals, would "return mental health care to the mainstream of American medicine." They will allow present community mental services to be focused on the problem and permit patients to be treated in their own environment, he said.

Proposed Four Bills

Kennedy proposed four pieces of new legislation for this session of Congress.

1. Grants to the states beginning in fiscal 1965 for establishment of comprehensive community mental health centers with the federal government providing from 45 to 75 per cent of the project costs and short-term grants for initial staffing costs. The federal government would provide up to 75 per cent of costs in early months and phase

Rowan Is Winner Of YRC Trophy For Leadership

The Young Republican Club presented its first campus leadership trophy to Ford Rowan last night at a regular meeting in the Law School Courtroom.

Bud Broome, Y.R.C. President, noted that the award would be given annually for "outstanding campus leadership in the Republican tradition." He said, "Ford Rowan has worked hard to strengthen local government around campus; for example, in the dorms."

"In addition, Rowan has worked with G.M. to present discussions on current topics," Broome added.

In receiving the award, Rowan expressed his appreciation and commended the Y.R.C. for "stimulating political thought among students, and providing an outlet for non-extremist action."

After the presentation delegates were elected to represent Carolina at the State Young Republican Convention to be held this weekend in Winston-Salem. A resolution will be presented by UNC favoring a broad-based tax on tobacco.

Pearsall Group Recommends 5-Part Plan For University

By VANCE BARRON

The UNC Board of Trustees has unanimously accepted the recommendations of the Pearsall Committee for making changes in the name and scope of the Consolidated University and providing for a program of future expansion.

The Pearsall Committee, of the UNC Board of Trustees, made its report to the trustees in a special meeting of January 25, 1963. The committee was set up in order to study the findings of Governor Sanford's special Commission on Education Beyond the High School.

The recommendations of the Pearsall Committee were set forth in a five-point program, providing for a new statutory definition of the Consolidated University as the primary state-supported educational institution, the establishment of coeducation on all campuses of the University, the authorization of the Board of Trustees to expand the University to include a community college system, the establishment of a degree program in liberal arts at State College, and the formal designation of all units of the Consolidated University as branches of the single University of North Carolina. Under the last provision State College is to be designated "North Carolina State, The University of North Carolina at Raleigh."

Of the five recommendations, three must be approved by the General Assembly. These are change of statutory definition, the establishment of additional campuses, and the name changes of the units of the Consolidated University. The latter proposal is the most controversial and represents a compromise from the original proposal to designate State College as the "University of North Carolina at Raleigh." Opponents of that designation, mostly alumni and students, wanted instead the name, "North Carolina State University." According to the Pearsall report, the new names express the "spirit of unity and common purpose on the three campuses."

President Friday in his statement before the Trustees said the main purpose of the program was to "multiply our educational offerings at the level of general undergraduate training while observing progressive enlargement of professional and graduate education within the University structure." He contrasted the Committee's recommendations with the Consolidation Act of 1931, stating that the Consolidation Act was an attempt to "avoid duplication" in the face of limited financial resources. The challenge to the University of today in a growing economy and poplation, he said, is to "duplicate" and "expand educational opportunities for the people of the state.

First, a new statutory definition of the University that would establish the University as the "primary state institution of academic research and the only one authorized to award the doctor's degree" was recommended for enactment by the General Assembly. This definition was stated to be a "conditional precedent" to all other recommended changes.

Second, the committee recommended that co-education be established on all campuses of the University. The Committee felt that this step was necessary, for such "restrictions are inconsistent with the concept of a modern university." Male day students are at present attending Woman's College in Greensboro and dormitory space for male students is planned, though not for the "immediate future." The University at Chapel Hill will admit limited numbers of freshman and sophomore women, especially in programs in fine arts and music where such limitations prevent "full utilization of the educational resources." Both institutions at Chapel Hill and Raleigh will be opened more widely to women students and commuter students.

Third, the Committee recommended the expansion of the existing community colleges at Wilmington, Charlotte and Asheville into four-year institutions and "commended" the University to support fully the development of these schools to "maximum usefulness." The Committee strongly urged the authorization of a degree program in the liberal arts at the Raleigh campus, stating that "the University of North Carolina (must) take steps to see that on each of its campuses opportunities are made available to provide the breadth of educational experience consistent with the standards of the University."

Fourth, the Committee recommended that the statutes be amended to authorize the Board of Trustees to establish aditional units of the University on new campuses" when careful study warrants such actions." Such a study was urged as soon as legislative authorization could be obtained.

Finally, the Committee recommended that one name be adopted for the single University of North Carolina with its three campuses. Under this proposal, still to be approved by the General Assembly, the three institutions would be called the "University of North Carolina at Greensboro," the "University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill," and "North Carolina State, the University of North Carolina at Raleigh."

The recommendations were all initiated by the administration of the University, with the exception of the proposed establishment of new campuses for the University.

Low Fat Diet Proves Fatal For Russian

MOSCOW (UPI)—Radio Moscow reported Tuesday that the director and manager of a restaurant in Sverdlovsk had been sentenced to death by firing squad for not putting the required amount of fat into meat pies. The men were identified only as Akakiyev, the director, and Tereminov, the manager of the Sverdlovsk Railway Station Hotel. It said 55 accomplices received prison terms of up to 15 years.

The radio said Akakiyev invented an automatic fryer which saved two or three grams of fat on each pie. The savings were not passed on to the customers but were shared by Akakiyev and his accomplices. Akakiyev pocketed more than $400 a month, it said.

Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, spiritual fathers of the Soviet Union, were strongly opposed to capital punishment but executions are carried out frequently now, with about half of the victims Jews.

The death sentence is on Soviet statute books for a number of crimes, including aggravated murder and rape but executions for these crimes seldom are publicized. But the Soviet Union reports death sentences and executions for persons who have been convicted of bribe taking, embezzlement and theft. These are defined as economic crimes against the state.

In the past three weeks, death sentences have been reported for men who embezzled or stole sums ranging from $100,000 to $300,000. A typical case came last month when the supreme court of Moldavis sentenced to death the chief of a sewing shop for plungering.

A Western expert who has kept count of the announcements in the Soviet press said 136 persons were sentenced to death in the 12 months ending Dec. 31, 1962. He estimated the actual total might be 50 per cent higher.

Death by shooting for economic crimes were reinstituted in May, 1961. Since the revolution, capital punishment decrees have been amended many times but except for about three years, executions have been a part of Soviet life.

Soviet authorities, often sensitive to foreign criticism for extending capital punishment to what the West considers non-capital crimes, explains it by saying such economic and anti-social acts undermine the existence of the state.

Proxy Pickups Of BB Ducats Disallowed

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

"Students were scalping tickets all over campus, and in general were abusing the privilege, so we had to go back to our old plan."

Those were the words of Vernon Crook, Business Manager of Athletics, as he revealed yesterday that students will no longer be allowed to carry other students' ID cards to the gym to pick up basketball tickets for them.

Crook said that the Department of Athletics had started the experimental plan this year because they had had numerous requests from fraternities who wanted to sit in a group at the game. They argued that they would be able to support and cheer the team on better if they were sitting together.

Crook pointed out that if the Athletic Dept. let fraternities do this, then they would be obligated to let the dormitories do it too.

"So, we tried this plan for a while, Crook said. "It was bad from the start, and it was awful for the Duke game.

"The Duke tickets went on sale at 8:30 a.m. and every one of them was gone by 10:35. That is the fastest I have ever seen them move, and it was because almost everyone was getting several additional tickets. One boy even presented 40 ID cards and we had no choice but to let him have the tickets."

Crook said there was "a tremendous number of complaints from students, faculty and townsfolk because of the lack of available tickets."

"The main reason we went back to the old plan was really to protect the student. It was the only thing we could do," he added.

Negotiations On Euromart Called Vital

BONN (UPI)—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, in a statement that appeared to clash directly with his ally President Charles de Gaulle, said Tuesday British Common Market membership must be "negotiated and concluded."

It was the second West German broadside against De Gaulle of the day. In Strasbourg, France, German Walter Hallstein, president of the Common Market, said the trade bloc must not be used as an instrument of anyone's national diplomacy.

In West Berlin, university students demonstrated against De Gaulle's rejection of Britain's bid to join the common market. About 1,500 students marched through the streets chanting "Europe is not seeking a new fuehrer." Students demonstrated Monday in Bonn and Munich.

The Soviet Union sharply attacked both France and West Germany for their recently concluded treaty of cooperation. Notes delivered to the French and German envoys in Moscow attacked the treaty in "very strong terms," especially the provisions for military cooperation.

McNamara Calls GOP Statement On Cuban Arms 'Irresponsible'

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The debate over the extent of the Soviet buildup in Cuba turned into a full political storm Tuesday with both Democrats and Republicans investigations to clear the air of charges and counter-charges.

Amid the battling, came a report that Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara told the House Armed Services Committee Monday that some recent Republican statements on the Russian buildup were "Irresponsible" and "disgraceful."

Indications were that President Kennedy would make a statement on the Cuban situation at his Thursday afternoon news conference.

In the face of Republican claims that the Pentagon was underestimating the extent of current Soviet military strength in Cuba, the White House said the situation had not changed since Jan. 24, the President's last news conference.

The President said then: "The best information we have is that one ship has arrived since the October crisis, which may have arms on it, possibly military cargo. But there has not been a military buildup in that sense of the equipment coming in from outside Cuba. There is no evidence that this ship carried any offensive weapons."

Press Secretary Pierre Salinger said Tuesday that "the situation has not changed since then."

This was in contrast to statements made by Sen. Kenneth B. Keating, R.-N.Y., and Sen. Strom Thurmond, D.-S.C., that the Pentagon has underestimated the Soviet buildup in its public disclosures.

Keating's statements brought a charge Tuesday from Rep. Samuel S. Stratton, D.-N.Y., that the senator "has been guilty of disgraceful irresponsibility in his frantic efforts to get headlines by pretending he knows more about what is going on in Cuba today than do the properly designated intelligenced agencies of our department of Defense."

Denounced Congressman

McNamara, similarly, was said to have angrily denounced the Cuban comments of some congressmen when he appeared before the House Committee Monday.

The storm over the buildup led Senate Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey to propose open Senate hearings. The Minnesota Democrat said administration critics really are questioning the competency of the Central Intelligence Agency.

He added that "the worst thing that can be done is to create uncertainty, doubt or suspicion" about the nation's defense situation.

A partisan debate raged for a half hour on the House floor. Rep. William E. Minshall, R.-Ohio, demanded a "full-scale House-Senate investigation" of the Bay of Pigs episode and of the whole United States intelligence picture.

He asked: "Are we going to resign ourselves forever to the presence of a pesthole of Soviet propaganda, subversion and infiltration just 90 miles from our shore."

Rep. J. Arthur Younger, R.-Calif., called for action to rescue Americans still held in Castro jails.

All-Frosh Dorm Plans Abandoned

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

The all-freshman dorm probably won't be used next year, according to the office of the Dean of Men.

Dallas Cameron, Assistant Dean of Men, said that the idea evidently was not a very good one.

"At first, just about everyone thought that the all-freshman dorm would turn out allright. We thought maybe the upperclassmen might have an adverse effect on incoming freshmen. But we see now that the upperclassmen actually act as a stabilizing factor toward the freshman."

At the present time, the Dean of Men and his assistants are making a survey to compare the all-freshman dorms, Ehringhaus and Grimes, with the other dorms where freshmen are grouped with upperclassmen.

"Everything will be taken into account," Cameron reported. "This includes grades, damage reports, observance of quiet hours—everything."

"There have been many varying opinions on the all-freshman dorm, but as it looks right now, we probably won't have them next year," Cameron said.

Ehringhaus President Ford Rowon said that Ehringhaus's program would have been "much improved" if upperclassmen had been present to "aid freshmen in adapting to a college community."

Hypnotist To Make Appearance Friday

Hypnotist Dr. John Kolisch will perform in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. Friday as the first event on Graham Memorial's spring slate.

Bob Rearden, president of GMAB, said "Mr. Kolisch is one of those scientists who can speak interestingly and clearly on a technical subject to a lay audience. One of the most entertaining features of his programs is the audience participation in practical demonstrations of hypnosis, self-hypnosis, mass-hypnosis, post hypnotic suggestion, feats of memory and other astounding experiments of the mind."

The program will be free to students and faculty.

Students Like Dixie Classic, UP Poll Shows

Students favored the return of the Dixie Classic in a poll conducted by the University Party at the Duke-Carolina game last Saturday. Eighty-seven per cent of those answering the questionnaire like the Classic.

Other questions asked by the UP poll concerned the scheduling of athletic events during the holidays and the method of using the ACC Tournament to select the ACC Basketball Champion. Sixty-three per cent of the students voted against holiday scheduling and 75 per cent voted against the ACC Tournament.

Poll Committee Chairman Gerry Grosball said that 1,500 questionnaires were distributed during the ball game and that this should represent a good cross-section of the campus.

He added, "We plan to continue to poll the campus on subjects of importance to the students. The information gathered will be made available to Student Government and will be used by the University Party in making up its platform. These polls are intended to improve the flow of ideas and opinions between the student body, the University Party, and Student Government."

Kennedy Said Close To Canadian Crisis

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy is keeping in close touch with the developing political crisis in Canada through contacts with the State Department and U.S. Embassy in Ottawa, the White House said Tuesday.

At the same time, informed sources reported that the United States would not be drawn any further into Canada's dispute over nuclear weapons even if the U.S. position should be distorted during a Canadian election campaign.

These sources said it was felt that a State Department statement last week laid down the U.S. position. The statement was issued because American officials thought this country's nuclear position had been misstated during a Canadain House of Commons debate.

Star Finds Rhinoceros Role Demands Quick Skin Change

By GORDON CLARK

There's a fellow here whose respect for the rhinoceros is pretty unshakable. He's actor John Crockett, and he must become one of the roaring, robust pachyderms in fifteen minutes flat every night. Crockett is playing Jean, the role that rocketed Zero Mostel to stardom on Broadway, in The Carolina Playmakers tour production of "Rhinoceros." The Eugene Ionesco satiric comedy will run at the Playmakers Theatre Feb. 13-17 before going to several North Carolina and Georgia cities.

This exhausting role isn't the kind that Crockett—or any other actor—plays very often, and it's bringing about some changes in his life. For one thing, he has to do physical exercises on stage, and this requires some outside practice.

"My wife—she's a former physical education teacher—has been teaching me how to do push-ups," Crockett says. "My stomach still drags a little, but I'm improving!"

A 31-year-old native of Washington, D. C., Crockett acted for two seasons in Equity stock at Ocean City, Md. There he played leading roles in "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" and "My Three Angels." In addition to numerous other performances, he played Nicely-Nicely Johnson in The Carolina Playmakers recent production of "Guys and Dolls." He played Horace Vandergelder in the group's tour production of "The Matchmaker" last year.

When asked if he used the "method" for his man-to-rhinoceros transformation in "Rhinoceros," Crockett answered: "No amount of method acting could make my skin turn green! No, the role has to be built on a pretty carefully-calculated technique."

Most of Crockett's acting experience has been in comedy. He's now trying to perfect his rhinoceros trumpeting for this role ,his last with the Playmakers. Crockett will receive his master's degree i drama this spring.

While a student at the University of Maryland, the versatile actor received the Hale Award for outstanding theatre work. Last season, his first with the UNC Playmakers, he received the Mask Award for his acting and theatre management.

Tickets for the Chapel Hill run of "Rhinoceros" will become available to the public Feb. 7 at the Playmakers business office (214 Abernethy Hall) and at Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $2 each.

Curtain time is 8:30 each evening, with an additional matinee performance on Sunday, Feb. 17, at 2:30 p.m.

Lean, Hungry Black Cat: From 'Cool' To Cold

James Baldwin, the self-described "tense, lean, abnormally ambitious, abnormally intelligent and hungry black cat," leaned — and leaned hard — on white America in a speech last month in Durham.

The famed Negro writer and propagandist expanded on his sometimes compelling, sometimes bothersome, but always urgent message, which goes something like, "The black man is bad off — but the white man is worse . . . and there's not much chance for the black man, and not a damn bit for the white . . ." His speech was in the spirit of his two books of essays, "Nobody Knows My Name" "the integration dispute has to do with political power and it has to do with sex. And this is a nation which knows very little about either" . . . "I remember myself as a little boy already so bitter about the pledge of allegiance that I could scarcely bring myself to say it, and never, never believed it" . . . "In exactly the same way that the South imagines that it "knows" the Negro, the North thinks it has set him free. Both camps are deluded") and "Notes of a Native Son" ("I was forced to admit something . . . that I hated and feared white people. This did not mean that I loved black people; on the contrary, I despised them, possibly because they failed to produce Rembrandt. In effect, I hated and feared the world.')

Baldwin has a manner, both in writing and speaking — sometimes shrill, strident, "today, HERE, NOW, wait no longer . . .", and at other times, full of assurance and a strong disdain for the very effort of "caring." His speech in Durham (he is scheduled to speak here in May) was spiced by this manner— making full understanding of this very important American writer more difficult.

Sponsored by the NAACP and CORE, Baldwin made clear his full support of the student non-violent protest movement and its national operations.

The parents of today's student generation "inculcated in their sons and daughters a sense of dignity and pride," Baldwin said. This youth has "never said 'yes, sir' or 'no sir' to anybody."

Baldwin spoke with the voice of the young—whether he be picketer or artist, educator or student — when he condemned the elders who say, "Go slow." "If we prefer to be 'safe,'" Baldwin said, "we've doomed ourselves and all of our children. It is a time to take great risks, because if we don't, I don't believe we have a future. And I'd hate to see so much beauty die . . ."

When his talk shifted to the national government, to the "distortions" of American history and the myths we have made, and to the total American culture, Baldwin wildly flourished his peculiar brand of defeatism. Be it resolved that nothing—or at least very little, is ever done for even remotely "good" reasons (Baldwin said the Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation decision was made "to assure the rest of the world that we were not racists." It had nothing "to do with the determination to bring about desegregation, or really to change"), and even if it looks as if some persons are behaving altruistically, no one will believe them (on the 1954 court decision—"Even if I'm wrong, that's the way all black people in the world read it . . ."), and there is no more hope for the future (Baldwin continued to link all "good" acts by whites as expatiation of guilt for long-ago nights with slave girls under the moon and magnolias—and, we are all, black and white, menaced by "the destruction and chaos" springing from centuries of unequal and unnatural man-to-slave, or man-to-inferior man relationships.)

* * *

Despite the words, which didn't always agree with each other after they have left Baldwin's mouth, what was he saying?—As the cool, not-of-this-world artist, (late of Paris) he says, in effect, "Man, you're all fouled up with sex and a dream of this America bit which never was—and there's nothing you can do about it; white men can't 'cause their motives are insincere and, if sincere, ridiculous; black men can't because their great-grandfathers were probably the same whites . . ." In his other personality Baldwin says, "The challenge is in the moment, the time is always now"—now, quick, before it's too late.

Baldwin is fascinated by the influence of sex on the race controversy—just as he is in sex in general ("the American Negro male is kind of a walking phallic symbol" . . . "there are two sexes, which fact has given the world most of its beauty, cost it not a little of its anguish, and contains the hope and glory of the world")—but he seems to carry the sex bit past where sociologists and psychiatrists admit its influence—certainly some sex guilt lingers from ante-bellum days, but must this guilt be constantly paid for and irrevocably existent?

Baldwin's message of urgency mixed with despair, immediacy in a context where the moment is of great consequence, left his audience, more than anything else, with a heightened awareness of their own usefulness.

But to some, the words were more positive—to a white girl who wanted to know what she could do for the "Negro integration movement," Baldwin said, in effect, "Ask not what you can do for us, but ask what you can do for yourself" —all Americans suffer by the racial barriers. Only once does the cool, unconcerned Baldwin merge with the strident voice for "now!" on the segregation dispute itself: "This is a criminally frivolous dispute, absolutely unworthy of this nation; and it is being carried on, in complete bad faith, by completely uneducated people." Meaning Of The University Revisited

(Eds. Note: the following article by Bill Imes was the second-place winner in last spring's Senior Class essay contest in the "Meaning of the University." It is being printed today for the first time, as a pertinent introduction to a new academic semester.)

The University can be one of the greatest servants of society. Today she resembles a maidservant of whom we might say with Jeremiah: "Thou has played the harlot with many lovers." A college education in America is thought of primarily in terms of monetary value. College brochures point out that the college graduate makes approximately one hundred thousand dollars more than his high school contemporary. People who can at all afford it send their children to college to improve them, i.e., to see to it that they are in a position to get a good-paying job. Business used to be satisfied with the situation; they could ask that applicants have a B.A., or an M.A., and even sometimes a Ph.D., and be reasonably sure of getting a well-qualified person, but then came the inevitable cheapening of the college degree and the realization that a college degree certifies nothing about its holder's talents, creativity, or imagination; it certifies nothing about him except that for the greater part of four years his address was at such-and-such a college.

At the University what does one find? On the one hand it is a gloomy picture; one hardly knows where to start to castigate. There is the faculty with its pretty departmental jealousies and squabbles. Teachers are becoming real professionals more concerned with the level of their income than with the quality of their teaching. Published or not is the almighty question. The debunkers, who perform a great service if they jolt the complacent student, have become so wrapped up in their debunking that fancy infiltrates fact, and the students laugh instead of pulling up short for serious reflection.

The fraternity system is weathering the perpetual attack upon it with less and less grace. The ideal is a stirring one—a cohesive unit of men who share common ideals and live together to work and party as a group. In practice the fraternity serves as a great lathe rubbing the rough edges off of the individual member. The beer kegs roll in and the houses run like well-oiled machines.

The fraternity- non-fraternity split functions like two huge well-greased gears. This is a case where there should be friction because friction would represent communication and an interchange of ideas, but the gears are so well greased with the cliches of each position that there is no friction.

On the other side of the picture, the dormitories frequently resemble either the bunkhouse of a great ranch, the pig-pen on some Iowa farm, or the Bronx Zoo. This is the domain of the common man: he likes beer, too, and he has a giant-economy-size inferiority complex. His social life too frequently consists of a retreat to Home. "No car" and "Where can ya go in this crummy little town" are the choral movements of the Dorm Rat Symphony. The University is large; many of the dormitories are good-sized: this is the perfect place for Mass Man. He sinks into a routine of the minimum school-work, presence at class (mute, of course), an occasional intra-mural game, the free flick, and week-ends at home. "Publications?" "No time." "Student Government?" "What a joke. Who wants the responsibility? I don't have the time. I intend to be a lousy citizen. The faculty shouldn't do it; they're older and wiser." "Sports?" "Aw, ya gotta be good and work at it." "Glee club or band?" "No time." One would expect to find a fantastically large Phi Bete chapter on such a campus where the students are all so busy.

What sort of scholars are the members of the student body, anyway? Well, the girls, for the most part, do all their work and try to expand mentally. Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for that swashbuckling stud, the Carolina Gentleman. He usually could not give less a damn about matters intellectual. His mind functions like a player piano that has not had the roles changed for the last eight years.

But there is also much that is brought in the University picture. On the basis of what is bright we can build hope for a University that produces men who serve and lead society. There are dedicated faculty members who strive to impart knowledge and insight to their students, and there are those who succeed with those students who are at all teachable. Remarkably enough, there are indivduals in fraternities, and they have the foresight to see that changes must come in the fraternity system and the gumption to do something about it. They carry on an important dialogue with those dormitory men who can and do express their positions. The dormitories are not filled with robots. There are dorm men who realize that it is what you are and not so much who you do or where you go that makes a date. More and more people take part in more and more valuable extra-curricular activities. There are many serious students who deserve to be called scholars. Intellect is not laughted at; achievement is applauded.

Where do we go from here, then? The first step is to seriously ask how the University can again become a servant who leads society rather than a slave whom society uses. People must realize that college is not for every one. Then, too, many college students are there because it was the thing to do: they drift for as long as they can, and sometimes they last four years, but they have given little and receved little. Colleges must start to look for serious intent to participate in the college experience as well as grades and the money necessary to finance an education. Too little money is available for public education to waste facilities on those who are in college to let some of the atmosphere rub off on them.

Students must go through the college experience with throttle wide open. Classes are important: first, for the insights and understanding a teacher can produce; second, for the discipline the performance of specific assignments produces; third, for the knowledge which is for the most part forgotten quickly. But most important is the broadening of the individual's world that should take place at college. The student body makes the University; not the faculty, no matter how distinguished; not the football team, despite the ideas of the alumni; not the physical plant, no matter how large or adequate. The great University is great insomuch as its student body establishes, maintains, and values a tradition of toleration and communication. There is interchange of backgrounds, ideas, and experiences. Minds are open, listening, testing, rejecting, accepting. No mind stagnates. No individual hibernates. The campus is alive, and one feels it in the atmosphere. People realize the simple truth that the world is made up of many different people with many different ideas and backgrounds. Unconscious egocentricity is shaken and destroyed. No blueprint nor pamphlet nor endowment will ever show the way to make a University great. Only the students can do that.

Viewing More And Enjoying It Less?

A few days ago we were sitting around remembering how great movies were when we were kids.

They just don't make them like that anymore.

We started out by recalling the various pleasures and screaming terrors of "3-D", certainly one of the most tinsled packages ever to come out of Hollywood.

Those were the days, remember, when you had to wear mysterious glasses and you scrunched down in your seat with one hand in the popcorn box and the other hand gripping the side of the seat, as Indian arrows and African spears whistled by your shoulders; wincing involuntarily as Redcoat cannons poured fire into Fort Ticonderoga: smiling palely as Dr. Jeckle advanced menacingly with a long serum-dripping needle aimed at your forehead.

3-D died young, perhaps because people got tired of those glasses and perhaps because there are only so many gimmicks you can thrust out into an audience (and after all, kids soon enough found out that if you took the glasses off to see which seventh-grade girls were sitting nearby, the whole picture was flat and lifeless.)

If 3-D had to go, it had a worthy successor, the hours-long "Saturday Morning Kiddie Party," when you could get in for a Sealtest milk carton (and that is probably the only reason for abandoning chocolate milk and Coke when you're 13.)

Those "parties" would start out with a Tom and Jerry cartoon (and everybody would cheer) or a Looney Toons (and everybody would cheer also — we'd cheer at anything in those days) and then you'd get a pirate film with Tony Curtis or maybe an Indian picture with Randolph Scott. Then you'd get a Three Stooges Comedy or the Marx Brothers—and we'd all still be screaming with delight because in those days you didn't have to worry about the psychological ramifications of why the Three Stooges were always bopping each other in the head and tweaking each other's noses, or what early childhood trauma made Harpo honk a horn instead of talking like everybody else.

I guess it's all gone now — the lines and lines of painted Indians on the hills, the splintering broadsides as the pirates took on the French, the clash of armor as Ivanhoe cleared the lists. Today we got art films: sex with a message.

Perhaps that stuff ended because it appealed to a particular generation of kids, and kids grow up, and the next group has a new favorite, like Buck Rodgers of maybe Captain Vidio.

But 3-D . . . you know, if they aimed those films at adults, who can really appreciate a gimmick, and maybe had Jayne Mansfield looming but over the first three rows . . . I think I could get interested in green glasses again.

REFLECTIONS

A very striking and unusual two-minute talk has received inconsistent attention in the nation's press and we wonder why.

At a National Press Club luncheon in Washington last week the NBC foreign correspondents gathered to forecast world events for 1963 and to look back on 1962. Each correspondent spoke for two minutes and then could be questioned. Most of the talks were general and unilluminating.

NBC's West German reporter was a different matter. He rapidly and coldly, without the light wit of his fellow newsmen. He said the U.S. State Department is blocking transmission of important news occuring in West Germany, and particularly in West Berlin. He said the State Department withheld news that Allied cars travelling between West Berlin and West Germany had been shot at regularly for "at least two years"—this news was withheld, he said, until a meeting of East-West foreign ministers made it a political instrument.

The correspondent said the State Department purposely distorts the true economic picture of West Berlin, to make the city appear thriving, to make it truly the "showplace" of capitalist democracy. In reality, he said, West Berlin must depend heavily on West German economic aid.

Finally, the newsman said he had been smeared in rumors spread by persons who wished to discredit him, who had called him Communist. He said the smearing came from the U. S. State Department.

But many papers—including most in this state—did not even run the story.

Gottingen View . . .

Language Limits Hurt Americans

By ROBERT POWELL

(Eds. Note: Powell is a former UNC student, attending Gottingen on the University's exchange program.)

GOTTINGEN, West Germany—One often hears in the States that there is no language problem in Europe because everybody speaks English. There is some truth in this. For instance, I have yet to meet a Scandinavian student who did not speak fairly good English. Many of the Dutch also speak English, as well as the Belgians. However, as a rule, when one gets off the beaten tourist tracks in Europe, one must expect to cope with the European in his own language. Indeed, many of the Germans picked up some English during the occupation and quite a few Americanisms, such as "baby-sitter," "weekend" and "teamwork" are rather common in everyday German. But this period now lies in the past, and the elementary English which was once so important in order to coexisit with the conquerors has been forgotten in the wake of the "Wirtschaftswunder."

Such is not the case though, with the new generation of university students, the overwhelming majority of whom have been educated during and after the occupation, are therefore products of a somewhat different education system. There are now very few German students who have not had at least 6 years of English. This includes not only a reading knowledge which enables them to enjoy contemporary literature, but also a speaking knowledge which goes quite a bit beyond the "Ich mochte gern ein Bier" which pretty well marks the limit of the American student's proficiency in German.

These remarkable results stem from the fact that the study of foreign languages in Germany begins at about the age of 10. In the German Gymnasium, which prepares students for the University, at least six years of English are compulsory. Also, there usually exisits the possibility of up to three more years. In addition, these students get two years of Latin and four of French or vice-versa. Thus by the time he reaches the university level, the German student is better prepared for advanced study than the American with two years of college already behind him. For instance, it allows him to plunge into such sophisticated idioms as "The English Romantics" and "The English Novel from Hardy to Joyce," two lectures at Gottingen which are attended by no less than 500 students each.

We live today in a national and international situation which is increasingly more complex and more difficult to understand. Since in a democratic society, the policies of the government reflect the general attitude and opinions of the public, it is clear that we can arrive at good and workable solutions only if the public in general and the educated leaders in particular have the necessary comprehension of these problems. The fact that language can help immensely in this process is so obvious that it hardly needs to be pointed out. It is a fiction that in four semesters, meeting three times a week for one hour each time, that the American student can attain the degree of facility necessary to understand meaningful literature in that language. Granted, he can read it with a dictionary, but the process is so painful and so time-consuming that it is hardly worth the effort, and to think critically about what has been read is almost impossible. Thus, a tremendous body of important literature in every field is virtually closed to American student, simply because it is not written in English. This is one of the big reasons why the American student generally lacks the intellectual sophistication of the European student.

This situation is significant to us as Americans not simply because it offers a challenge—I don't propose that we enter an all-out language race with the Germans—but that it demonstrates dramatically what can be done with an intensive and dynamic language program which starts early in grade school. American kids are no dumber than German kids.

'Best Dressed' Coed To Be Named Here

By MARY HARRIS

Who is Carolina's best dressed coed?

The editors of "Glamour" magazine want to know, and they have a storehouse of prizes and surprises waiting for her if she is a national winner.

For the first time since 1957, UNC will enter "Glamour's" "Ten Best Dressed College Girls in America" contest. (In 1957 Sarah van Weyk was selected UNC's best dressed coed. She became a national winner, received a trip to New York as guest of "Glamour" and was featured in their August, 1957 issue.)

This month UNC has a chance to do it again. Each women's undergraduate dormitory and sorority may nominate one contestant. The IFC and IDC may nominate two contestants each. Interested undergraduate coeds not living in dorms or sorority houses should iontact Diane Blanton, Chi Omega house.

Contestants' names and a $1 entry fee should be turned in to Diane Blanton by Tuesday, Feb. 12.

A panel of five judges will pick the winner on Wednesday, Feb. 20. Photographs of her in a campus outfit, a daytime off-campus outfit, and a party dress will be sent with the official entry form to "Glamour" by March 4 for national judging.

The "Top Ten" will be chosen from a group of semi-finalists and will be flown to New York in June as guests of the magazine for two weeks.

While in New York the winners will tour the city's cultural centers, meet members of the fashion industry at "Glamour's" fall fashion show, and attend Broadway shows.

The "Top Ten" will be featured in the August, 1963 issue of "Glamour." Other semi-finalists will appear in a fall issue.

"Glamour" has stressed that winners should not be selected on the basis of an expensive or extensive wardrobe, but rather on their good taste, grooming and appearance.

Kathleen Aston Casey, Editor-in-Chief of "Glamour," said, "It is our hope to show that being well-dressed and well-groomed is one part of a young woman's education and one that she should learn early in life. These attributes are not a question of money or an extensive wardrobe but rather the development of good taste and an intelligent interest in one's appearance. Good looks, good grooming and a good mind are all goals for which any young woman can reach."

Miss Katherine Carmichael, UNC's Dean of Women, said she is "pleased that we are entering the contest this year. I feel it could have definite vocational possibilities for any young woman who wins."

The planning committee for UNC's contest is composed of Diane Blanton, Bev Haynes and Richard Vinroot. Advisor is Mrs. J. M. Alexander, assistant to the Dean of Women.

BOOKS THAT SAY I LOVE YOU . . .

There's an old saw that money can't buy everything. Money, they say, can't buy love..

Confederate money, that is.

We wouldn't want to comment, but we will say that a powerful lot of wedding rings have been sold to chaps who bought books as Valentines.

On the other hand, a lot of chaps got away, even with the aid of books.

Either way, it was fun. Why not take a gamble?

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X E
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

out such support in about four years.

For this proposed system of community centers with facilities and staffs for all types of mental therapy the President asked no funds in fiscal 1964 beyond the $4.2 million in planning grants requested earlier for the National Institute of Mental Health.

2. A new five-year program, starting with $5 million in the next fiscal year, for project grants to stimulate state and local health departments in planning, initiating and developing comprehensive maternity and child health service programs.

This was the heart of his plan to prevent mental retardation.

Byerly Is Winner Of NEA Citation

Kenneth Byerly, associate professor of journalism at UNC, has just received a citation from the National Editorial Association for his authorship of the book, "Community Journalism."

The citation was awarded at the fifth annual awards banquet of the Educational Council of the Graphic Arts Industry held in St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 18.

The citation read "for authorship of the book 'Community Journalism' and his many contributions to the field of community newspaper education and publishing."

The book was published in 1961 by Chilton Co. and is now used as an official text book in major college and university departments of journalism throughout the United States.

Prof. Byerly came to UNC in 1957 following a distinguished career as owner and publisher of four newspapers in the west. He is a specialist in the field of community journalism.

A graduate of the University of Minnesota, Prof. Byerly received his M.A. degree from UNC. He is a member of Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalism fraternity, the Association for Education in Journalism, and past president of both Montana and Wyoming Press Associations.

Book Checker To Be Posted In UG Library

A "moral reminder" has been established at the exist of the Undergraduate Library for students who might have forgotten to check out Modern Civilization textbooks.

According to Bill Pease, Librarian of the Undergraduate library, the door check was started as a possible solution to the problem of "so many missing Modern Civilization books."

Pease reported that almost 400 books were missing from the Undergraduate Library after first semester.

"About one out of every five of the Modern Civilization books is missing," Pease reported. "This would cost the History department between $2000 and $2500 if they all had to be replaced.

"But in a way we're lucky because about a third of the books usually find their way back to the shelves. Many students really don't realize they haven't checked the book out until they get back to their rooms."

Pease said his department wasn't the first to establish a door check. "The reserve reading room checks books and there is someone who checks the students who have visited the stacks," he said. "So we are not the first."

Tom Clark Buries VMI Jumping Mark

By LASZLO BIRINYI

High jumper Tommy Clark was the individual standout as North Carolina's indoor track team took three first places in the VMI Relays at Lexington, Va., last Saturday.

The Greensboro junior took first place in his event with a 6-foot, 6½-inch jump, breaking the old meet record by almost two inches.

Six meet records were broken and one tied in the 12th annual VMI Relays. No official team standings were kept, but Maryland and Furman led the way with four first places. 415 athletes from 21 colleges participated.

Bob Hart, Jerry Stuver, Art Maillet and Charlie Little combined their talents to give the Tar Heels a victory in the distance Stuver the half-mile, Maillet the medley. Hart ran the quarter-mile, three-quarters and Little the mile.

Little returned to anchor the winning four-mile relay team. Teaming up with him were Larry Henry, Carmine Lunetta and Bob Bennett.

In other competition, Carolina finished second in the two-mile relay — won by Duke. Lunetta finished second in the two-mile run and Heath Whittle captured second in the pole vault.

The Tar Heels play host to Clemson Saturday in the Tin Can in an Atlantic Coast Conference contest.

Blue Dolphins Beat F-State; Wolfpack Next

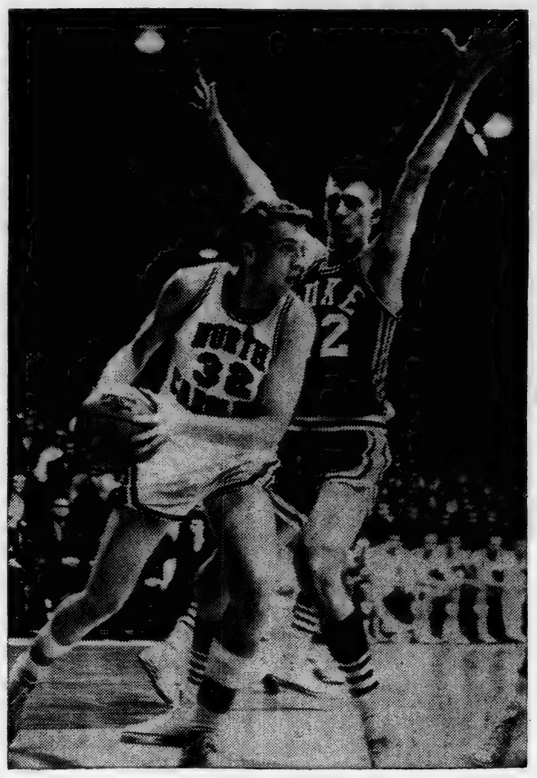
By JOEL BULKLEY

Carolina's Blue Dolphins, fresh from a 51-44 upset over previously unbeaten Florida State University in a recent road trip, began intense preparation this week for next Wednesday's all-important engagement against N. C. State in Raleigh. In the meantime the varsity swimmers, who hold an 8-3 season record, will entertain V.P.I. here Saturday afternoon at five o'clock.

In other recent matches, Coach Pat Earey's mermen defeated East Carolina College, 61-34, for the second time this year and bowed 64-30 to the University of Florida swimmers in Gainesville, Fla.

UNC swimmers copped six of eleven first places as they handed Florida State its first setback after three victories. Carolina's medley relay team of Thompson Mann, Harrison Merrill, Pete Swift, and Larry Roberts established a new pool record of 3:51.7 there while the freestyle relay entry of Mann, Merrill, Roberts and Thad Adams bettered another pool mark with a time of 3:25.4. Bll Bloom scored a first place n the 200-freestyle and then came back to finish second in the butterfly event. Other winners for Carolina were Mann (individual medley); Merrill (100-freestyle); Frank Lea (500-freestyle) and Scott Smiley (backstroke).

The medley relay team, Thompson Mann and Harrison Merrill, collected the only Tar Heel first places against the University of Florida. Swift, Merrill, Mann and Roberts completed the 400-yard individual medley course in 3:51, equaling the school record here which they had set only the week before against East Carolina. Bloom finished third in both the 200 freestyle and the butterfly events; Mann and Barry King were second and third in the individual medley; and Ernie Oare was third in the diving competition.



Merrill won the 100-freestyle and Mann, competing in his third event of the afternoon took the backstroke race. Frank Lea was second in the 500-freestyle and Swift finished third in the breaststroke to account for the rest of UNC's points. Carolina's entry in the 50-freestyle was disqualified for its third false start.

Two Important ACC Games Face Tar Heels This Week

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's basketball Tar Heels, defeated by powerful Duke Saturday, meet two more Atlantic Coast Conference rivals this week —Maryland tomorrow and Wake Forest Saturday.

Though the nationally third-ranked Blue Devils trimmed Dean Smith's men by eight points, 77-69, the Dukes had their hands full. Despite a definite height advantage, Vic Bubas's forces were outrebounded by the Tar Heels, 46-45.

Cunningham In Action Against Duke

Billy Cunningham, towered over by a pair of lean near-seven footers all night, came out with 20 rebounds. The gangling Dukes, Jay Buckley and Hack Tison, had 10 and six respectively.

Perhaps the most commendable Tar Heel performance was that of hustling Charlie Shaffer, the smallest front-court man in the game. Charlie hit five of nine shots, scored 12 points and pulled down 13 rebounds.

Both teams tallied 19 points on the foul line, so the Methodists won the game on Tar Heel mistakes which allowed the visitors to take five more shots from the floor. Duke hit 29 of 68 shots for 42.6 per cent and Carolina countered with 25 of 63 for 39.7 per cent.

All-American Art Heyman, as usual, led the Duke scoring with 24 points, followed by Jeff Mullins and Buckley with 17.

All five Tar Heel starters hit double figures — Cunningham 19, Yogi Poteet 13, Shaffer 12, Bryan McSweeney 12 and Larry Brown 11. McSweeney returned to the starting lineup for the first time since last season and played like a veteran, bagging seven rebounds in addition to his scoring.

The Tar Heels are now 5-2 in the Atlantic Coast Conference and 9-3 overall. With the disappointing Duke game behind them, they can concentrate on less formidable, though tough, conference foes.

Smith's men rolled over Maryland in their first meeting at College Park, 78-56, and should have little trouble doing it again at home tomorrow night.

But, Saturday's opposition, Wake Forest has been a rough customer for Carolina teams over the past four years. Last month Bones McKinney's men poured on the steam in the closing minutes at Winston-Salem and took a 78-70 victory. The Deacs are ahead of Carolina in the ACC standings, so revenge won't be the only matter the Tar Heels will be trying to settle.

Vacendak Helpless; Frosh Crush Duke

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina's freshmen found out Saturday night that with a helpless Steve Vacendak the Duke Blue Imps are something far less than invincible.

Quick Jimmy Moore swarmed all over Vacendak, and the rest of the Tar Babies played near flawless defense in UNC's startling 60-43 upset win.

Vacendak, the powerful 23-point a game guard, was held to just one field goal by Moore's pressing tactics, and made only three of his nine foul shots for five total points.

Meanwhile, Carolina was shifting zone defenses constantly while holding Duke to a 23.1 percentage from the floor.

The first half, more or less, told the story. Duke did not score from the floor for six full minutes. Both teams then played some fine defense as the Blue Imps cut the lead to one at 13-12. But this was the closest they were to come.

In the final four minutes of the period, UNC's Johnny Yokley personally outscored Duke, 10-5, and Bob Bennett's two free throws at the buzzer gave Carolina its 25-17 halftime lead.

Ray Hassell and Jimmy Smithwick led the Tar Baby surge in the second period.

Both scored but seven points, but Hassell repeatedly came up with brilliant steals, and Smithwick's rebounds played a big part in the victory.

Bennett was Carolina's scoring leader with 16 while Yokley contributed 12. Smithwick had 11 rebounds and Bennett 10.

For Duke, which lost its first against nine wins (UNC is also 9-1), 6-6 Jack Marin was the only man in double figures. He had 11 points and 11 rebounds.

Frank Harscher, the 6-1 Lexington, Ky. guard who beat out heralded R. D. Carson for a starting job, added nine points.

Carson, who only that morning was announced as having returned to the Duke team, saw quite a bit of action in a relief role. The 6-1 Sanford product managed six points on three of ten field tries. It was the best shooting performance of any Duke freshman.

The two teams will battle for the Big Four Championship on Saturday, Feb. 23 at Duke Indoor Stadium.

Scoring:

UNC (60) Bennett 16, Smithwick 7, Yokley 12, Moore 9, Hassell 7, Harrison 4, Johnson 3, Evans 0, Rowe 0, Iannarella 2, Phillips 0, Archer 0.

Duke (43) Liccardo 4, Murray 2, Marin 11, Vacendak 5, Harscher 9, Allen 6, Carson 6, Zimmer 0, Coble 0.

Basketball (?) Co-ed Style Starts Soon

The Women's Athletic Association intramural basketball tournament will begin next Tuesday, February 12. Entries are due Friday, February 8, at 4:30 p.m.

The tournament will consist of four leagues playing round-robin schedules. The winners of each league will play a single elimination tournament for the championship.

No organization may enter more than one team and each team must have a minimum of eight players.

Each team must also provide one trained scorer and one trained timer. Clinics for scorers and timers will be held today and Thursday at 4 o'clock p.m. Scorers and timers must report to at least one of these meetings.

For further information, contact either Mrs. Hogan at the gym, Margaret Shaw (Spencer Dorm) or Carolyn Powers (Alpha Gamma Delta Sorority).

Freshman Hygiene Won't Be 'Must' Course Any More

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Hygiene courses will no longer be required of incoming students after this year, the Faculty Council decided last week. The Council will decide Friday when this ruling will take effect.

The Council also decided to allow freshmen to substitute Logic for the two math courses now required. A combination of one math and one Logic course will also be allowed. Previously, only Latin or Greek could be substituted for math.

The decision to make all hygiene courses elective was made without the approval of the Physical Education department which teacnes the courses.

Dr. O. K. Cornwell, chairman of the department, said students do not have a proper background in personal health when they enter the University, and that such a course should be required.

The action came after General College Dean J. C. Sitterson asked the faculty council to make a study of all General College courses.

All students now enrolled in the University, however, will be required to take the course.

No Previous Changes

Since its beginning as a required course in 1935, hygiene has traveled a rocky road. The General College has reviewed the course many times, but this is the first time they have taken any definite action on the matter.

The decision to put the courses on a purely elective basis came after much deliberation and study, according to Dean J. Carlyle Sitterson, who presented the report to the Faculty Council.

"The Administrative Board of the General College asked the Faculty Council to make a study of all the courses in the General College and not just Hygiene in particular," reported Sitterson.

The Dean pointed out that the Council just didn't feel that Hygiene 11 for the men and Hygiene 10-W or 12-W for the women should be labeled "required courses."

"The main thing the council had to decide," Sitterson said, "was not whether Hygiene was a useful or desirable course, but whether it should be a required course, and they decided that it shouldn't."

Opposition

The Physical Education Dept. which administers the Hygiene courses takes a dim view of the change.

Dr. O. K. Cornwell, who started the Hygiene program when he came to UNC in 1935, doesn't believe that the students have the proper background in health education.

"In 1961 and 1962, we tested the Freshman with a standardized health examination and less than 5 per cent of those tested made above 70," Cornwell said.

He was joined in his argument by veteran Phys. Ed. Professor Dick Jamerson who said, "The students simply don't know the material when they come to college, and a course in personal and community health should be a very definite requirement."

SG SECRETARIAT

The Student Government Secretariat is being reorganized for the spring semester. Persons interested should contact Judy Clark in the Student Government office at G.M. before Feb. 13.

MBA CANDIDATES

All MBA Candidates are invited to attend the first MBA Club meeting of the Spring semester on Thursday, February 7, 1963 at 7:30 p.m. in the Faculty Seminar Room of Carroll Hall. Speaker for the evening will be Professor Barrett. Election of officers will be held.

Sanford Talk To Headline Parole Meet

HUGH STEVENS

Governor Terry Sanford will address the Institute for Parole Board Members to be held at the UNC Institute of Government Monday at 11 a.m.

Gov. Sanford will speak on North Carolina's role in the juvenile delinquency program.

The state press reported last week that U. S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy would speak at the institute, but Kennedy announced this week that he is unable to attend. Governor Sanford's speech will replace Kennedy's remarks.

First Of Its Kind

The Parole Board Members Institute, which meets here February 10-16, is the first of its kind ever to be held in the United States. The parole board members will exchange information and experience as well as learning from the faculty. They will examine the forces which confront a parole board member—public opinion, parole risks, staff relationships, and similar topics.

Exploration will also be made into specific problems which each member may face in his own jurisdiction. Parole selection, predicition, prison relationships, legal considerations and executive operations will be considered.

One Of Six

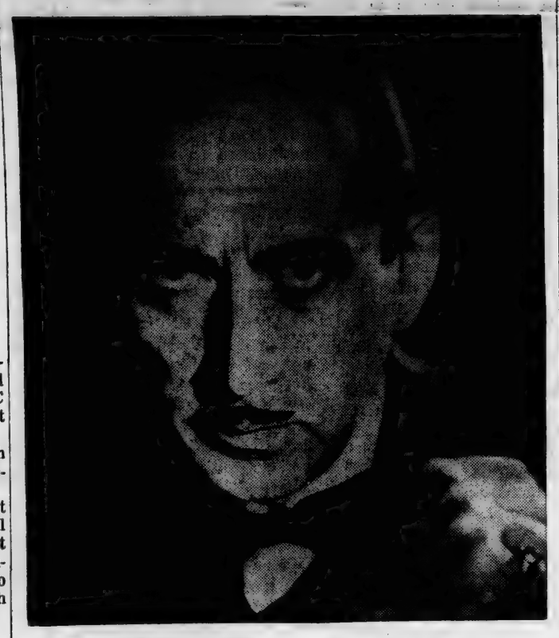
The National Parole Institutes, which operates under the National Council on Crime and Delinquency, is sponsoring a series of similar parole board members insitutes in selected U. S. universities.

The Training Center on Crime and Delinquency at UNC is one of six University Training Centers established with the aid of grants made under the Federal Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Offenses Act of 1961. These centers offer courses of up to one semester to a wide range of officials and workers concersed with the prevention and control of delinquency and youth crime.

Institutes such as the one next week complement the work of the University Centers by offering brief training courses to persons who cannot leave their jobs for a longer period of time.

MARJORIE HUNTER

White House Reporter Is 8 PM Speaker



Marjorie Hunter, member of the New York Times Washington Bureau, will speak at UNC tonight at 8 in the Howell Hall Auditorium. "Showplace on the Potomac" is the title of Miss Hunter's address.

Miss Hunter is the first journalism lecturer for the 1962-63 UNC Journalism Lecture Series. She is also the first woman to speak in the series.

A native North Carolinian and a graduate of Elon College, Miss Hunter has worked on the Raleigh News and Observer, the Winston-Salem Journal, and the Houston Press. While a North Carolina newspaper-woman, she covered seven sessions of the General Assembly.

Miss Hunter has been with the New York Times since 1961. Her primary responsibilities are women's activities, including Mrs. Kennedy; cultural activities; and the education and welfare agencies in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The lecture is open to the public.

THE COLD GLARE of Dr. John Kolisch will be put to work tonight when the noted hypnotist puts on a show in Memorial Hall at 8. Dr. Kolisch, who claims that he has hypnotized 100,000 persons in his lifetime, will appear in a program sponsored by Graham Memorial. The performance will be free to students and faculty.

Royster, Gilmore, And Adler To Appear On 'Alumni Fun'

Three Carolina alumni will represent UNC when challenged on ABC's new Sunday afternoon television quiz show, "Alumni Fun," on February 17.

"Alumni Fun" is a quiz show on which three-man teams of well-known alumni compete for cash for their universities.

Vermont Royster, editor of the Wall Street Journal, Richard Adler, writer of Broadway musical lyrics and producer of fund-raising extravaganzas, and Voit Gilmore, director of the U. S. Travel Service of the Department of Commerce, are the three UNC graduates who will be competing against a team of three from another educational institution. The winning team will return the following week to vie for further rewards.

A substantial cash grant is what the winning team receives for its correct answers. The grant will go to the educational institution's alumni fund.

The show, which premiered on the ABC-TV network in January, is sponsored by the American Cyanamid Co. WRAL-TV in Raleigh carries the show at 6 p.m. on Sundays.

The quiz show questions to be answered by the two alumni teams concern: arts, business and economics, history, literature, people and places, science, sports, words and games.

UNC Alumni who will compete on TV show are Wall Street Journal editor Vermont Royster, U. S. Travel Director Voit Gilmore, and playwright Richard Adler.

8 LEGISLATORS QUIT STUDENT PARTY

Leadership Is Called 'Stagnant'

Eight Student Legislators, including the chairmen of all four SL committees, renounced their Student Party endorsement and became independents last night.

In a statement they said, "The Student Party no longer stands for progress on this campus. Its leadership is stagnant and the SP legislators have become obstructionists."

The now-independent legislators are Dick Ellis, chairman of the Ways and Means committee; George Rosental, chairman of the Finance committee; Bob Smith, chairman of the Rules committee; Charles Cooper, chairman of the Judicial committee; Anne Lupton, clerk of the legislature; Margaret Ann Rhymes, file clerk; Ford Rowan, Parliamentarian; and Bill Bowerman, town representative.

The statement continues, "The SP has ceased to represent the dorm residents. It is becoming a clique of students who are part of a special interest group.

"No Active Programs"

"This year, the SP has failed to live up to its tradition of active programs, regular meetings, and close participation in the functions of student government."

Dick Ellis said, "The SP just doesn't truly represent the campus; it has lost its traditional goals and doesn't measure up as an efficient political force in Student Government."

Rosental, also president of Craige Dorm, said, "The SP has stopped representing the dorm man, and with this, has lost its dynamic character. I hope we can get student government to consider more dorm problems."

Charles Cooper said, "This year, the SP has not risen above trivial and petty subjects. It has failed to meet the challenges of a growing university."

Many of the new independents expressed disappointment that the SP has "failed to stimulate the campus as it once did." They indicated that, as independents, they would work to provide student government with "the leadership the SP once gave it."

Debaters 6th At Baltimore

The UNC Debate Team tied for sixth place in the Johns Hopkins Invitational Debate Tournament in Baltimore last weekend. Forty-eight teams participated in the tournament.

Haywood Clayton and Mack Armstrong represented Carolina and debated both the negative and affirmative.

The two were also among the five finalists in the extemporaneous speaking contest. Armstrong placed third and Clayton finished fourth.

The team had a 4-2 record debating the proposition that non-communist nations of the world should form an economic community. They defeated Columbia, Rutgers, Gettysburg and Duquesne, and were defeated by George Washington and Seton Hall.

NAACP

The NAACP will meet at 8:30 p.m. Thursday in 205 Alumni.

GAS 'ER UP—Members of the Chapel Hill Flying Club inspect and service the business end of of the club's Taylor Craft two-seater airplane in preparation for flights this weekend. The club has offered to give free flights this Saturday and Sunday at Horace Williams Airport. Checking the plane are (l. to r.) Tom Patterson, club president; Walt Ramsey, and John Bolcer, membership chairman.

Cuban Arms Gone, McNamara Claims

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The administration Wednesday laid before the American people aerial photographs and summarized intelligence reports to back up its assertion that Cuba is free of offensive Soviet weapons.

In an extraordinary public report, Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara and Central Intelligence Agency Director John A. McCone declared they were convinced beyond reasonable doubt that all offensive weapons were removed from the island — and had not been reintroduced.

To support this statement, McNamara and his Defense Department aides appeared at a nationally televised news conference to display aerial photographs so sharp that trucks could be observed on highways and workers could be seen on the ground.

McNamara said U. S. military planes had flown 400 reconnaissance flights over Cuba since the October missile crisis — an average of more than four a day — and had found no sign of any such weapons. McCone said all intelligence reports bore this out.

The McNamara-McCone report was the administration's answer to charges, chiefly by Republicans, that the Soviets have engaged in a continuous military buildup in Cuba since the missile showdown last fall.

McNamara, summing up the administration's case, declared to the American people: "I believe beyond any reasonable doubt that all such offensive weapons systems have been removed from the island and none have been reintroduced."

Keating Renews Charge

Shortly before the administration presentation, Sen. Kenneth B. Keating, R-N.Y. renewed his charge that the buildup was continuing. He also said he would eat his hat on the steps of the Senate Office Building if he was wrong about his contention that medium range missile sites remain intact on Cuba.

But Keating said he had no suggestions of his own for countering the alleged buildup. "I don't want to talk about invasion of Cuba. There are alternatives. That is up to the President . . ."

Times Writer Will Speak Tonight At 8

Marjorie Hunter, member of the Washington Bureau of the New York Times, will give the first journalism lecture of the 1962-63 Journalism Lecture Series tonight at 8 in Howell Hall Auditorium.

Miss Hunter, the first woman speaker on the series, is a native North Carolinian and a graduate of Elon College. She has worked on the Raleigh News and Observer, the Houston Press, and the Winston-Salem Journal. While a North Carolina newspaperwoman, she covered seven sessions of the N. C. General Assembly.

Since 1961, Miss Hunter has been with the New York Times where her primary responsibilities are women's activities, including those of Mrs. Kennedy; cultural activities; and the education and welfare agencies in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The journalism lecture is free to the public.

Flying Club Offers Free Air Rides

By MARTIN KRUMING

Like to view Chapel Hill and vicinity from the air for fifteen minutes? Then come out to Horace Williams Airport on Saturday or Sunday from 1-6 p.m., and take a free flight in a Taylor Craft plane piloted by a member of the Chapel Hill Flying Club.

Organized in 1961 by Tom Patterson, a physics graduate student and three other amateur flyers, the club has grown to 12 members.

The club is a non-profit organization and is in no way affiliated with the University. "Our aim, in addition to promoting aviation interest and safety, is to provide flying as cheaply as possible," said Patterson.

When a student joins the club, he is charged a $50 initiation fee which is refundable. There are dues of $9 per month and a charge of $4 an hour for flying.

The Chapel Hill Flying Club owns a 1946 Taylor Craft single engine craft. The plane is a two seater and is operated by a wheel rather than a stick.

In order to purchase the craft Patterson had to borrow $800 from the bank. But with increasing membership and an active interest in flying, the loan has been reduced to $250.

Although the Taylor Craft has been as far south as Florida and Louisiana, most of the trips are to Raleigh, Charlotte, Greensboro and Durham.

Since there is no two-way radio aboard the plane, the Chapel Hill Flying club has to receive special permission and inform the commercial airports in advance when it will land.

Weeklong Flying

A typical day at the airport would be spent practicing touch and go landings and cross country flying. Although most of the aviation is done on the weekends, the club encourages its members to fly during the week.

In order to obtain a private license, one must solo and dual a total of forty hours. After eight or ten hours one may solo but it is necessary to carry a flying passenger before obtaining a license.

The engine in the Taylor Craft was just recently given a major overhaul and it is completely rebuilt every 1000 hours. This is done by a licensed mechanic in Burlington.

The invitation to go up in the club's plane this Saturday or Sunday is open to the public at no charge.

MODELS NEEDED

Men and women are needed to pose for life drawing class from 2-4 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Call the Art Department, Ackland Building, 967-7063 or inquire at Art Department Office, room 106 Ackland.

Ehle To Talk Monday Night

John Ehle, Associate Professor of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, novelist and biographer, will speak to the UNC Press Club Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Howell Hall student lounge.

Ehle, who is a UNC graduate, began writing for the University Communications Center while he worked on a graduate degree. He wrote 26 plays under the series title "American Adventure," 13 of which were broadcast nationally by NBC. The series received six national awards.

The Asheville native has since divided his time between writing and teaching scriptwriting. He has written two biographies and three novels. His most recent novel, "Lion on the Hearth," was a contender for the National Book Award.

Ehle is now on a year's leave of absence from the University to work on a forth novel. He is also doing some work as a special assistant to the Governor.

Suicide Note Said Found By Police

By BILL WUAMETT

A graduate French instructor has been reported missing and Chapel Hill police say what they interpret as a suicide note has been found.

The instructor, Richard Lee Brand, 27, was last seen about 5:45 p.m. Tuesday. A search of University buildings and wooded areas around Chapel Hill revealed no traces of his whereabouts.

Police said a friend of Brand's told them Brand had seemed despondent earlier Tuesay afternoon. The police did not reveal the contents of the suicide note, saying they felt it would hinder the investigation.

The suicide note was found about 6 p.m. Tuesday in a friend's apartment. Brand was reported missing at 8:33 p.m.

He was last seen walking on N. Columbia St. toward Franklin St. by the Police station. He was wearing a tan jacket and slacks. He is six feet, slender built, with dark, thinning hair.

Police detective Pendergraph said Brand's car had been found in a garage where it had been for about two months. Chapel Hill transportation facilities have been checked, but have yielded no information.

A part-time instructor in French, he was described as an excellent student and teacher. He is a former Fulbright Scholar at the University of Rennes, Germany and was an honorary Woodrow Wilson Fellow. He was born in Shawnee, Oklahoma, September 18, 1935; attended Oklahoma Baptist University in Shawnee; received the M. A. degree at Tulane University in 1959. He taught at Winthrop College in 1959-60, and came to UNC in 1960.

He is the son of Mrs. L. W. Scott of 107 Silver Meadow, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

45 To Attend Seminar On SE Asia

By MARTIN KRUMING

Southeast Asia will be the key issue when the 1963 Washington Seminar, sponsored by the YM-YWCA, is held in Washington on Friday and Saturday.

The 45 student UNC delegation is scheduled to leave Chapel Hill by bus at 6 p.m. and arrive in the nation's capital at midnight.

Among the noted speakers on Friday's agenda are Turner Cameron, director of South Asian affairs in the state department, and Henry Koren, director of Southeast Asian affairs.

The group will hear Senator John Sparkman, Alabama Democrat, and will visit the Indonesian Embassy.

On Saturday a briefing at the Indian Embassy is scheduled. A luncheon will feature the St. Louis Post Dispatch's Richard Dudman, who recently returned from a tour of Southeast Asia.

Winding up the program will be Lee St. Laurence, director of Peace Corps activities in Asia.

The Washington Seminar is sponsored by the International Affairs Committee of the YM-YWCA.

"We have enjoyed a great deal of success and the entire group is looking forward to the trip with enthusiasm," said Rick Edwards, chairman of the committee.

Ann Queen, secretary of the YWCA, and Glenda Lackey, chairman of the YWCA International Affairs Committee, will accompany the group.

SPRING RUSH

Spring Fraternity Rush will be held Feb 11, 12, and 13 (Mon.-Wed.) from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. Interested students should fill out an "interest card" in 206 South Building before Friday.

Hope Springs Eternal, And Why Not?

Hope springs eternal.

And why not? With the coming of a new academic semester, the plans and hopes of days just gone by must and will be stirred anew. We promise great things, we look for the best, and we intend the proper endeavor. It seems a good thing, and most of the time we mean it. Don't we?

Shallow, indeed, are those few rancid souls who would approach a new semester certainly and inevitably already committed to sloth. And yet, few in number are those who believe that students in general will make the honest effort towards scholastic improvement. The motives are varied, and they are numerous, but the response is too often seen lacking.

We stumble from the conclusion of a semester's worries, and lunge on into the second. There are books to purchase, new lines to form, classes to attend, and distractions to avoid. Surely, we all intend the proper approach to studies. Yes, we all intend improvement where it is needed and relaxation only where it is allowed.

We can hope for little more, and we need pretend to nothing else. An honest bit of first-of-the-semester enthusiasm is becoming to all, and lacking in only a few.

* * *

We do not propose to question motives and doubt intentions; we would but look for a latter-day interest desire to perform well in every task. It seems that along with the ability to take charge soon and perform brilliantly, comes also the inclination to a sporadic bit of sincere endeavor.

The same kids who crowd today's classrooms, who knock the top off of College Boards, and who lay claim to the latest soaring Intelligence Quotients seem personally led astray by their own flashy, fleeting brilliance. "Capabilities," ah yes, that administrative word, are seldom met. No longer do we fnd the intellectual who also "cares." No more do we see the study lamps burn late in undergrad dorms. Smart, bright kids who have the immense intelligence seem to lack integrity of concern for the daily task.

The proverbial "light" is too often under that bushel.

And yet, we must always be impressed by the flashy manner in which the "new breed" performs when it must. We cannot fail to recognize the value of minds that manage to cram an entire semester's work into one all-night-before-the-exam session. This, indeed, is brilliance. Isn't it?

And this very brilliance must now be kidding itself about plans and intentions which are mere lies stirred anew. (CW)

Let Them Stand

Novelist and former professor Phillips Russell has undertaken a campaign which should be dear to the hearts of all Chapel Hillians, students, faculty and townspeople alike.

Mr. Russell has protested the University policy of thinning the tall trees around the golf course. He expressed his concern that "the attractive Chapel Hill of old is threatened by a change to a commercial exploitation . . ." The lumbering operations in question "will eventually surround us with a series of barren and eroded tracts instead of the wooded areas we now enjoy," Mr. Russell said.

Thinning of mature trees has taken place already around University Lake and the Chapel Hill Airport. The Mason Farm area have been surveyed, and some trees will be levelled there.

Mr. Russell's campaign is a just one. Through the years one of Chapel Hill's most striking physical aspect has been its beautiful and plentiful trees . . . trees dominating the campus and the town, the houses, dormitories and class areas. The trees have stood guard over winter, welcomed spring, and then greeted fall with a full uniform of color. The trees and their beauty are part of what makes Chapel Hill a wonderful and unique place.

Woodman, spare that tree. Let Chapel Hill hold onto its scenic heritage for future generations. (JC)

Not All Bad

It is perhaps too often pretended that fraternities do little or no good. Individuals who have something against the "system" are prone to overlook many of the good things done by individual houses and by responsible organizations such as the IFC.

We quite often hear of the bad and unfortunate instances of fraternity life, and we seldom hear of the beneficent deeds occasioned by a sincere interest in aiding the University Community. This in itself is unfortunate. Perhaps it is due to prejudiced reporting, perhaps it is due to disorganized publicity, or perhaps to mere circumstance.

But whatever the cause, the "all bad and no good" image should be completely dispelled. We would venture a guess that fraternities as a whole and fraternities through individual members do as much, if not more, to serve this University than many, if not any, other campus organization.

A case in point came to light just the other night, when the IFC voted to increase their Andrew Bershak scholarship from a $500 per year to a $600 per year stipend. With four recipients enrolled at a time, this donation cost the IFC $2400 yearly. These funds come entirely out of contributions by each individual fraternity house.

That is but one instance of unselfish and public-spirited action on behalf of the much maligned fraternal "system." If anyone bothered to look, no doubt there would be many more. (CW)

How Much Stability In Balance Of Terror!

"Damn Yankee South Carolinians, Georgians, Louisianians, Tennesseans, Arkansans, North Carolinians, Floridians, Texans, Virginians —— "

The Village VOICE

For a serious man, Herman Kahn, author of "On Thermonuclear War," is very funny. Recently he debated "Thermonuclear War as an Instrument of Foreign Policy," (in New York) with Columbia University sociologist Amitai Etzioni, founder of the Gradualist approach to peace. Listening to him, it was difficult to understand why Kahn has been wasting his time on realpolitikai research, first at the Rand Corporation and now at the Hudson Institute, when he would make such a great stand-up comic. Who else can make people laugh about mass annihilation? And what else can you do but laugh, when you hear lines like:

"Assume one bomb drops on New York. Bombing Russia all out is not the preferable response . . . countries just don't drop one bomb out of the blue. The Soviets will notice New York went out. They'll be worried. And with the present system both sides can sit and wait . . . ask why, what, where. You don't have to be trigger-happy."

(Just what are the technological methods of asking and answering these questions, of determining the nature of the attack before responding, and how they are built into the nuclear second-strike deterrent system may have been explained. But Kahn speaks with such quiet, rapid-fire, word-swallowing understatement that at times he is incomprehensible.)

He does use props well. "The caution with which the United States and the Soviet Union treat each other" under the nuclear deterrent system, "the care with which they disturb each other is unprecedented. . . . This might last a great length of time," says Kahn, looking at his watch.

He is a combination of a good-natured, roly-poly, second - strike Santa Claus and a doctor who has developed the perfect bedside manner for the nuclear age. He doesn't alarm, but he doesn't evade either. He discusses all the horrific possibilities and alternatives, but in such a calm, matter of fact manner that you find yourself equally calmly, and with the utmost rationality, weighing the possible effectiveness of the deterrent—which Kahn puts at ten million lives—and of risking partial incineration in order to avoid a universal holocaust.

Etzioni opened the debate by contending that the current nuclear deterrent strategy, checked not by a serious attempt at disarmament but only by arms control, is based on the stabilization of the balance of power, and that "the balance of power can't be stabilized in the long run." He listed the possibilities that threaten its stability: a technical accident involving nuclear weapons, an unauthorized attack, miscalculation by East or West of what the other is willing to risk, a technological breakthrough that could put one side way ahead, or the danger of a small conflict escalating into a slightly larger conflict and finally into nuclear war.

What would happen, he asked, in the event of a serious military confrontation in Berlin, where the available Western divisions are outnumbered by the Communists? Wouldn't we have to use atomic weapons, or would the "Russians send us twelve peace doves? . . . I don't go along with C. P. Snow, who says nuclear war must happen in ten years. I can rest on a much weaker basis," Etzioni conceded. "It might happen —that's enough for me. . . . Some physicists tell us ninety per cent will be alive. With this margin of error, I don't want any of it."

Arms control, he said, is based on the principle of "trying to stabilize something that can't be stabilized." He compared it to balancing two "high piles of arms," keeping them on the same level—as contrasted to disarmament, chopping away at and eventually eliminating the piles. He added that there is one other little problem about arms control as opposed to disarmament—it happens to be "completely unacceptable to the Russians."

Kahn countered Etzioni's charges that the deterrent-plus-arms-control system is unstable, saying, "The risk of mutual annihilation makes the system stable." Within the mutual annihilation framework, he said, "with some confidence one side can push the other side around." The system's stability is further guaranteed because, according to Kahn, "if you agree to it, it means you have a vested interest in it," and neither side would deliberately upset a system in which it has a vested interest. He is not worried about accidental war because nuclear weapons are loaded with double locks and other safety devices. In fact, there are so many locks that Kahn is worried about whether "the system will go at all."

As for unauthorized attack, he assured his listeners that "by and large you can trust these officers . . . The fact that American officers leave the decision process to the government makes them reliable . . . as long as they're in uniform." Professor Etzioni pointed out that General Walker is "the same gentleman who, with the same psychic make-up, was the commander of forces with nuclear weapons."

"The solution," Etzioni insisted, "must get us out of a system in which all are standing fully equipped . . . just waiting for a chance to unbalance the balance of terror, and has to satisfy our chance to salvage our basic values—neither side should be expected to give up basic values. We can't buy physical survival by undermining the things we live for."

As Kahn sees it, what we need to do "is to buy time to work out the settling of disputes," and this can only be done with deterrence, defense, arms control, some initiatives, and many years of containment. "Of course," he concedes, "the system might blow up in the meantime — there's no point in glossing it over."

Etizioni's Gradualist approach rests on the idea that the arms race is a vicious unending cycle that must be broken by an initial gesture of good faith by one side. It favors unilateral initiatives involving little or no risk to reduce international tensions and distrust, and further multilateral concessions to reduce and eventually eliminate arms, under safeguards like inspection, and without eliminating deterrents until it is safe. The trouble Kahn finds with this approach is that "it is predicated on a reaction theory, but the Soviets have arms" not just because we do but "because they want them." The Gradualist approach, Kahn predicts, would lead to "low-quality arms control" based on what he considers unreliable self-restraints like moratoriums. The unilateral-initiative formula would, he contended, lead to "wishful thinking." He regards most of the initiatives Etzioni suggests as "unworkable" and the rest as not very "spectacular."

Etzioni confided that he was little reassured by Kahn's remarks. He proposed that the government "free its consultants from working only on the impossible (disarmament) plan we are offering. "The United States," he charged, "has no intention of going through with the three phases of the plan . . . and I got this from one of the twelve people who got engraved calendars from Kennedy for helping him solve the Cuban crisis. Under what conditions will we go through with it?" he demanded.

Perhaps, he suggested, "the only hope we have of getting out of the arms race is if Russia becomes like us, a reasonable democratic society with a House Un-American Activities Committee . . . Unless the United States will be more competent to compete in an unarmed system," Etzoni maintained, "we won't give up this system . . . because government officials believe Communism will take over Africa, Asia ,and Latin America. And I think they're damn right as long as the U. S. identifies with imperialist powers."

Kahn, however, does not think most government officials are afraid of competition. "The Soviets are not very attractive," he said. "Soviet penetration in Africa is nil. . . . If the Egyptians want to go Communist let them. . . . In a disarmed world we wouldn't care if everyone went Communist." We are not concerned with other countries' political systems, whether they be Communist, Socialist, or Fascist, he asserted, "as long as they don't sign military treaties with the Soviet Union. . . . We don't want to disarm in a world like this," Kahn said, "because there are people with lances and horses" (a reference to an earlier Kahn — Genghis — who made his vast conquests with the horse and the lance). The latter-day Kahn finds the thermonuclear system safer because while horses and lances aren't much of a risk, "nobody believes in nuclear war today. Ten million people is a very big deterrent."

"Any system that tries to abolish conflict is utopian," Etzioni declared. "We must find a system to allow conflicts in ideologies without turning them into violent conflicts. . . . We need a system to contain conflict." It would take a very small, international police force, he said, to control horses and lances.

But Kahn's view of the future is not one of independent nations with conflicting ideologies. It is of a "world empirium," which he predicts is not far away, ruled by the ultimate military victor. "If thermonuclear weapons had not been developed, we would be on that road already. . . . There would have been a war or two — like the Carthaginian Wars, there were three of them — which someone would have won."

He did say in answer to a question, however, that he thought U. S. conversion to a peacetime economy, although it would be opposed by large vested interests that make a living from arms, could be accomplished with less of an upheaval than many people think.

Etzioni closed with a recommendation that the "central theme of the Peace Movement" should be to "create support to enable Kennedy to move for Angola against Portugal," to provide a "broad political base" on which the United States can act progressively in the arena of ideological conflict.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel will print letters of opinion from any member of the University community. Letter should be typewritten and double-spaced, and free of libel or slander. Letters should be turned in to DTH offices, second floor of Graham Memorial, at least three days before publication is desired. Shorter letters will be given priority.

Letters To The Editors

Another Letter From William F. Buckley...

Agent's Stand Repeated

To the Editors,

I am obliged to you for your courtesy in publishing my letter. I was under the impression that you would also publish Mrs. Babcock's letter, considering the publicity you gave to the two letters sent directly to her. I would be most grateful if you would publish the following excerpt from Mrs. Babcock's letter, which deals with matters I'd have brought to the attention of your University if I had known that only my letter would appear:

"I am not intimately aware of the financial problems of The Carolina Forum, though I take it from your letter that your college does not perhaps have the financial resources available to some colleges and universities. I especially regret, under the circumstances, that there is nothing I can do for you about this situation. I have on the other hand, a direct knowledge of the problems Mr. Buckley seeks to cope with in his capacity as the principal officer of National Review, namely, to strive to make up, through public appearances, some part of an annual deficit of over one hundred thousand dollars per year, in order to continue to make the publication available to those who want it for the forty thousand original words it publishes every fortnight, for 35 cents per issue. I do not presume to advise you on the price your Forum should have been prepared to pay for Mr. Buckley's personal services. Mr. Buckley has more than once said that he does not on any account suggest that he is worth $450 per speech; he says only that he will not speak for less. You will note the difference. Mr. Buckley's available lecture dates are filled many months in advance; and in ten years, I have not had a complaint, until your own, from a single one of his sponsors. If you will permit me a word as a lecture agent with some experience: if you believe a professional lecturer composes an original talk every time he lectures, you are more naive than a director of a forum has any business being."

Bill Buckley: Pretty Hands?

To the Editors,

Just read about the tiff with Buckley. After reading his column on Mrs. FDR I wrote the following letter to the Editor of the Charlotte Observer—but they did not publish it. However I notice that Buckley soon got a new picture (on the Observer editorial page.)

"Dear Editor:

"Does Buckley write because he thinks:

"He has pretty hands? Or does he use them mostly to 'prop up the Bucket'?

"Or maybe he thinks it makes him look more unpermissively egalitarian?"

Raleigh Man Defends Prof

To the Editors,

I read tonight (Feb. 1) in the Raleigh Times with great concern the indictment of Dr. J. P. Harland and his classes. I find this truly hard to believe. Dr. Harland and his classes were a real delight to me and have been the same to thousands of others through the years. His knowledge, ability and integrity are unquestionable.

He afforded me the opportunity and provided the vehicle for a wonderful glimpse of the past. Today my children love the stories I tell them of ancient Egypt and the Greek Heroes.

It seems to be pretty generally held today that some background in the classics is of value regardless of the student's eventual field. I can think of no better man from whom to get this base than Dr. Harland.

As far as cheating is concerned, doubtless it has and will go on in his classes and in those of virtually every other professor at some time. There will always be students who cheat and he is bound to get some of them.

As for Walter Dellinger, I think the young man should really take on a bit more stature before he judges his peers. He might at least attend one of the classes before he determines exactly what element of the student body is represented.

Upham Gets Posts With TV Department

Donald B. Upham has been appointed an instructor in the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures for the spring semester. He will serve as director and faculty supervisor of WUNC (FM), and will teach a course in the department.

Upham is former Project Director of the Educational Radio Network and will be in liaison with the network in New York in the continuing efforts to get WUNC (FM) into the live east coast hookup. In 1961 and 1962 he managed a commercial radio station in Cordova, Alaska, and prior to that was associated with WGBH (FM) and WGBH-TV, educational stations in Boston.

Tar Heels, Minus Shaffer, Meet Terps

By ED DUPREE

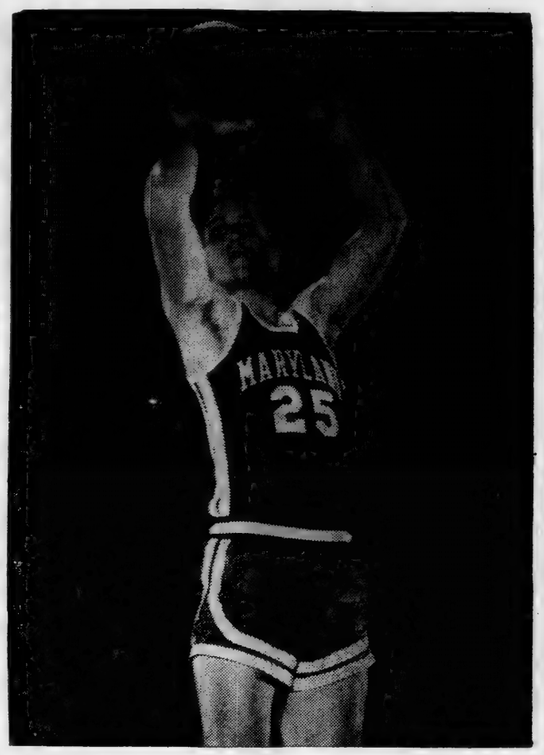
North Carolina will be missing a starter and Maryland will have a new one when the Atlantic Coast Conference foes meet at 8 tonight in Woollen Gym.

Charlie Shaffer, Dean Smith's number two rebounder and the hustle guy for the Tar Heels, is in the infirmary and will not be in the lineup. At 6-3, Shaffer is one of the smallest front-court men in the conference, but he has averaged 9.3 points per game and pulled down 83 rebounds in 12 games.

Shaffer received an arm injury in the Maryland game at College Park in January and has played with a tight bandage since then. Against Duke Saturday he reinjured the arm.

Bill Stasiulatis became scholastically eligible for the Terrapins this week and hit 13 points against Georgetown Monday. He was the fourth leading scorer on last year's Maryland team with a 10.4 mark for 17 games, but lost his eligibility a year ago. Though his scoring mark was not astronomical, he had the best shooting percentage on the team—52.6.

Coach Bud Millikan has also added George Suder and Tom Barrett to his roster. Both became eligible this semester and give the Terps more depth than they had earlier.



Jerry Greenspan leads the College Park men with an 18.8 average, followed by Bob Eicher at 12.1. Other probable starters are Connie Carpenter and Scott Ferguson.

The Terps are 2-5 in the ACC and 6-7 overall, while UNC stands 5-2 and 9-3. Carolina took the College Park contest, 78-56.

Bryan McSweeney, who scored 12 points in his first start of the season against Duke, and Ray Respess will probably start at the forwards tonight.

Billy Cunningham, the ACC's leading rebounder and number two score (20.7), will be at center, with Larry Brown (14.0) and Yogi Poteet (13.3) at the guards.

Saturday the Tar Heels have an important revenge contest against Wake Forest's Demon Deacons in Woollen Gym. Wake handed UNC its first league loss, 78-70, back in January.

JERRY GREENSPAN leads Maryland's Terrapins against Carolina tonight in Woollen Gym. The 6-6 forward is the ACC's fifth leading scorer with an 18.8 average.

Murals Announce Division Winners

Phi Delt, Manly, Physics, and Chi Psi led their respective divisions as the fall semester of Intramural activities came to an end with the completion of the volleyball schedule.

In the Fraternity Blue Division Phi Delta Theta with 412 points has a 38-point lead over DKE, but Beta and SAE are all within striking distance of the leader. Beta is third with 362 points and SAE fourth with 355.

After the top four, another four team race is in the making for the fifth position. Chi Psi with 272 points currently holds it down, but ATO, DU, and Sigma Chi are all within 30 points.

By virtue of their volleyball sweep, the Manly Riverrats overtook Navy and regained the Dormitory division lead. With 435 points. Manly appears to be pressed only by Navy with 421. In third place is Mangum with 372 points and a distant fourth is Everett with 336.

In the Grad Division, Physics also took the volleyball honors and surged in front of Law School for the lead. Scoring 383 points to Law's 338, Physics seems safe at this time. The Peacocks are third with 307 followed by the Dental School and Med School.

Biddies Visit UNC Freshmen

South Carolina's Baby Chicks provide the preliminary opposition for UNC's freshman basketball team tonight.

Coach Ken Rosemond's Tar Babies, 9-1 on the season after their great victory over Duke here Saturday, will be facing a team they have already smashed once.

Early in December, the frosh whipped South Carolina by 17 points, 56-39. That game at Columbia, S. C., saw UNC trailing 16-14 at the half. But the Tar Babies came back in the second half to walk away un-plucked.

Bob Bennett, the 6-8 Pennsylvania center, scored 15 points in that first contest and will carry a 16-point average into tonight's game.

Coach Rosemond now seems set on his lineup. Bennett begins at center with Jimmy Smithwick at one forward. The other three starters are presumably labeled "backcourt men." They are Jimmy Moore, Ray Hassell and Johnny Yokley.

Tip-off tonight is set for 6:00.

5 Named Summer Interns

The Political Science Department announced this week the selection of five undergraduate students to participate as summer interns in the seventh annual Political Science Intern Program at Washington, D. C.

Those selected from UNC were Vance Barron Jr., Gary Blanchard, Stuart Eizenstadt, Bob Spearman and John Ulfelder.

Their selection was announced by Dr. Don Matthews of the Political Science Dept., who coordinated the program to give promising students on-the-job experience.

Dr. Matthews said the 10-week summer program will bring young men in touch with political activity to benefit their own knowledge of the subject, and to prepare them as leaders at UNC.

Vance Barron Jr is a political science major and is an honor student. Barron's appointment is exceptional because he is just a sophomore. According to Dr. Matthews, "For a sophomore to be selected he has to be exceptional, very exceptionally." Barron is the son of Rev. and Mrs. Vance Barron of Chapel Hill.

Garry Blanchard, a junior from St. Petersburg, Fla., is enrolled in the Political Science Honors Program where he made the Dean's list for the fall semester. He is a staff reporter for the Charlotte Observer and area correspondent for several radio stations. He is the son of Mrs. Phyllis C. Blanchard of Portland, Maine.

Another honors candidate in Political Science, Stuart Eizenstadt, also was selected. Eizenstadt, a junior from Atlanta, Ga., also made the Dean's List for the fall semester. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Eizenstadt of Atlanta.

Bob Spearman of Chapel Hill, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Spearman is a junior and is taking a double major in History and Political Science. He was president of his Freshman class and has made straight A's since he enrolled in the University.

John C. Ulfelder, a junior working for honors in the history department, rounds out the list of interns. He has made the Dean's List several times. Ulfelder is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Howard Ulfelder of Worchester, Mass.

Dr. Matthews said the five were chosen on the basis of academic achievement, extra-curricular activities and interest in politics.

He added, "We've got a real good group of boys this year."

UNC was the first Southern university to participate in the "intern" program and has only recently been joined by Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn.

More Arms In Cuba Would Set Off Crisis, JFK Says

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy declared Thursday that the world would be faced with the greatest crisis in history if the United States ever again should detect Soviet offensive missiles in Cuba.

The President made clear that the United States has no evidence of any such weapons on the island now. He conceded there could be missiles concealed in Cuba. But he said they would have to be set up to be used and "we will find them when they do."

"We hope for the best but expect the worst," the President told a televised news conference. "It's very possible the worst may come and we are prepared for it."

But the President scoffed at any idea that the Russians would launch an attack on the United States with the weapons it now has on Cuba. Any such speculation, he said, is to talk about "the willingness of the Soviets to begin a major war."

Kennedy did not think the Soviets would be so rash. He said both the Soviets and the Cubans are aware that the presence of offensive missiles on the island would create "the greatest crisis the world has faced in its history."

At the same time, the President disclosed that the United States is pressing Russia to remove the troops and equipment it now has on the island. He said this is a subject of continuing discussion and he expects clearer information on the outcome "as the days go on."

Without identifying them, the President said that some members of Congress have passed on rumors and reports of a Soviet buildup in Cuba and have refused to say where they got the information. He said he could not carry out U. S. policy on such a basis.

"We have to move with hard intelligence," he said. "We have to know what we are talking about. We cannot base the issue of war and peace on a rumor or report which is not substantiated, or which some member of Congress refused to tell where he heard it."

The President said it may be that some missiles are "hidden away" in Cuba. But he said they have to be put on launching pads to be fired and the United States, with its systematic aerial surveillance, would spot them.

"Quite obviously, if the Soviet Union did that, it would indicate that they were prepared to take the chance of another great encounter between us, with all the dangers," he said.

"I think the Soviet Union is aware and Cuba is aware that we would be back where we were in October, but in a far more concentrated way."

The President deplored the "rumors and speculation" which made it necessary for Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara to "go on TV for two hours" Wednesday to report on the Cuban situation and present information that the government was "rather reluctant" to make public.

He added that he did not know what more the administration could do to convince some members of Congress that the Soviet offensive threat has been removed from Cuba.

Asked what the United States would do if Cuba should "forbid" aerial surveillance by the United States, Kennedy said "We would decide that when it comes up."

President Says NATO Split 'Would Be A Great Mistake'

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy said Thursday it would be "a disaster" for the North Atlantic alliance to be divided in what he said is still a time of peril from communism.

Asked at his news conference about French President Charles de Gaulle's opposition to British entry into the Common Market and to multilateral nuclear arrangements Kennedy noted Europe and North America are still "in stormy seas" of Soviet pressure.

"It would be a mistake for us to be divided when unity is essential," he said. "That must not take place."

It was one of the President's most blunt statements so far regarding the French president who has upset plans for European economic unity and common nuclear defense arrangements.

"We have supported the unification on Europe economically and politically," Kennedy said. He denied charges made recently by some of the European press that the United States would not treat Europe as an "equal partner."

A review of past U. S. policies toward Europe, Kennedy said, would lead to the opposite conclusion.

The President also made these other major points:

—If Soviet offensive weapons should be found in Cuba now that they supposedly have been withdrawn, it would raise a "much greater risk" than it did last fall.

—Despite withdrawal of Russian troops and missiles from Cuba he still regards the Soviet military threat in the Caribbean island as of "serious concern to this government."

—He agrees with a recent report of a Senate subcommittee that the secretary of state should be the principal adviser in formulating national security policy and he and Secretary Dean Rusk see eye-to-eye on this.

—He does not think the bargaining in the protracted New York newspaper strike has been "particularly responsible" but feels it would be difficult to increase the government's role in such situations.

No Negro Athletes Expected

By VANCE BARRON

Carolina will have no Negro athletes on its teams in the near future, but Athletic Director Chuck Erickson has said that no racial bars exisit in the recruiting policies of the UNC athletic association.

The announcement by Maryland coach Tom Nugent last week that Darryl Hill, a Negro transfer from the U. S. Naval Academy, will play on the Maryland football team in 1963 has focused attention on the recruiting policies of the schools of the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Wake Forest College Athletic Director Billy Hildebrand has announced that his school will begin recruiting Negro athletes who meet the standards of Wake Forest College. Wake Forest thus became the first school in the state to announce plans to recruit Negro athletes.

Athletic director Chuck Erickson said earlier in a statement that, "when we recruit we look for good students, good athletes and good campus citizens. We have never given consideration to anything else." Erickson was not available for further comment yesterday.

When asked yesterday whether or not Carolina is considering any Negro prospects, football coach Jim Hickey replied, "We at this time are not in contact with any." Basketball coach Dean Smith said that two Negro boys tried out for the freshman basketball team earlier this year, "one of whom made the first cut. The other boy quit earlier."

Coach Smith went on to say "the University has no policy against Negro students or against recruiting Negro athletes. We have screened a few in the past, but they either failed to meet the academic rquirements or were not selected for other reasons." He added "We go after the best student athletes, period."

Both coaches said that they were in full agreement with the statement of policy by Erickson.

In other schools across the state, State football coach Earle Edwards has said, "We don't have any plans to recruit Negro athletes." Three years ago, Irwin Holmes of Durham, N. C., was co-captain of the State tennis team and the first Negro athlete to compete in ACC

Third Party Is Formed By Dissatisfied SP Men

Search For Missing Student Fails To Produce Any Clues

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

The search continued yesterday for missing graduate student and instructor Richard Lee Brand, but nothing new has turned up, according to the Chapel Hill police and University officials.

Two thorough searches were held yesterday for Brand, a part-time instructor in the French Department.

The searches were entirely voluntary, according to Assistant Dean of Men William Long.

The first search ranged from the Forest Theater vicinity to the area around Gimghoul Castle. The search party consisted of members of Sigma Nu Fraternity and was led by Bill Harris, Assistant to the Dean of Men, who received search experience last summer while working for the State Prisons Department.

The search revealed no clues to Brand's whereabouts.

The second search was under the direct supervision of Arthur J. Beaumont, Campus Officer. This search covered the area from Enringhaus and Craige to the Institute of Government and the wooded areas in the vicinity. The search ended at 5 p.m. and the search party reported they had not found anything.

Beaumont was assisted by Dallas Cameron, also an assistant to the Dean of Men.

The second search was composed of about 30 volunteers. From five to seven Head Resident Advisors were asked to pick five responsible boys from their dorms to aid in the search.

Several of Chief Beaumont's staff also aided in the search. Both voluntary searches were under the direct supervision of Beaumont and were made at the request of the Chapel Hill police.

Chapel Hill Police Chief W. D. Blake said that his department has checked into all the leads they have. This includes all out-of-town leads as well as local ones, the Chief reported.

Detective Howard Pendergraph reported the same story.

"We've checked out all possible leads, and right now the only thing we know is that Brand is missing," Pendergraph said.

Brand, 27, was last seen about 5:45 p.m. Tuesday. At first police and college officials feared that Brand was contemplating suicide because of a note which officials discovered. Police have refused to divulge the exact nature of the note pending further investigation.

However, it was learned that the note made no specific mention of suicide but it did indicate that Brand was depressed and despondent.

Brand's landlady told authorities he has been depressed for the past year.

Some officials believe Brand might have decided to simply "get away from it all" without telling anyone. However, his car is still here and there is no evidence he packed any clothing.

Brand is a former Fulbright scholar and an honorary Woodrow Wilson fellow. He is described as about six feet tall, of slender build and has dark thinning hair.

Independents Make Pledge For Service

A new campus political party has been formed by a group of former Student Party members, according to Dick Ellis, chairman of Student Legislature's Ways and Means committee.

The new party is called the Independent Student Party (ISP). Existent parties are the SP and University Party.

Ellis said the party is beginning a membership drive immediately, and said he expects additional support from "dissatisfied SP members." Ellis was one of the eight members of Student Legislature who announced Wednesday night they were renouncing their SP endorsements.

A "declaration of purpose" issued by the ISP yesterday pledges the new party to "the concepts of service to the student body . . . active representation of students' interests . . . and student autonomy."

Ellis said, "A broad-base student government in the liberal tradition is what we're working for. I want to see an active and progressive legislature that tackles the needs of every student in this university."

The text of the Declaration is as follows:

"We believe that the student body is best served when our community is governed from within, rather than managed from above. We shall work for a climate of student self-government, feeling that such provides more of a stimulus for individual participation and civic experience, and more of an adult atmosphere, than any situation developed by South Building administrators.

"We believe that student government should more fully provide services to the student body; should more fully represent the student interest in dealing with the administration, the faculty, the town and state; and should more fully lead and stimulate the student body in discussion and scrutiny of current issues and intellectual matters.

"We believe in a year round broad-based, active central student government representing all areas of campus, in strengthened local governments with more liaison with the central government, better communication between students and their government, and in improved party politics to achieve these ends.

"We repudiate politics for prestige, obstructionism, control by cliques, and political pettiness. To these goals we pledge ourselves with faith in the individual students of this campus to create a responsible student government."

Britt Says Splinter Group Followed Basic SP Ideals

SP Chairman Robin Britt, in the wake of the departure of several of his key party members, said yesterday that the legislators who withdrew expressed the "same ideals that are the basic concepts of the Student Party."

Mike Lawler, Student Body vice-president and an SP member, said he too was in sympathy with the motives of the group, but that their methods might need re-evaluation.

The Student Party has been and must continue to be the party for the dormitory student," said Britt, "the party exisiting for the liberal tradition, the party seeking to defend against any encroachment upon the rights of the student, and the party that represents the students on this campus. The situation which has resulted stems from a lack of communication between the party and these legislators. The Student Party is being redirected towards these goals and will continue to strive in this direction. The leadership of these eight legislators, if it were re-channeled through the Student Party, could be an important factor in the revitalization of the party and of Student Government."

Lawler said, "Their complaint is a valid and reasoned position. However, because their action involves the welfare of the student community as a whole, their methods of achieving what they espouse must be critically examined.

For example, I think we must distinguish quite clearly between an independent third party and an independent group that will be a liberal coalition with the University Party.

We must distinguish between the Student Party tradition of "liberalism" and the higher tradition of liberalism which has always maintained the right of every position to speak within the party.

At this time I see three possible avenues for this party:

(a) It continues in the idea that it will be a coalition with the University Party's liberal leadership.

(b) It maintains an independent stature based truly on the principles of a Student Party exemplified by Hank Patterson, Bill Harriss most recently.

(c) It consider itself an honest movement which has caused a reaction which will enable its spokesmen to return to the Student Party integrity intact—to a Student Party that has re-evaluated its essential principles and functions.

I do not mean to wave the good old flag or invoke motherhood. But this present situation is intimately related to the future growth of student government and welfare of the student body and these must

Aycock To Tell Of UNC Plans In Talk To Students Monday

By DIANE HILE

Chancellor Aycock will speak to the student body Monday at 8 p.m. on the future plans of UNC. The speech, which will be held in Memorial Hall, is a joint Student Party, University Party and State Affairs Committee project.

The Chancellor will also discuss the future of North Carolina's higher education as shown in Governor Sanford's proposals.

"I appreciate and am encouraged by the interest shown by students in the future of education and of the University," said Aycock in a statement today. This is one of the few speeches he has planned to make before the entire student body.

Robin Britt and Mike Chanin, chairmen of the UP and SP, felt that the Chancellor's speech was "necessary to the students and citizens of the state in order to be aware of the future plans of the educational program."

Republican Responsibility: A Story Of The South

Growing Republican strength in the South has been subjected to considerable crystal-gazing, editorial fence-straddling, and limb-going-out-on. In the latest National Review, publisher William A. Rusher takes crystal ball in hand and sees that the GOP has "a rendezvous with a new idea."

National Review has run several such articles in past years — and their findings (based, of course, on empirical evidence) have, strangely enough, all pointed to the conclusion that the Republican Party has no choice but to run Sen. Barry Goldwater for president in 1964. This article came to the same conclusion: Nelson, Romney and Scranton, no; Barry, si.

Rusher reasons that the Republicans cannot win either New York or California in '64, but still can defeat Kennedy — IF the party captures the 165 electoral votes of southern and border states, along with New England, the Mid-West and Northwest. Therefore, he says, Goldwater is the only logical Republican candidate — since none of the others could win in the conservative South.

* * *

This is all very logical. And simple.

But it runs into another line of reasoning within the Republican party — and this other line says the Republican party is dead if it tries to woo the South, and therefore must nominate a liberal or moderate Republican in '64.

"Eisenhower Republicans" — "Modern Republicans" — whatever they may call themselves, the liberal-moderate wing of the party has controlled the party's presidential nomination since 1940. Such leading Republican conservatives as Robert Taft have been passed over time after time, in favor of lesser-known men such as Wilkie and Dewey. Eisenhower and Nixon continued this pattern of appealing to the conservative and middle-of-the-road voters in Northern and Western cities and the Mid-West farm vote. It was essential for these men to carry New York and California.

Nelson Rockefeller's big calling card is that he is New York's governor and thus has top call on the Empire State's voters. But Kennedy carried the state in 1960 and the chances are good he will do the same in '64. California, likewise, looks strong for the President.

Rusher's reasoning, therefore, that the Republican candidate should look for votes elsewhere is a reasonable one. The resultant question is "where to look?" and the only answer is the South.

* * *

According to Time magazine, Republican candidates for the House of Representatives received 31 per cent of all votes cast in 1962 — as against only 16.3 per cent in 1958. Republicans made strong showings in Alabama, Arkansas, South Carolina and Texas, as well as areas in which they already had shown strength. North Carolina saw the GOP take over one city — Greensboro — in a surprising election.

Seven southern and border states have gone Repubican twice in the past three presidential elections. Rusher thinks that with Goldwater as the candidate the party could sweep the South.

Now this leads to the question of how does the GOP court the South, and then into that most controversial of all public issues, race.

In some parts of the South, Republicans have taken a more intelligent, "let's stand for law and order .. ." position on race relations than the local Democrats. This is particularly true in Georgia, Alabama, and to some extent North Carolina. This has happened because Republican support is coming from the cities, from the rising business-commercial classes — not the wool-hat rural regions. This form of "Republican Respectability" is paying off both in votes and party unity — because the brand of conservatism found in Southern cities is little different than that anywhere else.

The problem of the party moving into a strong position in the South, however, has to do with integration and what to do about the opposing pressures of the Federal government and the rabid segregationist element.

Advance, a leading liberal Republican magazine, recently caused a furor by blasting GOP attempts to get Southern votes by forming coalitions with segregationists. Many Northern Republican and YRC chapters have taken strong liberal stands on integration and refuse to accept the possibility of a Republican platform even tacitly giving in to the South's racial hotheads. Sen. Jacob Javits has added his voice to this warning.

* * *

The Republicans, obviously, are in a fix.

They can play along with the racists — and gain votes in the South — and break the Democratic party stronghold on the region — and then lose votes in all Northern industrial areas, ruining all chances to gain the Presidency.

Or, they can stand for responsible, city-style conservatism in the South — hold onto, and try to increase, their Northern and Western support — and still probably lose the Presidency in '64.

The former could work (reference: the effectiveness with which Kennedy works with Sens. Eastland, Russell and friends), but the latter holds more promise for the future — when Southern cities, with the aid of population changes and reapportionment, come to their proper political importance, Republican Respectability in the cities will truly mean a Two-Party South.

But for the near term, the GOP has no place to turn, and no place to go, and no place to stay, and had just better forget about 1964. (JC)

German Frats: Beer And Alum

(Eds. Note: Mike Folk is a former UNC student studying in Germany on the University's Gottingen scholarship.)

GOTTINGEN, Germany — In German universities the closest parallel to the American fraternity is the Korporation. Korporations are the most strongly criticized, and vigorously defended, student organizations in Germany.

Not all Korporations are alike. There are Korporations with mostly social aims, dedicated mainly to molding the personality and improving the public image of the individual. Some are politically oriented, devoting their efforts to discussion of specific topics ranging from history to economics. Some sing, some are religious in nature, but the one thing they all have in common is lifetime membership.

Naturally the most vigorous members are the students, who are active three or four semesters. These few semesters usually play a significant role in determining the general political, cultural, and social attitudes the student will have for the rest of his life. In this respect the Korporations are similar to their american counterparts.

The lifetime membership is taken quite seriously by both the old timers and the active members. Whenever there is a special celebration the alte Herren, old men, are invited, and if they can make it they usually show up. They take great pleasure in coming back once a year to sing and drink beer in the Ratskeller with the younger folk. The active members don't at all mind putting up with the old men because they are good for laughs and they usually chip in a goodly share of the active member's living expenses. Thus living expenses can actually be cheaper for Korporation members than for other students. Social activities, however, usually more than make up the difference, so that the members end up with a higher than average semester bill.

Members wear an official costume on special occasions and to parties that take place every Friday and Saturday night in some student hangout. It consists of a multi-colored sash which crosses the chest and a beanie-like cap with the same colors as the sash. The first time I saw an aggregation of beanied "brothers" singing and guzzling beer together I was reminded of a New Years Eve party. But the members take their attire quite seriously. Even the old men never show up without their cap and sash.

About half the corporations indulge in fencing, for which they are most strongly criticized. The fencing Korporations are a product of the age of romanticism around the beginning of the nineteenth century, the days when anybody worth his salt took part in a duel now and then. In those early years there were probably more ears lopped off and scalps disected than today because the protective equipment was scanty and the rules were not so safe as they are now. But fighting with swords is still no sissy sport, and an uncomfortable number of Korporation men still sport healthy scars.

An active member must practice every day, and once or twice during his membership he duels with a "brother," often wearing above the neck only nose and eye guards for protection. Most of the duelers come away in one piece, but somehow they usually manage a small hidden scar somewhere around the hairline. "I wasn't careful," one fencer told me modestly as he proudly parted his hair, barely revealing his half inch mark of valor.

To the uninitiated such a risky pastime as sword fighting doesn't seem too appealing, but the members feel quite strongly about their hallowed sport, claiming that it "builds courage and bearing," as well as being a sport of tense excitement and skill. They say that the fight "for keeps" serves to bind members into a genuine brotherhood. Critics reply that courage can't be manufactured, and that most individuals don't really need the comfort and security of such a brotherhood.

Naturally the commonest criticism is that it is just too dangerous. It all boils down to the question of whether one would be an undefiled coward or an earless hero, and about a fourth of the German university men have courageously chosen the latter.

Letters To The Editors

Lawler, Editors Hit By Wedler

Correction

To the Editors:

I appreciate the article you published on January 15 about my stories in the "New Yorker." The heading, however, describes me as "Press Head," which is not correct. Lambert Davis, as Director, is head of The University of North Carolina Press. I especially want to establish this distinction because it is one way of acknowledging that without Mr. Davis' reassurance and support there would not have been either the Poetry Series or the Poetry Circuit, and I even wonder whether there would have been any stories in the "New Yorker."

DTH Headline 'Rank Sensation'

To the Editors:

I wish to clear up a few points about the month-of-November Academic Affairs committee report which was printed in the 15 January issue of the DTH under the heading "Admission Attitude Decidedly Against Negros".

1) Mike Lawler, speaker for the Student Legislature, and co-editors Clotfelter and Wrye printed the report, and decided upon the headline, completely without consulting me in the matter, nor even telling me that it was to be printed.

2) The report, as it was written and appeared, was not intended for "general consumption," since as it stood it was too brief, abstract, and esoteric.

3) By printing the article straightforth, Mssrs. Clotfelter, Wrye and Lawler unknowingly usurped most of the material from a feature article by the Communications Committee regarding the work of the Academic Affairs Committee, which was to be forthcoming. I assure you that this latter article would have been better written and more readable than my brief sketch.

4) The headline was distorted and out of perspective with the total report. . . . It was an example of rank sensationalism, a distortion of the facts for the editor's own purposes, however noble they may be. I stated clearly that "the attitudes of the admissions staff is still subtly yet decidedly against encouraging Negroes to apply for undergraduate study here", which was misquoted to read "Admissions Attitude 'Decidedly Against' Negroes", thus implying that the University's admission policies are discriminatory, which they are not. More significant, this point was clearly subordinate to many other more important ones made in the article.

What I meant to achieve in the first place was a well-placed dig at the sometimes overly conservative actions of our admissions officers, Mssrs. Bernard and French, in regard to their presenting College Day programs at various North Carolina high schools, both Negro and White. Because our committee agreed several years ago that students at many such high schools were not fully informed of the educational opportunities offered by their state university, we have since undertaken to give College Day programs to those high schools which the admissions department cannot visit, whatever the reasons, provided there is sufficient interest. In all fairness, let it be said that the admissions department, as much as any other office, is severely short of funds and personnel, and will become increasingly so as further demands are made of it with the University's expansion.

In conclusion, I would ask simply that the DTH subscribers, mainly students of UNC, be given more accurate and balanced reporting of what is News, which, in this case, if I may suggest it, would be the publication of the above mentioned Communications Committee article in the near future.

Women Ask Penalty End

Enclosed is a copy of a letter the local branch of Women's International League for Peace and Freedom has sent Governor Sanford. We shall appreciate your putting it in the Letters to the Editor column of The Tar Heel at an early date. We hope the 1963 Legislature will pass a bill to abolish capital punishment in North Carolina. Several bills have been presented formerly which have died in committee.

Mrs. Wayne Bowers,
Chairman
Chapel Hill — Durham
Branch WILPF

* * *

The Honorable Terry Sanford
Governor of North Carolina
Raleigh, North Carolina

Dear Governor Sanford:

At Christmas time you extended executive clemency to two young men who had received the death sentence and commuted their sentences to life imprisonment. For this action the Chapel Hill-Durham Branch of Women's International League for Peace and Freedom commends you. We believe that executive clemency is not the real answer to the problem of the death sentence, however, and we hope the North Carolina Legislature, which is about to convene, will consider and pass a bill which will abolish capital punishment in North Carolina.

We subscribe to the principle stated below, believing that it holds for North Carolina and all States. This appeal was sent from Geneva, Switzerland, by the the chairman and two vice-chairmen of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom to the heads of all governments. Geneva is the international headquarters of the organization.

"The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom has, since its inception at The Hague in 1915, considered the right to life as a fundamental human right, and asserts that no authority is entitled to sentence a human being to death.

"The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom holds that this view is in full agreement with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which clearly point out that maintenance of peace is inseparably connected with respect for life and the dignity and worth of man.

"Capital punishment violates this principle and contributes to the brutalization of the mind of man.

"The Women's International League for Peace and freedom holds that a State which considers an act of murder by a citizen to be a capital crime ought not to make itself guilty of taking life.

"A State which desires to establish peace must abolish capital punishment as a means of punishing crime."

Army Chorus Sings Here Tomorrow

The United States Army Chorus will perform here Saturday night at 8:00 in Memorial Hall. The program, arranged by Graham Memorial, will be open to the public.

The Chorus was established in 1956 by the Secretary of the Army and the Army's Chief of Staff as the vocal equivalent to the U. S. Army Band. It is under the direction of Major Samuel Loboda.

All members are able soloists and meet top professional standards. More than 97% of the Chorus members have studied at one or more Universities, Colleges or Conservatories. Former Chorus members may be found from the Metropolitan Opera to England's Old Vic Company.

The Chorus has appeared traditionally for the White House and for holiday observances of the United States Senate. It has probably the world's most exclusive "fan club."

Next month it will make its third appearance at Carnegie Hall. The Chorus has also been active in Civil War Centennial ceremonies.

Faculty Briefs

"THE ENDURING MONUMENT" is the title of a new book on renaissance literature and literary criticism just published by the UNC Press. Author of the book is Associate Professor of English O. B. Hardison Jr.

Professor Hardison subtitles his book "A Study of the Idea of Praise in Renaissance Literary Theory and Practice." In his book, Professor Hardison attempts to study specific critical beliefs in representative 16th century poems, dramas and prose works. To professor Hardison, the dominant 16th century theory of poetry is the didactic theory and it is this theory which he examines in his book.

DR. HARVEY E. LEHMAN, professor of zoology, has been selected by Prentis-Hall publishers to write one of a series on advanced biology.

Dr. Lehman's book will be concerned with morphogenesis, which involves the chemical and structural changes that occur during embryonic development which are associated with organ formation.

Lehman is one of eight authors presently taking part in a three-day editorial conference in New York to decide the nature of all eight volumes. Dr. Lehman is the guest of Prentice-Hall publishers.

ROBERT L. HILLIARD, assistant professor of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, has been elected an honorary member of Delta Sigma Rho, national debate honor society, it was announced today by Donald K. Springen, UNC instructor in English and faculty advisor to the UNC Chapter of Delta Sigma Rho.

Dr. Hilliard, currently on leave from UNC to serve as an educational television consultant for New York State, was recognized by the honor society for his special contributions to the field of debating. The society recognized him especially for the intercollegiate debate series, "Debate Tonight," which he created, produced and directed on WUNC-TV last year. Dr. Springen and the UNC Debate team served as hosts for the visiting teams during the series.

NICHOLSON B. ADAMS, professor of Spanish in the Department of Romance Languages, has just been elected a Corresponding Member of the Hispanic Society of America.

Senate Committee Says Arms Are Still In Cuba

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — Two members of the Senate Preparedness subcommittee said Thursday after a two-day briefing by CIA Director John A. McCone that Soviet troops and arms in Cuba still pose a military threat to the American hemisphere.

Both Chairman John C. Stennis, D-Miss., and Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo., used identical language to summarize their view: "There has been no evidence of a lessening military threat" from Russian forces in Cuba.

McCone spent a total of four hours Wednesday and Thursday testifying before the subcommittee on the Cuban situation. Both he and Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara said in public statements Wednesday that they are convinced beyond reasonable doubt that the Russians do not have offensive weapons in Cuba any more.

Stennis said that assuming the Russians withdrew their bombers and missiles during last October's crisis, there has been "no evidence of any general withdrawal."

He said there have been some "rotation and replacement" among Soviet troops on the island but questioned why the Kremlin is maintaining its "tremendous" force there.

Doesn't Agree

Stennis told newsmen: "This idea of a lessening military threat, I don't agree with that at all."

Sen. Kenneth B. Keating, R-N.Y., one of the GOP critics of the administration's Cuba policy, charged in a statement that "the defense department Wednesday sought to downgrade the extent and danger of present Soviet activities in Cuba."

He contended that the McCone data verifies his own estimate that the Soviet bastion in Cuba is ten times as strong as it was last July. McCone, Keating said, stated "that there are over ten times as many troops."

McNamara in his nationally televised report to the nation said there is evidence that the Soviets withdrew 5,000 troops and technicians along with their missiles and bombers. He said there are now 17,000 Russians in Cuba formed into four combat battalions along with a variety of arms which he described as defensive.

Further Problems

In this connection, Symington told newsmen that "if this major Soviet military buildup is allowed to remain in Cuba, it can only result in further Communist problems in this hemisphere."

Stennis said no further hearings have been scheduled for the immediate future by his Senate subcommittee. But he added that McCone doubtless will return after military witnesses are heard.

The public statements by McNamara and McCone did not quiet the spate of congressional comment on the Cuban situation.

Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois said McNamara's two-hour television report actually demonstrated that Cuba still is a bristling Soviet base threatening the Americas.

On the other hand, Sen. Leverett Saltonstall, R-Mass., said "public reaction will undoubtedly be one of greater confidence." Sen. Thomas Kuchel, R-Calif., said he thought McNamara was "quite convincing."

have precedence in the minds of the people involved in the present political situation."

Dick Ellis, on of the eight legislators who broke away is chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in Student Government. Ellis said he believes the SP has been failing for the past year and a half in its "responsibility to represent the best interests of the greatest number of people on campus. My concept of student government," said Dick, "cannot abide with SP failure; therefore, I feel that I must declare my independence. We all realize that this may possibly lead to a one-party system on campus and because of our concern for student government I am certain that we will do what is necessary to maintain an active political system."

Charles Cooper, chairman of the Judicial committee, said he believes that the controversy might improve SP activity and make leaders more responsible to the necessity of upholding its traditional leadership.

Ford Rowan, Parliamentarian in Student Government defined the problems as matters of principle rather than inactivity. "SP leadership in interested in small, restricted government," said Rowan, "It no longer regards student government as a leadership force expressing student beliefs.

Bob Spearman, UP minority leader, stated that the split between factions of SP had been noticable over the past year. If a new party were to come into existence, Spearman stated, any contribution by this party to the betterment of student government would be welcomed.

Mike Chanin, Chairman of UP, said, "I have sensed the true failure of SP for some time. I feel that they have stopped working for the growth and strengthening of student government and worked only for the political aims of their party.

Lead Man In Rhino Likes Its Realism

Larry Warner has a problem, but as an actor its the kind of problem he likes.

The 23-year-old Rocky Mount native is playing Berenger, the male lead, in The Carolina Playmakers tour production of "Rhinoceros," running at the Playmakers Theatre here Feb. 13-17. Leading roles aren't new to the talented actor, but this type of role is.

"Berenger is the first completely realistic role I've ever played," Warner admits, "and it comes closer to being me than anything else I've done."

This is even more unusual considering his past record. The University of North Caroloina actor has played over 30 roles with The Carolina Playmakers and, earlier, with the Duke Players while he was a language major at Duke.

But most of these roles were "character" parts, not "true-to-life" as Berenger is. Yet, with the first performance of the comedy-satire almost two weeks away, Berenger is already one of Warner's favorite roles.

"I like this role because Berenger is caught in a situation that most of us experience in life: the feeling of being alone in a crowd."

Explaining the style in which Eugene Ionesco wrote "Rhinoceros" and his other plays, Warner pointed out that "these 'absurd' plays not only have a serious meaning, but a highly comic method of presenting it. However, for the actor, it is a very difficult business because so few of the lines follow a logical sequence."

Warner explains his enjoyment of acting very simply. "I enjoy it for the pleasure that everyone experiences from childhood — the pleasure of pretending."

Archery Meet To Be Held Saturday

On February 9, the Annual Carolina Open Archery Tournament will be held in Woollen Gym. The UNC Outing Club will be host to this statewide meet, open to all who wish to participate.

Shooting will begin at 12:00 noon and will consist of one Chicago Round (96 arrows at 20 yds. on a 16-inch target face). There will be divisions for Men's Instinctive and Freestyle, and Women's Instinctive and Freestyle.

Trophies and plaques will be awarded for the first three places in all divisions.

Campus Chest Plans Many Big Events

An auction at Gerrard Hall, a campus carnival for everyone's enjoyment, good looking girls and more.

That's how the 1963 Campus Chest Drive looks in its early stages.

Again this year, the goal for the drive, the only recognized charity on campus, is $6,000.

This will be met by personal contributions, collections received at the auction and the carnival itself.

There are five major charities which receive benefits from the Campus Chest Drive. The names of these organizations will be released at a later date.

The exact date of the carnival, the real highlite of the drive, has not been determined yet, but Al Roper and Van Oatts, co-chairmen of the Chest, promise that this one will be the best yet.

Tar Heels Stop Maryland's Terps, 82-68

Cunningham-Brown Set Scoring Pace

By ED DUPREE

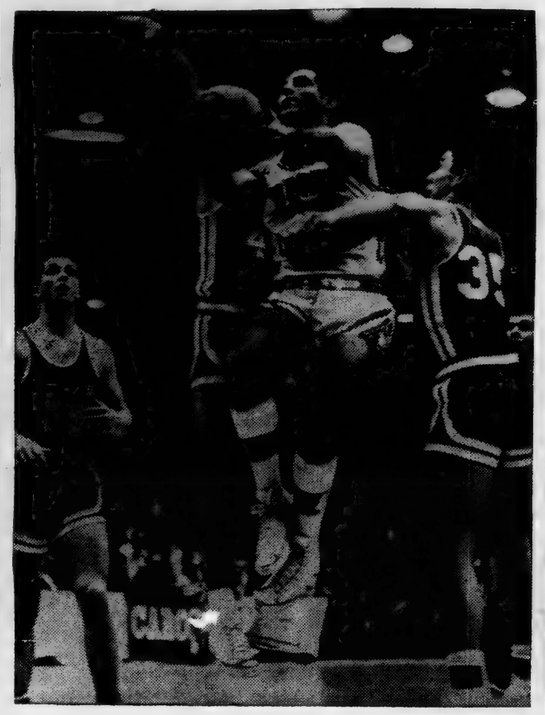
North Carolina's Tar Heels returned to their winning ways last night with an easy 82-68 victory over Maryland's Terps in Woollen Gym.

Billy Cunningham and Larry Brown combined for 53 points as the Tar Heels hit an even 50 per cent of their shots. Cunningham hit 13 of 22 field goals for 33 points —matching his season's high—and Brown hit 9 of 16 for 20 points. Yogi Poteet was the only other Tar Heel in double figures with 14.

Phil Carlson led Maryland with 16 points, followed by Bill Stasiulatis with 15, Jerry Greenspan with 14 and Sam McWilliams with 10.

The Tar Heels wasted little time building up a good lead, scoring 20 points in the first seven minutes of the game. During that time the visitors hit only two field goals and found themselves down 20-8

Larry Brown started the charge with a soft jumper, then Bill Stasiulatis tied it for the last time. Cunningham dropped in a lay-up and a jumper, Yogi Poteet hit another lay-up, then Cunningham added two more points. Sam McWilliams hit Maryland's second field goal and made it 10-4.



Brown hit three lay-ups and a foul shot, Cunningham a foul shot, Poteet a jumper and the trio was personally responsible for the first 20 points. Cunningham added four more points and Brown three to make it 27-15, then a fourth Tar Heel—Bryan McSweeney — broke the monoploy with a tap-in.

Carolina hit a blistering 57.1 per cent of its field goals in the first 20 minutes with Cunningham's 7 of 9 and 17 points and Brown's 7 of 11 and 16 points setting the pace.

The pace bogged down early in the second half and UNC saw its 15-31 halftime lead cut to six points in six minutes, 53-47. But then the home team went wild again and scored 13 points while the Terrapins were standing still.

Stasiulatis's field goal at the 13:43 mark, which narrowed the Tar Heel lead to six points, was the only Maryland two-pointer for six and a half minutes. By the time Connie Carpenter hit another, the Tar Heels held an unsurmountable lead of 71-52.

During that time the Tar Heels capitalized on three-point plays. Cunningham hit a lay-up and a foul shot to make it 56-47, Poteet added a jumper, McSweeney hit a jumper and then stole the ball for two more. He made it another three-point play by sinking his foul shot. Cunningham followed with a three-pointer to make it 66-47.

Freshman Team Wins 10th, 59-55

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

By CURRY KIRKPATRCK

UNC's freshmen, minus their two top rebounders for the final nine minutes, put down South Carolina's determined bid for an upset here last night, 59-55.

Having lost Bob Bennett and Jimmy Smithwick by way of fouls midway through the final period, the Tar Babies had to hustle for everything they got in recording their tenth win against a single loss.

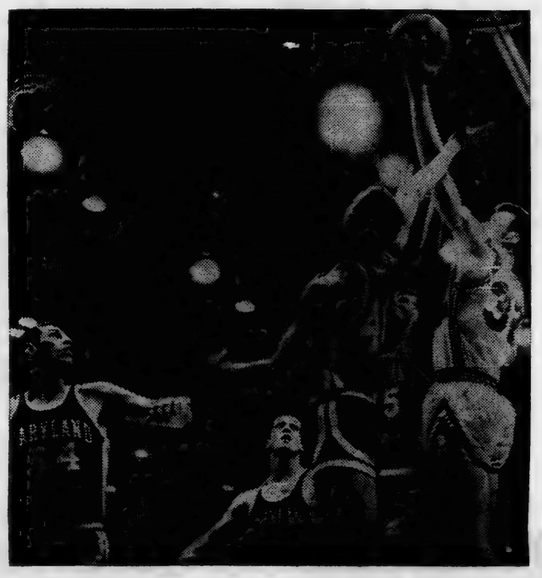
South Carolina chopped away at a 12 point deficit after Bennett and Smithwick left, and finally tied the score at 51 on John Schroeder's two free throws with 4:53 remaining.

Coach Ken Rosemond then sent in his little fireman Mike Iannarella, and the 5-9 Pennsylvanian helped UNC slow down the play for easy buckets in the waning minutes.

Ray Hassell hit two all-alone layups on passes from Iannarella to give UNC a four point lead with 3:05 left. Bill Henderson cut the margin back to two with a pair of foul shots, but Jimmy Moore scored on a layup to ice it for Carolina. Schroeder and Moore traded buckets in the last few seconds.

South Carolina trailed by 10 much of the first half, but when Bennett was benched with his third foul, the Biddies began to reduce the margin.

Down 34-24 with 3:10 left in the first half, the USC freshmen ran up seven straight points before Carolina's Moore rebounded his own missed shot at the 20-minute buzzer for the 36-31 UNC lead.



Moore had his best night of the year point-wise. The 6-1 Wilmington native hit eight of 13 from the field and three of four foul shots for 19 points. He got 15 of those in the opening half.

Bennett and Smithwick also made major contributions to the UNC cause. Bennett had 13 points and Smithwick, 11.

Scoring:

UNC (59) — Bennett 13, Smithwick 11, Yokley 6, Hassell 6, Moore 19, Harrison 2, Johnson 2, Harrington 0, Iannarella 0.

USC (55) — Tonelli 6, Henderson 6, Dickson 7, White 21, Schroeder 10, Wood 5.

Freshman Swimming Team Wins Fifth Straight Meet

By BILLY HATFIELD

North Carolina's unbeaten freshman swimming team came from behind Saturday and captured its fifth straight victory against Needham Broughton High School of Raleigh, 48-46.

Coach Alan Gentry's men had won their fourth meet on January 16, prior to the semester exam break, over East Carolina's frosh, 54-41.

Gentry's lineup was limited Saturday because of the vacation break, but he worked his men to their full potential and they came from behind in the last event to win. The frosh coach didn't enter a team in the 200-yard medley relay, saving his men for more important events.

They responded with six first places in the 50-yard freestyle, 200-yard freestyle, 200-yard individual medley, 100-yard butterfly, 100-yard breaststroke and diving events. Rick Forum equaled his earlier record breaking time of 1:07.4 in the 100-yard breaststroke.

Forum set another school record in the East Carolina meet, swimming the 200-yard breaststroke in 2:31.2. His performance bettered the school record set by Maurice Davidson in 1960 by two seconds.

Tom Murphey tied a UNC freshman record in the ECC meet with a 2:13.9 time in the 200-yard butterfly. Murphy equaled Fred Lipp's earlier performance this season.

WAKE FOREST TICKETS

400 tickets are still available to students for Saturday's basketball game with Wake Forest. The game starts at 2 p.m. and will be televised regionally.

13 Cases Go Before Council; 9 Suspended; 2 Probations; Two Get Not Guilty Verdict

The Men's Honor Council has handled 13 csaes in the last two weeks, and three others are yet to be tried. A review of the action taken in recent cases was released yesterday by the Honor Council.

The highly-publicized final examination in Archaeology 85 resulted in seven cases before the Men's Council during the semester break, and three more are pending. Six defendants were suspended from school and another was found not guilty of cheating.

In six other cases the Council suspended three students for honor code violations, put two others on probation, and returned one not-guilty verdict. Four of the nine suspended students were granted appeals by the Dean of Men, and the Student-Faculty Review Board over-ruled the Council in one case.

The first Archaeology case concerned two seniors who were turned in by a fraternity brother. Their papers were similar and both pleaded guilty to cheating. They were suspended from school for a period of a full academic semester.

Four other students were also suspended from school after being turned in by a fellow student who discovered them taking the Archaeology final examination in their rooms. The four were present in the same room on at least one occasion during the test, but because of circumstances peculiar to the case, they were tried in pairs.

The first two admitted that they had taken the examination to their room and had collaborated at that time. They stated that they then went briefly to the room of one of the other convicted students and returned to the examination. Their original plea of not guilty was repudiated the day before the trial, and a sentence of suspension for a semester was returned by the Council. A third student whose paper was similar to that of the two defendants was found not guilty because there was no evidence to indicate that he was seated near them during the examination or that he had ever left the classroom.

The other pair was also found guilty but received a stiffer penalty of supension for two full academic semesters. Their plea was not guilty, and the verdict and sentence were upheld by the review board. The defendants stated that when they returned to their dormitory rooms to complete the final exam, they were accompanied by two classmates with whom they were not acquainted but who needed a convenient place to work because of the crowded conditions in the classroom. The two students were not the defendants in the previous case and their identities were not revealed. The convicted pair also said that no other students completed the test in their room and that no cheating took place.

Four witnesses, however, contradicted their testimony. Two definitely stated that they heard an exchange of answers taking place although a wall separated them from the defendants. All four said that they saw several students besides the defendants in the room. In returning the stiffer sentence the Council noted the inability of the defendants to explain the several contradictions.

The Student-Faculty Review Board ruled Tuesday night that the cheating conviction of a freshman be annulled and a verdict of not guilty rendered. Four instances of similarities on the final examination had been revealed, but a majority of the class had also been mistaken on three of them. The fourth similarity concerned a misspelling but appeared to be not too far out of the ordinary. The teacher stated that he felt that no cheating had taken place, and the student whose paper was allegedly copied said that he did not notice anyone looking upon his quiz.

The avenue of appeal is open to all students found guilty before a judicial body but notice must be made to the Dean of Men or the Dean of Women within seventy-two hours after conviction.

Opportunity to appeal upon a technical point in the trial procedure was refused by a graduate student who was suspended for a semester after pleading guilty to plagiarism. The student constitution specifies that the presence of two graduate non-voting members is required at proceedings in which a graduate student is the defendant. None were present and an appeal was granted by Dean Long; but the student decided not to exercise his right to a new trial before the review board.

In a case which also involved civil proceedings, the Men's Council delivered a sentence of definite probation for a semester. The convicted student pleaded guilty to cashing a money order which was not his own. Due to mitigating circumstances the lighter penalty was given instead of the usual suspension. The defendant waited for over a month before signing a false name to the order, and then he also included his own. He dropped out of school during the fall semester and stated that concern over this matter as well as academic difficulties caused the decision. He turned himself in to the attorney general's staff.

Three final cheating cases resulted in two convictions and one verdict of not guilty. A freshman who pleaded guilty to plagiarism on a book report and an upperclassman who admitted cheating on an hour quiz both received penalties of definite suspension for a full academic semester dating from the day of the trial. The final alleged honor code violation occurred when a freshman by his own admission, glanced at another student's work during an examination. However, he protested that he received no aid but was merely curious. Evidence indicated that no cheating took place because different methods were employed in answering the questions involved, and the Council ruled in the defendant's favor.

Committee Will Plug Education

By BILL McALLISTER

The Carolina State Affairs Committee has agreed to undertake an educational campaign to "tell the people of North Carolina of the future needs of our state's higher-education system."

Student Body President Mike Lawler, who suggested the program, told committee members that the campaign "will serve a vital need in our state today."

"The people of North Carolina are faced with the complex task of understanding and evaluating the many proposals being made today about higher-education," he said. "Your task will be the hard one of helping them to understand these suggestions.

"It is most important," Lawler said, "that they realize how pressing the demands are that will be made on our colleges and universities in the near future.

"We are already faced with the job of educating more students than we have adequate facilities for. And the prospects for the coming years do not make the future look much brighter."

First proposals for the new program call for creation of a speakers' bureau to furnish speakers for community civic clubs and an editorial committee to furnish newspapers with information about the college expansion programs.

Plans for increasing the functions of the various units of the Consolidated University and a proposal that would lead to the establishment of a series of junior community colleges are expected to be discussed by the General Assembly this year.

In addition to the education campaign, the State Affairs Committee will continue to retain its present function of lobbying with the Legislature for improvments at Carolina. Two items the committee is seeking from the Assembly, an addition to Woollen Gymnasium and a combined student union-undergraduate library, were included in the budget Governor Sanford presented Friday.

Lawler told the committee meeting in Graham Memorial Thursday night that the expansion programs, especially the community college system, should not hurt the future of Carolina. "If anything," he said, "it should help the University by allowing it to accept more of the better high school graduates and by training the qualified graduates of the proposed junior colleges."

The committee's new campaign, he said, will involve "a lot of hard work. It's so much that we had thought of creating a separate committee to handle the job.

"It is possible that we will have to make another committee to handle the work next year," he added.

Proposals are already in the works for increasing the size of the committee. Bill Hoyle of Greensboro, chairman of the group, will supervise both the committee's lobbying and educational campaign.

He said that the committee's pamphlet showing the need for the buildings being requested by the committee this year has been published and will soon be presented to members of the Assembly.

Anti-Red Officers Claim Victory After Iraq Revolt

But Heavy Fighting Continues

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Anti-Communist officers led by a 35-year-old paratrooper revolted in Iraq Friday and claimed to have overthrown the government and killed Premier Abdel Karim Kassem. But "very heavy fighting" was reported coontinuing in Baghdad Friday night and Kassem's fate was still a mystery.

Rebel broadcasts said the insurgent army and air force "free officers" struck at Baghdad in a dawn coup, bombing and straffing the capital with Soviet-built MIG aircraft Kassem had obtained from Russia. The broadcasts said the premier was buried under the rubble of his defense ministry.

Mustafa Heads Revolution

The insurgent radio said Brig. Abdel Karim Mustafa, young paratroop officer sacked by Kassem three years ago, was installed as head of a Revolutionary command that was promptly hailed by Cairo.

In Washington the U. S. State Department said the Baghdad uprising apparently was anti-Communist and probably was touched off by Kassem's recent appointment of a number of Communists as high military officers.

A private telephone call that got through the communications blackout to the Lebanese capital of Beirut said fighting flared anew Friday night around the Defense Ministry, traditional headquarters of Kassem which had been heavily attacked by rebel aircraft.

Baghdad radio said revolutionary forces had to storm the Defense Ministry Friday evening to flush out 600 stoutly-resisting loyalists troops.

Troops Surrender

The broadcast said all the defending troops had surrendered but it made no mention of Kassem, asceuc 49-year-old leador who himself seized power in a bloody 1958 coup.

A rebel communique broadcast earlier Friday had indicated that Kassem's body had been strung up in the streets for the public to see. But later reports to Beirut indicated he might still be alive.

'Jonathan Bean' Author To Deliver Address Here

"Pitfalls and Problems of a College News Bureau Officer" is the title of remarks to be delivered by Russell Brantley, Wake Forest College news bureau director, at the southern district convention of the American College Public Relations Association, to be held at UNC Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Feb. 14-16.

Brantley, the author of "The Education of Jonathan Beam," will speak in a panel discussion Saturday, Feb. 16 at 11 a.m. in Peabody Hall.

The title of the panel is "Meet the Press Agent." Cletis Pride, West Virginia University news bureau director, is moderator. Public information officers will discuss common problems of news gathering on campuses, and dissemination of the news to public news media.

Among others scheduled to speak is Rudolph Pate, associate director for development of the Southern Regional Educational Board in Atlanta, Ga., and former news bureau director at N. C. State College. Pate will speak on "What Kind of Training and Experience is Required in 1963 for the Position of College and University Public Information Officer."

Brand Still Missing, No New Leads Yet

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

An air of mystery still remains concerning the whereabouts of graduate student Richard Lee Brand whose disappearance Tuesday has set off a state-wide alert, a thorough search of the campus and several out-of-state investigations.

Chapel Hill police said yesterday they have checked out every lead they have received, but were not able to turn up anything new.

Police detective Howard Pendergraph reported, "We have checked out all leads and have covered all the areas where we thought he might be. Right now, we are just about at a standstill until we get some new leads."

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson said yesterday, "I wish I had good news to report. He has just disappeared."

Dean of Men William Long reported, "Things were just like they were yesterday. We have nothing new—nothing." And Chancellor William Aycock said, "I just hope he shows up."

Brand, who was described as an "excellent" teacher, was working on his Ph.D. while he was serving as a part-time instructor in the French Department.

The 27-year-old graduate student was last seen about 5:45 p.m. Tuesday. Police later disclosed that they had possession of a note which was written by Brand. The exact nature of the note was not revealed by police, but it was reported that it indicated Brand was in a despondent and depressed mood.

Dramatique Sets Tryouts Tuesday

Petite Dramatique will present a bill of three one-act plays as its first Spring production. Two of the plays, The Sandbox and Zoo Story, were written by Edward Albee, well-known as the author of the current Broadway success, Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? The third, Voices on the River, is an original script written by Harry Callahan, a graduate student at UNC.

Auditions will be held for these plays at Graham Memorial on Tuesday, Feb. 12 at 4-6 p.m. and 8-10 p.m. Participation is open to the entire student body and the casts require several men and women.

This production will be directed by Richard King, a graduate student in Dramatic Arts. The three one-acts will be staged in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial on March 7, 8, 9. This selection of plays promises to be a challenging adventure for actor, technician, and audience.

All interested students are encouraged to participate.

The Communications Committee will meet Monday, Feb. 11 at 5 p.m. in the Woodhouse Room at G.M. All members are urged to attend.

MASQUERADE BALL

The Cosmopolitan Club will give a semi-formal Masquerade Ball Saturday night at the Chapel Hill Country Club. Tickets are $2.50 per couple and may be obtained from Maria Elena Bravo at 968-9132.

FLU SHOTS

Flu shots are being given at the student Infirmary from 9 to 11:30 a.m. and from 2 to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

MODELS NEEDED

Men and women are needed to pose for life drawing class from 2-4 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Call the Art Department, Ackland Building, 967-7083 or inquire at Art Department Office, room 106 Ackland.

FOUND

One pair of men's prescription glasses, black frames, near the Episcopal Church Dec. 26. Can be picked up in the parish office of the church.

ARMY CHORUS

The United States Army Chorus will perform in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. Saturday. Conducted by Major Samuel Loboda, the chorus's performance is a G.M. event open free to student and faculty.

ORPHANAGE COMMITTEE

The YM-YWCA Orphanage Committee will resume its weekly trips to Raleigh at 2 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 10. Rides will leave from Y-Court at that time.

PANHELL TO MEET

The Panhellenic Council is collecting men's, women's and children's clothing, fiction books, jewelry, and other personal articles for Dix Hill.

Collection boxes have been placed in dorms, fraternity and sorority houses. The boxes will be collected Sunday and Monday.

The Panhellenic Council asks everyone's co-operation in working for "a worthy cause."

TRUSTEE HOSTESSES

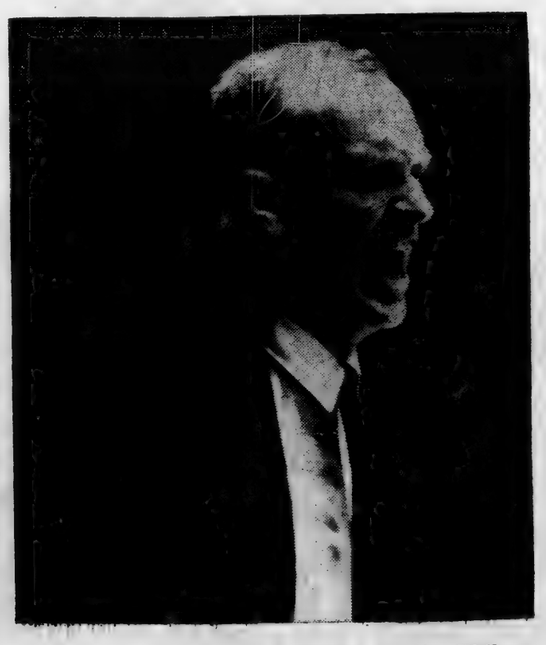
Hostesses for the Trustee's visit will meet at 7:30 p.m. on Feb. 12 in 08 Gardner. All members are urged to be prompt and bring pen and paper. Women students who have not signed up to be hostesses are also invited.

GM Travel-Adventure Series Starts Monday

The Graham Memorial Travel-Adventure Series will start Monday night with the film "Gold Against the Sky."

In "Gold Against the Sky," the beauty of Mexico—the ancient empires of the Zapotecs and the Tatascans, the ruins of Monte Alban and Mitla—comes to life through Mr. Neil Douglas' photography and narration. Douglas, writer, explorer and photographer, has appeared on the lecture platform more than 8,000 times. A bullfight, the scenes of Popocatepetl and Paricutin are added as part of the colorful show.

On Feb. 25, Stanton Waterman will show his color films of underwater archaeology showing the discovery and salvage of a 3,000 year old ship.



The two other programs in the series are "Calvacade of South America," with Charles Perry Weimer, on March 4; and "From Cairo to Capetown," with Captain Carl von Hoffman, on March 18.

All performances will be in Carroll Hall at 8 p.m. Admission is $2.50 for the series of four programs, or $1.00 each for individual programs.

Wake Forest Basketball Coach Horace "Bones" McKinney, often termed one of the most colorful and excitable figures in the game, is shown having some of his tenser moments during this year's first Wake Forest-Carolina bout in Winston-Salem. These photos were taken during the first half of that game while the Tar Heels held the lead. Later Wake pulled ahead and went on to win the game. McKinney and his Deamon Deacons travel to Chapel Hill this afternoon to meet the Tar Heels again at 2 in Woollen Gym, and if Coach Dean Smith and his team have their way, these scenes will be repeated many times.

The Rest, Delightfully: "UNC At Raleigh"

Suffix is all we lend,
No more may we append;
As now my violent friend,
The battle nears its end.
As to much fame they claim,
Their name remains the same.
Oh praise to that great name.
Ah yes, that's fine and great.
Of course, there's more to know,
There's yet an ugly blow.
For "State" though that they be,
The rest, delightfully,
Says "UNC at Raleigh."

* * *

Think not we chide in glee,
Grave matter this must be.
For just a while ago,
The name change caused much woe.
Though why we do not know.
But yet, like all the rest,
Our patience stood the test.
Bad things, to great degree,
Said "State" of UNC.
'You bums' so loud they cried,
Such charge, how best denied?
Ignore the lot? We tried.
And now no tempers flare
So comment, brief, we dare.

* * *

You've got your name, your pride;
And none was e'r denied.
So now let's go from here,
To heights not reached this year.
This system, it must be,
If grow will UNC.
Sure, that much you must see.
Though suffix we append,
No harm do we intend.
Consolidate we must,
So let's begin with trust.
And if you dislike us,
We'll never board a bus,
The "Hill" is fine for us.

* * *

Lest some of the more serious and concerned individuals involved in the squabble over the proposed name-change think we make light of an issue not best handled in such a manner we would like to direct their attention to a short quotation which seems to best approach an understanding which we would like to presuppose as existing on both sides of the family. It is a "family" argument isn't it?

We would like to think so and as such, we find the following extremely apropos:

"The world's greatest need . . . is mutual confidence. No human being ever knows all the secrets of another's heart. Yet there is enough confidence between mother and child husband and wife buyer and seller to make social life a practical possibility. Confidence may be risky, but it is nothing like so risky as mistrust."

The speaker was Arnold Toynbee. His topic of concern could well have been the proposed consolidation of three fine branches of one great university. (CW)

Education: 'Compelling Forces For Change'

The pace of change in human relationships has enormously accelerated in recent years. Prior to the first World War the attention of the citizens of this country was focused upon the major problems of developing a continent and meeting the complex economic and social problems arising from a vigorous and expanding population. The first World War forced Americans to consider the relationship of this Continent to the older civilizations in other parts of the world. The second World War brought many new problems, not the least of which was the enormous expansion of the influence of science and technology upon human affairs. This in turn placed many new and difficult problems upon our system of public education. The patterns of the past no longer met the demands of the present. The need for an educated citizenry became compelling, for a state and a nation that failed to understand the forces that were shaping the future could not maintain itself in the fiercely competitive struggle for the minds of men.

Coupled with the impact of science and technology and the vast new power that new knowledge had placed in the hands of mankind was the rapid expension of our population. This imposed additional problems upon our system of education. Not only must education differ in kind from that of the past, but it must be extended to reach a much larger proportion of our total population.

GOVERNOR'S COMMISSION ON EDUCATION BEYOND THE HIGH SCHOOL

North Carolina was not isolated from these great changes. It Became clear that the state must carefully re-examine the opportunities it was providing for the education of its citizens, particularly at the highest levels, if it was to keep pace with progress. To accomplish this end, the Governor, on September 15, 1961, appointed a committee of 26 distinguished citizens, including representatives of the colleges and universities and those responsible for the elementary and secondary schools, to make recommendations that would improve the effectiveness of our system of higher education. This commission made an exhaustive study of the state's system of higher education and published a report which includes many recommendations that profoundly affect the responsibilities of the University of North Carolina.

In the course of its work the Commission studied critically all the state - supported institutions of college and university rank and the relationships that exist between them. It made a comprehensive analysis of the growth and distribution of the population of the state to determine the areas where demands for post high school education might be anticipated. It was their purpose to prepare a plan for a well-coordinated system of higher education that would be efficient, flexible, and soundly related to the needs of the state.

Their analysis of the distribution of the population of the state led the Commission to recommend the establishment of a system of comprehensive community colleges. These institutions would provide education paralleling the first two years of college and university work, together with vocational adult education responsive to the needs of the communities in which they are established. Initiative for the development of community colleges would be a responsibility of the communities, and the land, buildings, and 15 percent of operating costs were to be provided by the communities. The state and federal government would bear the remaining costs of maintenance and operation. This system of community colleges would supply educational opportunities for young men and women in the regions adjacent to their location. They are not to be resident colleges and consequently education will be provided at substantially less expense to the students than that of colleges and universities maintaining dormitory facilities. The community college program proposed by the Commission has, in our judgment, such importance for the future of higher education in North Carolina that we pledge our support of the legislation that will authorize the establishment of these colleges.

The Commission recommended that the existing community colleges in Charlotte, Wilmington, and Asheville be expanded to four-year state supported colleges — also non-resident — in order to meet the needs for a more comprehensive education required in these centers of population.

As they faced the prospect of developing four-year colleges, the cities of Asheville, Charlotte, and Wilmington requested affiliation with the University of North Carolina and petitions were filed with the Board of Trustees of the University asking that the University take over the community colleges in these cities and expand them as new campuses of the University.

The Commission also recommended that the responsibilities of the University be defined so that its place in the state system of higher education would be clearly identified.

The problems presented by these petitions and the other recommendations of the Carlyle Commission led the Trustees of the University to request that a special committee of Trustees of the University be appointed by the Governor to study the wisdom of expanding the University to include the proposed new campuses and to consider the steps the University should take to meet the new responsibilities imposed by the recommendations of the Carlyle Commission.

THE WORK OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES

On July 23, 1962, Governor Sanford appointed eleven members of the Board of Trustees to a Special Committee and requested them to study proposals which had been advanced for the establishment of additional campuses of the University in the state. The Governor also directed the committee to study other questions pertaining to the future of the University, and he referred expressly to the improvement of the educational facilities of the three existing campuses.

The appointment of the committee of trustees came just at the time when the Governor's Commission on Education Beyond the High School was completing its study and announcing its recommendations. It was evident that in carrying out its study the Special Committee should pay careful attention to the broad objectives underlying these recommendations and project the future of the University as a part of the total system of higher education which they envisioned. The fact that members of the University administration and the Board of Trustees had taken an active part in the work of the Governor's Commission was a great advantage in accomplishing this purpose. Also, it was incumbent upon the Special Committee to assist the Board of Trustees to speak in its own right for the University and formulate a sound plan of action according to its own appraisal of future interest of the University.

The committee members realized from the outset that they confronted a task of great significance for the University. Not since the Act of Consolidation had there been such a compelling combination of forces for change in institutional arrangements for higher education. The action taken a generation ago contemplated the development in North Carolina of one eminent state university by combining three existing state institutions under one board of trustees and one president — all dedicated to one transcendent educational purpose and sustained by one body of popular support. That was in the depths of an economic depression. Now in a time of economic growth and prosperity new reasons proclaim the urgency of new vision. We felt that nothing less than a new assessment of the University mission and a positive assertion of the best means of advancing its purposes would answer the Governor's assignment.

Given a charge of such importance for the future of the state, the Committee undertook to acquaint itself with the basic concept and purpose of universities. And particularly it re-examined the foundations of the fruitful partnership between the state and the state university in North Carolina. In all of this, the Committee felt that it could be guided by no surer standard than maximum service consistent with preserving the traditional excellence of the University of North Carolina.

In reviewing its responsibilities, the Special Committee decided that it should meet with the administrative officers and the trustees of the community colleges at Asheville, Charlotte, and Wilmington to assess at first hand the need for the kind of education that only a university can provide and to study the programs and facilities of these institutions. These visits were made and an opportunity was afforded the administrative officers and trustees of the three community colleges to explain their needs and their reasons for requesting that they become units of the University.

The Committee also sought the advice and counsel of representatives of the faculties of the three units of the University of North Carolina. In these discussions the desirability of enlarging the University to include additional campuses at Charlotte, Wilmington, and Asheville was explored thoroughly as were other matters affecting the future welfare of the University. Prominent among the latter were the desirability of adapting the names of the three units of the University to reflect their status as units of a single multi-campus state university, and their responsibilities for offering programs at the graduate level. The desirability of utilizing more fully the resources of the three existing campuses by making all three fully co-educational was also explored; also the wisdom of broadening the academic programs on the Raleigh campus to include degree programs in the liberal arts.

Reasons For 'State' Name

Supplemental Statement by Thomas J. Pearsall to the Board of Trustees of the University, Friday, January 25, 1963, following presentation of Committee Report.

The report I have just presented to you is the result of 7 months study during which time the Committee met 8 to 10 times, visited Charlotte, Wilmington, and Asheville-Biltmore Community Colleges and the University of California. We sought, received, and used the advice and council of faculty, students, and alumni groups of all three branches of the University and we have given full consideration to their views in arriving at our conclusions when they would not run counter to principles underlying our study.

We have respected the limitations of our commision and have proceeded upon the theory that we were acting as a Committee for the Trustees to gather facts and make recommendations directly to you. In the spirit of this approach, the Committee has taken great pains to keep you fully informed at each step of our study and to involve you wherever possible. We asked that you be called to a special meeting in this Hall in November, 1962 in order that we might fully inform you of the scope and progress of our study. I presented to you at that meeting a 16 page progress report and President Friday discussed with you at length the 5 main areas in which we were working and their meaning and implications for the future of the University. In addition to this information each Trustee was invited to one or more district Trustee and alumni meetings held throughout the entire State, where you were briefed by the President or one of the Chancellors on the program we were studying. The President has met with representative groups of the faculties and student bodies of all three branches of the University and discussed with them in detail the program which we have presented to you today. The work of our Committee has been thoroughly reported by the press and other news media during the entire period of our study. So we feel that we have done everything possible to inform you fully on the important matters to be considered today and that you are in a position to make intelligent and final decisions in respect thereto.

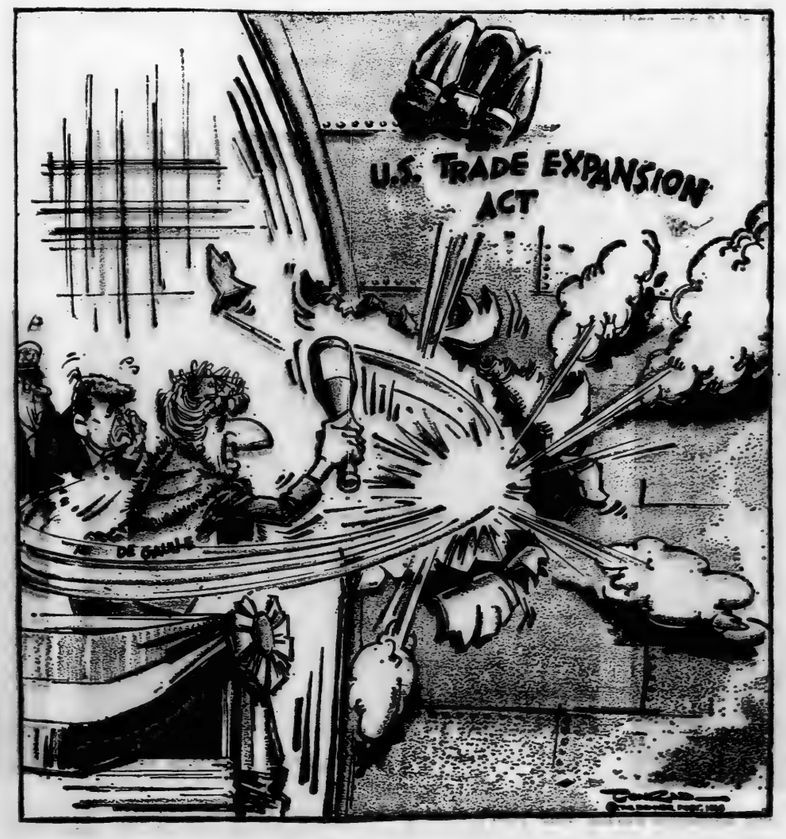
I have no doubt that you are aware that there has been much discussion about the name of State College. You have heard our recommendations on this question, but I know that you will be interested in and are entitled to a brief statement of the origin of this question and how we arrived at our final recommendation.

The question of the new name for State College evolved as a perfectly normal and logical development in the growth of State College from a college to a university. In 1931 the Act of Consolidation gave State College the name of "The North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering of the University of North Carolina." Under consolidation the College grew in size, service, diciplines and status to the point where it has become now a University in every sense except one, which we propose to correct today by giving authority to grant the liberal arts degree. The Administration, the faculties at all three branches and our Committee recognized that fact early and set about the task of finding a name which would properly identify the College as a University and at the same time identify it as a part of the University of North Carolina, which it is as a matter of law and fact. The Committee soon found that in order to identify State College as a part of the Consolidated University and to meet the desires of the faculty, alumni and students of State College, a name would have to be conceived which did three things: (1) identify State College as a part of the University system (2) remove the word "College" from the name and (3) have the words "University" and "North Carolina State" in the name.

This was not an easy task. In an effort to preserve unity in the University family and to find a solution as nearly satisfactory to all parties as possible, without sacrificing principles, the Committee kept this question under consideration for several weeks. Two weeks ago today the President requested Chancellor Caldwell of State College to meet with the alumni, faculty and student groups of State College in an effort to discover whether a satisfactory name could be agreed upon which would meet the requirements mentioned above. Chancellor Caldwell accordingly conferred with these groups collectively and individually and we were happy that he was able to report to our Committee last Friday that the members of the Board of Directors of the North Carolina State College Alumni Association, the Board Chairman, and the President of the Alumni Association voted unanimously for a resolution on January 17, stating that they would "accept willingly" either of the three options. The Committee considered the three names suggested and found that the name we have recommended, "North Carolina State, The University of North Carolina at Raleigh," more nearly met the requirements mentioned and, therefore, we recommend that name to you. We now believe this question has been resolved and that we can proceed in unity.

This Committee has felt from the beginning that this period in the life of the University presents a singular challenge and opportunity for the University to make perhaps its greatest contribution to the State and the region. This report reaches you at the very moment that the State is studying and planning its future system of higher education. A major purpose of our recommendations is to carry out the substance and the spirit of the report of the Governor's Commission on Education Beyond the High School as it affects the University.

We bring this report to you within two weeks of the convening of the General Assembly of this State to which the Governor will present an ambitious and forward looking program for higher education in North Carolina as perhaps the most important program he will propose in the second half of his administration. It comes at a time when the financial condition of this State permits it to make substantial appropriations and provisions for higher education.



At this same juncture the State finds itself enmeshed in an agricultural revolution. Mechanization is moving large segments of our population from farm to city. Our State is experiencing spectacular industrial expansion with resultant economic and social strains and adjustments. This period also finds North Carolina experiencing an explosion in College age population, with 20,000 more high school students in 1962 than in the preceding year and with a minimum of 110,000 young men and women seeking admission to our colleges and universities in 1970.

While we can find encouragement in the growth and progress we have recently made in North Carolina, we cannot forget that this report comes to you also at a time when a large segment of our people are still disadvantaged economically, educationally, and socially. North Carolina must be lifted from its 46th place in per capita income; from its 49th place among the States in hourly wage rates; from its low position where an alarmingly high percent of its young men are rejected from military service because of physical or mental deficiencies, and from its next to bottom position in the percentage of college age population receiving post high school education.

This is the stage upon which our University finds itself at this moment and these are the challenges and opportunities which this moment in the history of our State and nation presents to us as Trustees.

We offer to you in our report a program by which the University of North Carolina and you as its Trustees can meet that challenge and accept that opportunity. We heartily recommend this program and hope that you will accept it in the tradition of the leadership, vision, and dedication to service to the people of this State which has characterized this University from its inception.

SL Praises Clemson

Student Legislature Thursday night directed Student Body President Inman Allen and Speaker of the Legislature Mike Lawler to send a letter of commendation to the President of the Clemson College student body.

The letter will congratulate the student body of the school for its peaceful compliance with the federal court order to integrate the Clemson campus. This resolution was introduced by Harry Delung (UP) for Mike Lawler after an earlier resolution introduced by Gordon Appell (SP), also in support of the Clemson student body, was amended and defeated.

Also receiving legislative approval was a bill appropriating $75 to send two delegates to the Intercollegiate conference on Democracy and Development in Latin America at Swarthmore College, Feb. 15-17.

SL okayed a bill introduced by Bill Davis (UP) which repealed an earlier one establishing a committee to co-ordinate campus-wide entertainment.

Robert Payton (SP, DM I) was unseated by Student Legislature for his frequent absences and his failure to appeal his case to the Rules Committee.

Legislature will meet a half-hour earlier next week—at 7 p.m.—to consider more of the backlog of legislation facing it.

Inter - Fraternity Council President Jim Dillishaw will address legislature to explain the present relationship between fraternities and the Faculty Committee on Fraternities and Sororities. Also, slated to appear next Thursday night are representatives of both the Men's and Women's Honor Councils who will report on the kinds of penalties imposed by their bodies.

Eight bills, including one to appropriate funds to pay three reporters for the Daily Tar Heel, were referred to committee for further study.

Infirmary

Time Magazine Executive Will Give Talk Here

Lawrence E. Laybourne, assistant publisher of Time magazine, will give the second lecture of the UNC Journalism Lecture Series, Tuesday, February 12, in Howell Hall Auditorium at 8 p.m.

"The News by Magazine" will be the subject of Laybourne's address.

Named in December to the newly-created position of assistant publisher, Laybourne has been with Time since 1944. His previous positions with Time include bureau chief, Ottawa, Canada; deputy bureau chief, Washington; chief of the Life magazine news bureau; chief correspondent, United States-Canadian News Service; managing director, Time International of Canada, Ltd.

From 1934 to 1944, Laybourne was with the news office of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. Laybourne is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Ohio State University.

Pretty, Pert 'Rhino' Lead Is Parados As An Actress

By GORDON CLARK

Juanese Hatten is quite a paradox. Her director calls her "one of the most perceptive young actresses" he's ever worked with, yet the shiny-eyed blonde can't explain the character she's playing.

"She's just funny," is the only way Miss Hatten can describe Daisy, the girl she's playing in The Carolina Playmakers tour production of "Rhinoceros," the Eugene Ionesco comedy-satire which opens at the Playmakers Theatre here Wednesday night.

Miss Hatten, who has the rather apt nickname of "Dude," hails from Pascagoula, Mississippi. It was there that she made her first stage appearance—as Sleeping Beauty in an elementary school play.

Since then, the attractive blonde has filled major roles in numerous plays, including "Visit to a Small Planet" at SMU, and "Summer and Smoke," "Volpone" and "Guys and Dolls" with The Carolina Playmakers.

Speaking on "Rhinoceros," the 24-year-old UNC drama graduate said: "This is my first meeting with the 'theatre of the absurd,' as it's called. Actually, it gets across its point far more clearly — and humorously — than most other plays today."

Daisy is the only female role in "Rhinoceros" throughout the play. "It's sort of nice being up there with all those men," Miss Hatten laughed.

This role as a wacky, pretty blonde is what the lively comedienne has been wanting for a long time. Tommy Rezzuto, the director of "Rhinoceros" and a man not too free with compliments, says, "She's funny." The chances are pretty good that the audience will chalk this remark up as an understatement.

"Rhinoceros" will play at 8:30 each evening, Wednesday through Sunday, with an additional matinee performance Sunday, Feb. 17, at 2:30 p.m.

Tickets are available from the Playmakers business office (214 Abernethy Hall) and at Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $2 each.

"RHINOCEROS" RESCUE — The heroic fireman (George Gray of Gastonia) rescues the bubbling Daisy (Juanese Hatten of Pascagoula Miss.) from her office after a rampaging rhinoceros destroys the stairway in "Rhinoceros." The Playmakers tour production of the provocative comedy-satire will run Wed-Sun. Feb. 13-17, at the Playmakers Theatre in Chapel Hill. Tickets are available from the Playmakers business office (214 Abernethy Hall), and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $2 each.

American Jesuit To Give Talk On Renaissance

The UNC English Club will sponsor a lecture by American Jesuit Walter J. Ong, Professor of English at Saint Louis University, on Feb. 11.

Father Ong is well known as a scholar in the Renaissance field and as a prolific writer on problems of contemporary civilization. He has published two books on Petrus Ramus and Renaissance intellectual history, both the result of extensive research in various European libraries. He has written two other books which analyze problems of contemporary man seen from the point of view of an American Catholic. His most recent book, "The Barbarian Within," is a collection of critical explorations of literature, contemporary culture, and religion.

A Ph.D. at Harvard, Father Ong has lectured widely in this country as well as in Europe.

His lecture before the English Club will deal with one of Father Ong's main concerns: our understanding of Renaissance attitudes and modes of thought. It is entitled, "The Rhetorical Bias: Rhetoric as a Way of Life Before the Enlightenment." The lecture is open to the public and will take place at 8 p.m. February 11th, in the University Faculty Club Lounge.

UNC To Host Meet For Parole Boards

Psychiatrists, sociologists, social psychologists and criminologists will be among the authorities participating in the nation's first Institute for Parole Board Members to be held at UNC's Institute of Government, February 10-16.

The institute will be the first of its kind to be held in the United States. Participants will examine problems which occur with youthful criminals as well as problems of parole risks, staff relationships, parole selection, prison relationships, legal considerations, and executive problems.

The institute will be sponsored by the National Parole Institutes and the UNC Training Center on Delinquency and Youth Crime, of which Lee V. Bounds, professor in the Institute of Government, is the director.

Bounds has been influential in working out a prison training program for the training center. The U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare granted $156,000 to support youth crime studies here.

The National Parole Institutes, which operates under the auspices of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency, is sponsoring a series of similar institutes for parole board members in selected U. S. universities.

UNC faculty members participating in the institute include Arthur E. Fink, Dean of the School of Social Work; Alan Keith-Lucas, prof. of social work; and Dr. David Freeman, prof. of psychiatry.

Representatives from 19 states, the District of Columbia, and the U. S. Board of Parole will be participating in the institute to discuss the overall topic "Realistic Problems of Decision Making in Parole."

CALPURNIA, HERE I COME

Now, as the college year approaches its mid-point, one fact emerges clearly: you are all going to flunk everything.

There are two things you can do about it. First, you can marry money. (I don't mean you marry the money, lady; I mean you marry a person who has money. Weddings between people and currency have not been legal anywhere in the United States since the Smoot-Hawley Act. Marlboro Cigarettes, on the other hand, are legal everywhere and are, indeed, smoked with great pleasure and enthusiasm in all fifty states of the Union. I bring up Marlboro Cigarettes because this column is sponsored by the makers of Marlboro, and they are inclined to brood if I omit to mention their product.)

But I digress. I was saying you can marry money but, of course, you will not because you are a high-minded, clean-living, pure-hearted, freckle-faced American kid. Therefore, to keep from flunking, you must try the second method: you must learn how to take lecture notes.

According to a recent survey, 123.6% of American undergraduates do not know the proper way to take lecture notes. To illustrate this shocking statistic, let us suppose you are taking a course in history. Let us further suppose the lecturer is lecturing on the ruling houses of England. You listen intently. You write diligently in your notebook, making a topic outline as you have been taught. Like this:

I. House of Plantagenet.
II. House of Lancaster.
III. House of York.

Then you stop. You put aside your pen. You blink back a tear, for you cannot go on. Oh, yes, you know very well that the next ruling house is the House of Tudor. The trouble is you don't know the Roman numeral that comes after III.

(It may, incidentally, be of some historical interest to point out that Americans are not the only people who don't know Roman numerals. The Romans didn't know them themselves. I suppose they could tell you how much V or X were or like that, but when it came to real cuties like LXI or MMC, they just flang away their styluses and went downtown to have a bath and take in a circus and maybe slab Caesar a few times.

(You may wonder why Rome stuck with these ridiculous numerals when the Arabs had such a nice, simple system. Well sir, the fact is that the Emperor Vespasian tried like crazy to buy the Arabic numerals from Suleiman the Magnificent, but Suleiman wouldn't do business—not even when Vespasian raised his bid to 100,000 gold piastres, plus he offered to throw in the Colosseum, the Appian Way, and Charlton Heston.

(So Rome stuck with Roman numerals—to its sorrow, as it turned out. One day in the Forum, Cicero and Pliny got to arguing about how much is CDL times MVIX. Well sir, pretty soon everyone in town came around to join the hassle. In all the excitement, nobody remembered to lock the north gate and—wham!—before you could say pecca fortiter, in rushed the Goths, the Visigoths, and the Green Bay Packers!)

Well sir, that's the way the empire crumbles, and I digress. Let's get back to lecture notes. Let's also say a word about Marlboro Cigarettes. The makers would be so pleased! And is it not fitting that we should please these honest tobacconists—these fine men, fond of square dancing, water sports, protein, and tattoos—these tireless perfectionists who spend all of their days trying to please us—searching everywhere for the best of all possible tobaccos, aging them with patience, blending them with tender, loving care? Marlboros are available in soft pack and flip top box. You will find XX cigarettes in each.

Is this the only reason for using Mennen Skin Bracer?

Skin Bracer's rugged, long-lasting aroma is an obvious attribute. But is it everything?

After all, Menthol-Iced Skin Bracer is the after-shave lotion that cools rather than burns. It helps heal shaving nicks and scrapes. Helps prevent blemishes. Conditions your skin.

Aren't these sound, scientific virtues more important than the purely emotional effect Skin Bracer has on women? In that case, buy a bottle. And—have fun.

Tar Heels, Deacons Collide In Second-Place ACC Battle

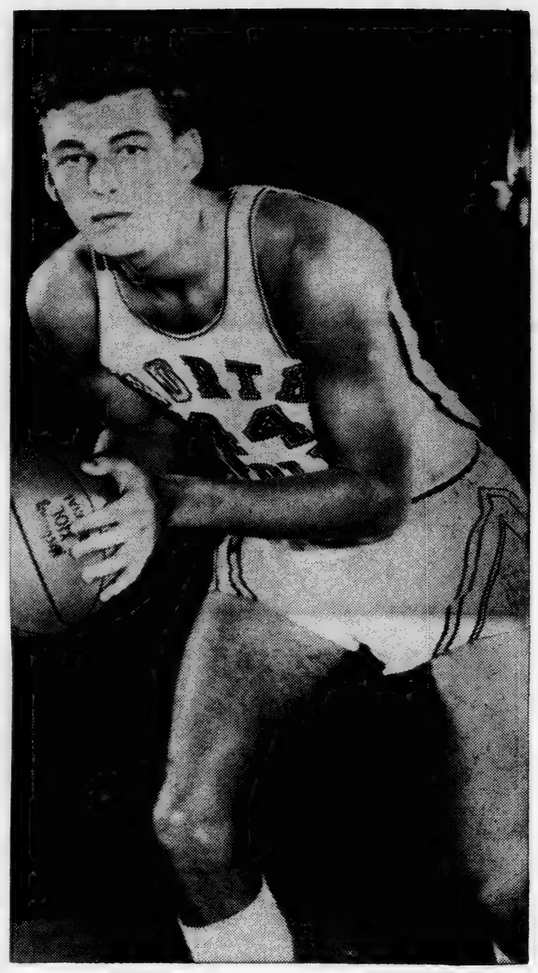
Smith's Men Seek Revenge In TV Match

By ED DUPREE

Wake Forest's Demon Deacons and North Carolina's Tar Heels meet today in Woollen Gym in a battle for second-place in the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball standings.

The important league contest will be televised regionally at 2 p.m. as the Tar Heels seek to avenge a 78-70 loss to the Wake in January.

The Baptists will be trying to rebound from a one-sided, 97-66 loss to Duke earlier this week. Last Saturday the Tar Heels bowed to Duke by 77-69.



Carolina pushed its ACC record to 6-2 Thursday with an 82-68 triumph over Maryland. After winning their first eight games, the Deacs lost to Clemson and Duke in succession, giving them an 8-2 record. A UNC victory would put the home team ahead in the standings by percentage points.

Carolina's season record is 10-3, Wake's stands at 10-6. Billy Cunningham's 21.7 scoring average is better than any Deacon's, but the Baptists have a well-balanced lineup which has resulted in six prominent scorers.

Dave Wiedeman, a tricky guard and a top candidate for All-Conference, leads Wake with a 14.7 mark, but is followed closely by rugged forward Jerry Christie at 14.0. Center Bob Woollard, forward Dick Carmichael and guard Butch Hassell round out the starting five. Sophomore Ronny Watts has developed into a valuable sixth man for Coach Bones McKinney, the towel-tossing champ of the ACC.

Cunningham, Carolina's sophomore All-American hopeful, will probably be joined in the starting lineup by Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet at guards and Bryan McSweeney and Mike Cooke at forwards. Charlie Shaffer's injured elbow makes him a doubtful participant in today's game.

Dean Smith's men will have only one more home game after today's. They will meet Virginia on Feb. 20. Before the league tournament on Feb. 28 they will play N. C. State, South Carolina, Clemson and Duke on the road.

BRYAN McSWEENEY missed UNC's first five basketball games because of an ankle injury but the 6-5 junior has returned to his old form of late. This gives Coach Dean Smith a pleasant problem — what to do with seven "starters".

Deaclets To Visit At Noon

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC's defensive-minded freshmen may go for a shutout here this afternoon when they take on the Wake Forest frosh at 12 noon.

Coach Ken Rosemond's Tar Babies have given rivals only a fraction over 52 points a game so far in rolling to their impressive 10-1 won-loss measure.

And revenge is in order for the Deaclets will present today the only team to score as many as 60 points in a defeat to UNC this season. (Duke's Blue Imps managed 70 in the Tar Babies' only loss).

Carolina was outshot (48 to 43 per cent), outrebounded (30 to 26) and generally outhustled in its whisker-thin victory over South Carolina Thursday night. But clutch play in the final four minutes enabled UNC to escape without embarrassment.

For the second time this year, little (5-9) Mike Ianarella responded to an important bench call and played a big part in the victory surge.

Seeing action for the first time Thursday was 6-5 Jim Harrington, who played a lot of football quarterback for the freshmen last fall. Harrington failed to score, but he may be the big man the freshmen need to spell Bob Bennett for rest periods.

Bill Harrison had to slip into pivot duty in the South Carolina game when both Bennett and Jimmy Smithwick fouled out.

Harrison, at 6-3, was the tallest Tar Baby on the floor for the important final minutes as Rosemond had to go with four "backcourt" men — Jimmy Moore, Johnny Yokley, Ray Hassell and Ianarella.

Today, the freshmen face a team which had them down by 14 points in the game at Winston-Salem. The Tar Babies, says Rosemond, "found themselves" in that one as they rallied to win, 64-60.

Wake Forest brings a 6-3 record and a flashy guard into today's grudge battle.

The record includes an 80-65 loss to Duke last Wednesday, and the guard is Bob Leonard, who exceeded 20 points in the first UNC game and scored 19 against Duke.

Leonard's supporting cast includes Richard Block, Bill Nesbit, Dick Myer and Tommy Byrne, son of the former New York Yankee "junk" lefthander.

Byrne, Block and Nesbit all hit double figures in Wake's recent loss to Duke.

RUSH SET

Delta Sigma Pi and Alpha Kappa Psi, professional business fraternities, have announced spring rush February 11, 12, and 13 (Monday-Wednesday) from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Students majoring in business administration or economics may attend.

Invitations are being sent to students, but it is not necessary to have an invitation to attend rush. If a student does attend rush, he must go to both houses either on the first or second nights of rush.

The Delta Sigma Pi house is located at 111 Pickard Lane, and the Alpha Kappa Psi house is at 214 East Rosemary Street.

Frosh Swimmers Win 6th Straight

By BILLY HATFIELD

UNC's freshman swimmers topped Staunton Military Academy Wednesday afternoon in their usually record-breaking style by 54-40.

In winning their sixth straight meet this season, Coach Alan Gentry's men took first places in all but three events and broke three SMA pool records along with a UNC freshman record.

Sandy McNairy, Dick Boardman, Fred Lipp, and Tom Bennett, copped a first in the 200-yard medley relay as did Lipp in the 100-yard butterfly.

John Sheldon took a first in the 200-yard freestyle then turned around to set a SMA pool record in winning the 400-yard freestyle with a fine time of 4:22.7.

Tom Murphy won both the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle events. Rick Forum did the same in the 200-yard individual medley, with a SMA pool record of 2:15.4, and in the 100-yard breaststrike with a SMA pool record as well as a new UNC freshman record of 1:06.6.

This afternoon at 1:30 in the Bowman Gray Pool the Tar Baby Dolphins go after their seventh win against Myers Park High School

Dolphins Splash In Pool At Five

Pat Earey, public address announcer at UNC's home basketball games, invites everybody down to the pool today at 5:00.

At that time, Earey, who also happens to be Carolina's swimming coach, will send his Blue Dolphins into their last warm up before the all-important ACC test against the State College Wolfpack next Wednesday.

The meet this afternoon features All-Americans Thompson Mann and Harrison Merrill. As an interesting sidelight, UNC will be swimming for points against VPI.

After the State meet, Carolina entertains powerhouse Maryland and powerless Virginia on successive days before entering the ACC Championships, March 7-9.

Track Team Hosts Clemson

North Carolina's indoor track team entertains Clemson's Tigers in the Tin Can at 7 p.m. tonight. Field events will start at 4 p.m.

The Carolina track men defeated N. C. State easily in their first Atlantic Coast Conference meet and should have little trouble against Clemson.

In their last outing, the Tar Heels took three first places in the VMI Relays. "We made an excellent showing at the Relays," said Coach Joe Hilton. "Tommy Clark, our great high jumper, set a meet record with a 6-6½ leap. We were first in the distance medley and the four-mile relay. We had seconds in the two-mile run, two-mile relay and Heath Whittle earned a second in the pole vault."

A number of cross country men give the Tar Heels strength in the distance events. Bob Bennett, Charlie Little, Carmine Lunetta, Jerry Stuver, Art Mallette and Larry Henry make UNC one of the most dangerous in the conference in the long runs.

Deacs Trim Carolina, 72-71

A Game Of Keep-Away In Woollen

DRIBBLER—Carolina's Larry Brown dribbles in circles, figure-eights, and dotted lines as he tries to keep the ball away from Wake Forest during the closing minutes of yesterday's game. UNC had a small lead at the time but was unable to protect it. —Photo by Jim Wallace

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

Billy Cunningham dropped in a basket with three seconds remaining in the game yesterday, but it was anticlimatic. Six seconds earlier Frank Christie had wrapped it up for Wake Forest with a pair of clutch free throws which put the Deacons ahead, 72-69.

The 72-71 Wake victory marked the fourth in a row for the small Baptist school over Carolina teams. It also gave Wake Forest and Duke the distinction of being the only teams to beat Carolina at Chapel Hill twice during the past two seasons. Wake also topped Carolina in Chapel Hill in 1960.

Cunningham, the amazing sophomore from Brooklyn, played probably the best game of his short career. He weaved threw, around and over the taller Deacons, especially 6-10 Bob Woollard, and bucketed 3 2points, 19 in the second half. Billy was the only Tar Heel that was hitting consistently from the floor, sinking 13 of 23 shots from all over the floor.

Larry Brown hit four of nine shots, but padded his point total with 10 of 12 from the foul line. The playmaking co-captain hit six straight points in the last four minutes of the game to keep the Tar Heels in the contest. His last two free tosses at the 1:43 mark gave UNC its last lead of the game at 69-68.

Each team took its turn at building up a lead, then blowing it before a regional television audience. The homestanders started fast and led 27-17 with 7:22 remaining in the first half. Cunningham had scored 12 of his points during those 12-odd minutes. He added only a foul shot during the rest of the half and Wake slowly pulled even with Dean Smith's men.

Brown drove in for a layup to make it 30-21, then the Baptists went wild. They scored 11 straight points in three and a half minutes and found themselves ahead, 32-30. Brown tied it for the Tar Heels, but Butch Hassell sank a pair of charity tosses and Christie connected for two points, making it 36-32 at halftime. Yogi Poteet barely missed a 40-foot shot at the buzzer.

It took Carolina almost nine minutes to catch the Deacons. Bones McKinney's boys stretched their lead to 48-40 in the first six and a half minutes. Meanwhile, Cunningham had warmed up again and scored six of eight UNC points.

The most talented sophomore ever to hit the Atlantic Coast Conference then took complete charge of the game. Brown and Mike Cooke had narrowed the score to 48-43, but it was Billy who moved the Tar Heels ahead.

He started it by twisting past and over 6-7 Ronny Watts and laying the basketball through the hoop. Bryan McSweeney made it

Folk Duo To Provide Slate Of Folksongs, Satire Here

Joe and Penny Aronson will present a program of folksongs and satire Thursday, Feb. 14 at 8 p.m. at Memorial Hall. The Hillel Foundations of North Carolina are sponsoring the husband-and-wife team. All proceeds will go to the Hillel Scholarship Fund.

Accompanying their songs on the guitar and mandoline, the Aronsons will present a rich and unique program of folk-songs.

Some of the Aronsons' recent engagements include the University of Nebraska, University of Alabama, University of South Carolina, North Carolina State College. Wesley College, Brooklyn Academy of Music and McGill University.

Joe and Penny's large and expanding repertoire includes international songs; songs out of the history and folkways of the American people; songs about love and marriage, fellowship and satire.

Publicity Chairman Barry Hyman has announced that tickets will go on sale Monday at Kemps and at the G.M. desk. Admission is $1.00.

Drama, RTVMP, Art, Music To Be Included

By JOEL BULKLEY

The Faculty Council voted Friday to expand the College of Arts and Sciences to four divisions by establishing a Division of Fine Arts. The Council also indicated its approval "in principal" of awarding a Bachelor in Fine Arts degree.

This new division will now be subject to approval by the General Faculty at its April meeting in order that it may become a part of the University curriculum for the next school year.

The proposed Division of Fine Arts will include departments in Art; Dramatic Art; Music; and Radio Television and Motion Pictures. It will join the existing Divisions of Humanities, Social Sciences and Natural Sciences within the College of Arts and Sciences.

Chancellor William B. Aycock, in announcing the plan yesterday, reported that the four department heads involved will work out the curriculum for a degree in the new division and then will report back to the Faculty Council. If approved by the council, the curriculum will then be presented for approval to Consolidated University President, William Friday, the Board of Trustees and the N. C. Board of Higher Education.

Chancellor Aycock also said that, "The purpose of creating this new division is to provide broader opportunities for the student to develop his particular talent in the performing arts. This new program will be a significant addition to the curriculum and will provide the student with more time to develop his interests."

Outdoor Drama Institutes To Serve State From UNC

Chancellor William B. Aycock recently announced the founding of the "Institute of Outdoor Drama" at UNC.

The new institute will fulfill a national need for a central clearing house for information, advice, auditions and production assistance for the many outdoor dramatic productions and community pageants held across the United States.

Trotman Named Director

William Trotman, a veteran of the Carolina Playmakers and a native of Winston-Salem, was named director of the Outdoor Drama Institute. Trotman is an actor, playwright, director, production manager and stage and scenery designer. He returns to Chapel Hill from Houston, Texas, where he was resident designer for the Ford Foundation-backed Alley Theater.

"It is fitting that the Institute of Outdoor Drama be established in Chapel Hill," stated Chancellor Aycock. "The tradition of folk drama and the attainments of The Carolina Playmakers and others in playwriting, acting and producing dramatic presentations have found a special outlet in the burgeoning pageants in outdoor amphitheatres and similar settings. The new Institute of Outdoor Drama has been conceived to encourage and utilize the abilities of dramatists in this dimension."

Aycock added, "Mr. William Trotman, who was formerly one of our students in Dramatic Art, returns to the University as Director of the Institute. He has had much professional experience, including six years appearing in and directing outdoor drama."

The University has been the spawning ground for a number of outdoor pageant-dramas across the nation. Paul Green, Kermit Hunter, Thomas Patterson, and others have written plays suited to amphitheater production, often with music and pageantry.

Among Chapel Hill-influenced outdoor dramas are "The Lost Colony" at Manteo, N. C.; "Unto These Hills" at Cherokee; "Horn in the West" at Boone; "Wilderness Road" at Berea, Kentucky; "The Common Glory" at Williamsburg, Va.; "Faith of Our Fathers," Washington, D. C.; "The Confederacy," Virginia Beach; "The Stephen Foster Story," Bardstown, Ky.; "Old Four Eyes," Medore, North Dakota; and six others in five states.

3 Objectives

The purpose of the Institute of Outdoor Drama is threefold: 1. To stimulate interest and dedication to the outdoor drama movement—to inform, place and train new talent and to redirect established talent. 2. To provide complete advisory service on every phase of planning and producing—to gather the people who have worked and advised in the past and to solicit their support, cooperation and service. 3. To act as a repository for information about all outdoor dramas in the nation—complete information to include publicity samples, architectural plans, photographs and financial information.

Chancellor Aycock also announced a board of directors of the Institute, including Prof. Harry E. Davis, chairman of the UNC Department of Dramatic Art; Paul Green, Pulitzer Prize-winning dramatist and author of several outdoor dramas now running annually; Professor Samuel Selden, former director of the Carolina Playmakers and dramatic arts chairman at Chapel Hill who is now head of the University of California (Los Angeles) Theater Arts Department; Kermit Hunter, playwright and chairman of the Division of Fine Arts, Hollins College, Va.; John Ehle, special assistant to the Governor of North Carolina and on leave as a member of the faculty of Radio, TV and Motion Pictures at Chapel Hill; John Parker, business manager of the Carolina Playmakers and Charles Milner, director of the University Extension Division.

Trotman Is Versatile

Bill Trotman has worked with the Erie Playhouse in Pennsylvania; The Barn Theater in Augusta, Maine; and the Anchorage Theater in Alaska.

He worked for five seasons with "Unto These Hills" at Cherokee. He was general manager of the historical drama, "Sword of Gideon" at Kings Mountain. He is holder of the Vereen Bell Prize, an award from Davidson College, for his play "Blackbeard."

Immediate projects of the new institute will include writing and publishing a detailed pamphlet on the production of outdoor dramas, and a seminar or conference on drama. The conference-seminar will welcome all interested persons in the field. Leading theatrical personalities will be lecturers.

Infirmary

COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE

The Communications Committee will meet Monday, Feb. 11 at 5 p.m. in the Woodhouse Room at G.M. All members should attend.

STUDENT PARTY

The Student Party will hold a general meeting at 7 p.m. Monday in Gerrard Hall.

Deferment Test Applications Are Available Here

F. C. Shepard, UNC co-ordinator for Military and Veteran Affairs, yesterday released information regarding military deferment for students who wish to continue their college work.

Applications for the Selective Service College Qualification Test to be given on April 18 are now available to college students at Selective Service boards throughout North Carolina, according to Colonel Thomas H. Upton, State Director of Selective Service for North Carolina.

The test will be given at more than 500 colleges in all 50 states, Puerto Rico, and the Canal Zone.

Scores made on the test will provide local boards with evidence of aptitude for continued undergraduate and graduate study. The scores will not themselves determine eligibility for deferment, but are considered with other information by the boards in determining whetheZr to defer individual registrants for further study.

Applications for the test must be postmarked no later than midnight, Thursday, March 28. Eligible students may also obtain information about the test from any local board.

The test, used since 1951 to aid local boards in determining questions of student deferment, is administered by Science Research Associates, McHenry, Illinois.

To be eligible to take the test, an applicant must be satisfactorily pursuing a full-time college course, undergraduate or graduate, leading to a degree. He need not be a student of a 4-year college, but his entire course of study must be satisfactory for transfer of credits to a degree-granting institution.

The applicant must be a Selective Service registrant who intends to seek deferment as a student. He can take the test only once.

The State Director pointed out that a test score in the file will give the local board an additional piece of important information to use in determining whether a registrant is eligible for a student deferment.

Companies Will Recruit Here Next Week

The following companies will recruit on campus next week:

Monday, February 11: Camp Wi-Co-Su-Ta and Camp Tomahawk; Roadway Express, Inc.; National Aeronautics and Space Administration; Food and Drug Administration; Owen-Illinois; North Carolina National Bank.

Tuesday, February 12: North Carolina National Bank; Phillips Petroleum Company; Touche, Ross, Bailey, & Smart; Southern Ross, Bailey & Smart; Southern Research Institute; YWCA (women only); The Proctor & Gamble Company; The Proctor & Gamble Distributing Company.

Wednesday, February 13: The Proctor & Gamble Distributing Company; National Institutes of Health; Monsanto Chemical Company; National Security Agency; Blue Bell, Inc.

Thursday, February 14: U. S. General Accounting Office; U. S. Civil Service Commission (group meetings); Southern Department Stores, Inc.; Colgate-Palmolive Company; Scott Paper Company.

Friday, February 15: Chemical Bank New York Trust Co.; Fieldcrest Mills, Inc.; Liggett & Myers Tobacco Company; Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Students wishing to sign up for interviews may do so at the UNC Placement Office in the basement of Hanes Hall.

AT THE PLANETARIUM

"Skies Down Under" opens at the Morehead Planetarium at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 12. "Skies" is a portrayal of the southern heavens, never seen by Americans unless they travel into the southern hemisphere.

The program starts at the north pole and moves viewers by degrees across the sky from there to Chapel Hill; to the Equator; and to Canberra, Australia. At Canberra, a tape and slide sequence shows the Mt. Stromlo Observatory at the Australian National University, one of the world's major astronomical institutions, and the skies that are visible from it.

Public programs are presented at 8:30 weekdays; 11 a.m., 3, and 8:30 p.m. Saturdays; and 3, 4, and 8:30 p.m. Sundays.

Hypnotist Causes Woes, Grins, Itch

By CHUCK NEELY

A standing-room-only audience packed Memorial Hall Friday night to witness one of America's leading hypnotists practice his art on members of the student body.

John Kolisch gave a short lecture on hypnotism before beginning his demonstration. Thirty volunteers were obtained from the audience. Kolisch selected twenty from that group to demonstrate his experiments.

He led his subjects through many illusions, making them happy or sad or believing themselves covered with insects or being deluged with rain.

At one point Mr. Kolisch made all of the subjects believe themselves of an orchestra. Others were persuaded to sing and dance, to believe themselves shocked whenever they sat down, or to become overly aggressive. Two of the female subjects danced the Charleston and the hula to the approval of the audience.

All of these actions were carried out under hypnotic suggestion, and none of the subjects remembered any of their experiences afterwards.

In the final experiment of the evening, one subject was made to believe himself to be as rigid as a steel bar. He was then placed with his feet on one chair and his upper shoulders on another chair, and he held this position while another subjects stood on him.

Kolisch was educated in his native Vienna and at the New School in New York City. He came to America in 1938. A member of the Association for Social Psychiatry in Washington, D. C., he is the author of "Sessions in Autodynamic Suggestion."

His performance was widely hailed by all who saw it, and at its close, he and fifty students adjourned to the Pine Room and then to Hanes Hall where he lectured until 2:30 a.m. on his subject and demonstrated other experiments.

Israeli To Be Feted

A reception honoring the Ambassador of Israel, Avraham Harman, and his wife, will be given by Chancellor Aycock and Mrs. William B. Aycock today from 4 to 6 p.m. at the Carolina Inn.

This is Harman's first visit to North Carolina as official Ambassador of the State of Israel. His party will include Mr. Zeev Dover, director of the Consulate in Atlanta.

University Party Membership Drive Plans

Plans were announced yesterday for the University Party Spring Membership Drive.

Jon Commander, new membership chairman of the UP, said the drive will take place during the week of February 11.

Membership cards will be available from a University Party representative in each residence. The name of the representative will be posted on the bulletin boards of the residences.

Commander stressed the importance of joining the party now in order both to increase the size of the delegations for each residence and to be able to take part in the chosing of the University Party candidates for the Spring Elections.

Commander yesterday explained the University Party delegation system. He said, "Each residence is alloted one delegate for each member in the party up to five. After that an additional delegate is given for each ten members including the first five. By this system a residence with 40 members gets five delegates for the first five members and four additional delegates for the total forty members."

Aycock To Discuss University Future

By Bob Samsot

Chancellor Aycock's address to the student body Monday night could begin a new level of student awaredness at the University—if the students want it.

The chancellor will speak on the future of education in North Carolina, and more specifically on the role of UNC in that future. In his speech at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall, Aycock will endeavor to further interest among students by informing them of "where the University has come from and where it is going."

He will touch lightly on the recommendations of Gov. Sanford and the Trustees. The chancellor will then state the University's position now and what he hopes it will be in the future, including present budget requests and capital improvements to be made.

Chancellor Aycock will be open to questions following his speech and hopes to generate an interest which will reach new levels among these students," who will be the future leaders of the state, and even more important, of the nation."

Asked about the possibilities of future addresses, the chancellor said, "I would welcome the opportunity to spend many hours a week answering any questions I can if it would generate an interest which I feel is most important among our future leaders."

Di-Phi To Debate Capital Punishment Tuesday Night

The Dialectic-Philanthropic Literary Society will debate a resolution condemning capital punishment in North Carolina at an assembly at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday on the 3rd floor of New West.

If passed, the bill will be sent to the Governor, State Attorney General, and all members of the Legislature. The resolution was introduced by Di-Phi Rep. Hubert Hawkins of Rockingham.

The resolution reads as follows:

A Resolution To Abolish The Death Penalty In The State Of North Carolina:

WHEREAS: Numerous states and nations have declared the death penalty incompatible with modern concepts of justice, and

WHEREAS: Criminal statistics indicate no deterrence of capital offenses in areas where the death penalty has been retained, and

WHEREAS: The ultimate public cost of procedures toward capital punishment is significantly greater than that of imprisonment or measures for rehabilitation, and

WHEREAS: The idea of vengeance in our judicial standards is being replaced by sympathetic approaches to individual reform, and

WHEREAS: The irreversibility of an execution, considering the fallibility of the public justice, conflicts with a higher standard of justice common to our culture, and

WHEREAS: The worth of an individual life may not be societally or arbitrarily determined.

Now Therefore Be It Resolved By The Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society Of The University Of North Carolina That:

ARTICLE I: The Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society does not condone capital punishment in the state of North Carolina.

ARTICLE III: This body urgently requests North Carolina legislators and public officials to consider this problem anew and, as a step in the state's progress toward penal improvement and reform, to abolish the death penalty entirely.

ARTICLE III: Copies of this resolution shall be sent to the Governor, to the state Attorney General, and to all members of the State Legislature.

"I think we might even expect some influence on the Legislature from the success or failure of the bill," Hawkins commented, "since it follows closely the letter from the Chapel Hill chapter of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom to Governor Sanford requesting legislation to rid the state of the death penalty."

The Emperor's New Clothes: A Modern Version

A fairy tale:

Once upon a time, long ago, in a far-off land, there was an Emperor. He was a very proud man—some said he was also very vain. He would spend many afternoons looking at his own reflection in the mirror.

It is said that once the Emperor had been a handsome and vigorous soldier and made a very pleasing impression in the mirror. He had been a valiant warrior and had won many battles.

Through the years, however, his bravery and valor had been worn down by age. He became less vigorous, less handsome; in fact, he became fat and ugly. No longer could he fight on the field of battle.

But he continued to look at his reflection in the mirror. He continued to tell himself he was young and handsome and vigorous. He continued to imagine himself as a brave and victorious warrior, at the head of a great nation, although his country — like him — had become older and less vigorous, and had lost many battles and was no longer the leading nation in the world.

As the Emperor was looking at himself in the mirror, a nation across the sea was seeking to establish commercial ties with the Emperor's country. But the Emperor would not recognize the power and influence of this other nation—he said his nation was the most powerful and influential in the world and would remain that way. And HE was Emperor of the most powerful nation in the world.

One day several of the Emperor's subjects came to him and said, "The leader of the nation across the sea is said to be more handsome and more vigorous than you."

The Emperor stormed, "More handsome?—Ridiculous. More vigorous?—Absurd." And so he ordered two of his servants to make for him some new clothes, richer than any seen in any land before, of the finest material possible — fine enough to ensure that he would be the most handsome Emperor in the world.

The servants became afraid. What clothes could they possibly find to make their old and ugly Emperor handsome? But if they did not satisfy his vain demands their lives would be in danger.

Then they came upon a plan. They would pretend to bring the Emperor the finest, richest clothes in the world—which actually were invisible. But they would tell the Emperor that only fools could not see the marvelous clothes. Since the Emperor is so vain, they thought, he will say he can see the clothes and that they are beautiful. Thus the servants were admitted to the Emperor and went through the motions of putting a great cloak on him. But in fact he was wearing nothing.

The Emperor, as we have said, was very vain and so he did not admit he could not see the clothes. Instead he marveled at their glory and brilliance.

He told his courtiers, "Now I am more handsome than the leader across the sea." And he instructed them to refuse to establish ties with that leader's nation. And he said again that his nation was the strongest in the world.

Then the Emperor decided to go walking in the streets, to let his people admire the brilliance of his new clothes. He instructed the courtiers to inform the masses that only fools, who did not know what was good for their country, would admit they saw no clothes.

The Emperor left his palace and walked down the main street of the city. Crowds of people were massed on both sides; they all admired the new clothes and told themselves, "The Emperor is the handsomest, most vigorous man in the world."

The Emperor continued walking, wearing no clothes, looking very old and very ugly and being very weak—but telling himself he was handsome, vigorous and strong, and Emperor of the strongest nation in the world.

And then a little boy, at the far end of the great street, who did not know that only unloyal fools did not see the new clothes, shouted out, "The Emperor has no clothes."

And then the people knew—finally. (JC)

Welcome Change

In creating a new division for the Fine Arts Friday, the Faculty Council did more than take a sweeping bow toward that vague entity called "creative atmosphere" in Chapel Hill. The change is significant not only in its immediate effects—one of whch will be to give the departments involved more flexibility and control in their own areas—but because it can be the first major step toward awarding the arts the emphasis they deserve.

More than one voice has been raised recently in a plea to eliminate some of the pedantry and sluggishness from the arts curricula and make it more vital and stimulating. The new division can help to do that, not only by attracting the creative student, but by making it possible to build a truly outstanding faculty in the arts. And that means a faculty that is itself creative, vitally interested in the arts, and itself productive.

One observer has called the creation of the new division the "most significant development in the University's attitude toward the arts in years." If the change brings expected results, that statement might even be an understatement.

'Unique' Importance Of State Universities

Universities are unique agencies of our culture. They are communities of scholars drawn together by a common desire to enrich their understanding of man and the environment in which he lives and by their responsibility for the advanced education and training of rising generations. A distinctive mark of universities is the freedom which faculty members enjoy to study whatever seems important to the mwithout regard for any immediate practical benefits which may result from their efforts. They are centers of ideas where competent and experienced scholars may devote their lives to the study of the unknown and, through the understanding thus achieved, contribute to the happiness and well-being of all mankind. Society protects the university in this freedom because it believes that an agency devoted to unfettered search for truth serves the best interest of society.

The three basic responsibilities of a university—instruction, research, and the preservation of knowledge — are inseparably associated in the pattern of academic life. The research studies of the faculty and the advanced students strongly influence instructional programs, and the accomplishments of those who labored in earlier days, available for restudy in university libraries, serve as a source of inspiration to teachers and research workers alike. The spirit of intellectual adventure permeates the air of the campus and its influence is reflected in the creative work of those who live for a time in such an atmosphere.

THE STATE UNIVERSITY

The institution which is the immediate object of our concern is the state university. This peculiarly American institution is an expression of academic traditions which have come down, essentially unchanged, from the middle ages combined with a deliberate organization and application of intellectual resources to the well-being of the democratic state.

Like all ideas and institutions that were carried from Europe, the university was shaped by the conditions in the New World. The colonial colleges of America did not reproduce the same setting of legal and scholastic authority of colleges and universities of the Old World. At the time of the Revolution there was no state - supported college in America. All were private, and all but one were sectarian. They were founded by small communities. They did not preserve the European isolation of the college from the community. They developed in accordance with distinctively American needs and uses. Lay boards of control helped marshal the available resources and made the college a part of the organic community.

The university as it developed in this country was further influenced by ideas which were dominant in the early national period of American life. No idea was affirmed more insistently by the Founding Fathers than that general education was essention to democratic representative government. Several of the revolutionary state constitutions, including that of North Carolina, made provision for state universities. Washington asserted that democratic government was feasible only so far as the people were enlightened. Franklin, whose philosophy shaped the character and institutions of American life as much as any man's, permanently influenced American education toward the practical, the utilitarian and the common-sense. Madison long championed the unrealized goal of a national university. Thomas Jefferson's lifetime of public service culminated in the founding of one of the historic state universities of America. No institution is more typically American than the state university; and the premier state university of America is the University of North Carolina. William Richardson Davie reflected the aims of the Founding Fathers when he wrote into the Plan of Studies for the University the words of the French Convention, "As in every free government the law emanates from the people, it is necessary that the people should receive an education to enable them to direct the laws. . . ."

The constant search for knowledge and understanding which characterizes universities shapes the life of the state; its influence reaches into every crevice of society and charts the course that determines the future of our culture. Public universities in particular have, therefore, a peculiar responsibility for the power they possess. They must be responsive to the need of society; yet they must ever be wary of conforming to the patterns of thought that pervade their sources of support. To accept a subservient relationship to the culture of which they are a part would be to deny the freedom of thought that makes them invaluable and to betray their reason for being. Universities must stand apart, secure in the freedom they enjoy to seek the truth wherever it may lead and to serve as analyst and critic of the contemporary scene; yet they must be conscious always of their mission to train the men and women who will deal with the practical problems of today and tomorrow. The best hope for meeting successfully the problems of modern life lies in increasing the influence of those who are trained in our universities.

The educational history of America has been marked by the steady adaption of universities to the requirements of society. There has been a progressive tendency toward broadening the scope and extending the reach of teaching, research, and myriad services to government, business, and individuals. To classical studies have been added the scientific and patently vocational. Courses in the liberal arts have been joined by courses in agriculture, engineering, and business. Undergraduate colleges have been enveloped by graduate and professional colleges of medicine, law, education, journalism, social work, librarianship, and many more.

The state university is but one of many threads in the history of American higher education. Later in inception but not less significant was the Land Grant movement in education instituted by Congressional enactment of the Morrill Act in 1862. In the train of this action what is now North Carolina State College was founded as the North Carolina College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts in 1887 with the declared objective of teaching: "the branches of learning relating to agricultural and mechanical arts and such other classical and scientific studies as the board of trustees may elect to have taught and to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and profession of life."

Again there is no more inspiring chapter in public higher education than that which was written by the founders of the state normal schools and notably that one in Greensboro founded by Charles Duncan McIver in 1896 and now known by the name of the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina.

The objects of the institution (reads the charter) shall be to teach young white women all branches of knowledge recognized as essential to a liberal education, such as will familiarize them with the world's best thought and achievement and prepare them for intelligent and useful citizenship; to make special provision for training in the science and art of teaching, school management, and school supervision; to provide women with such training in the arts, sciences, and industries as may be conducive to their self-support and community usefulness. . . ."

It is a signal fact and a singular fortune that thirty-one years ago the leaders of our state had the vision and the courage to join these three fruitful traditions and the separate institutions which each had fostered into one state university. As we look back upon it now in the light of what has happened to structural patterns of higher education in other states and in the light of growth and the manifest benefits to the institutions and to the state, it seems inevitable that they should have been joined together thereby increasing the power of each by the benefits of mutual aid and enrichment.

THE NEED FOR CHANGE IN UNIVERSITY PROGRAMS

The last two decades have been years of unparalleled growth in American public institutions of higher learning. In this period many states have struggled against the difficulties of uncontrolled duplication and unplanned coordination of institutions. The struggle has been frustrating and wasteful. North Carolina, on the other hand, has conducted the struggle not without normal frustration, to be sure, but on the more ordered and productive plan of ongoing internal administration. And more important, it has established a sound basis in experience and readiness to face the inevitable changes that lie ahead.

Modern society in America has become more and more dependent upon trained minds, and the demands it makes upon its people are such that those without education find themselves less and less able to occupy a satisfying place in our culture. The pressures for more and for better educational opportunities continue to grow at a geometric rate until today it is clear that the systems of education that have served well in the past are inadequate to meet the needs of our people. Our population is growing rapidly so that existing colleges and universities are unable to cope with the numbers that are asking for admission.

High school enrollments in North Carolina increased by 18,000 students a year ago. Last fall the increase was more than 20,000. This rate of increase is expected to continue for the next five to seven years. College enrollments in this state have also increased dramatically. In 1940 there were 32,000 students enrolled in our institutions of college and university rank; in 1950 the number had grown to 45,000; and by 1960 there were 68,000 such students. Last year college and university enrollments had reached 75,000. A fifty per cent increase has occurred during the last six years.

The enrollment study made by Dr. Hamilton for the Governor's Commission on Education Beyond the High School indicates that at least 93,300 college and university students will be seeking admission to the institutions of higher education in this state in 1965 with 96,000 a more probable figure. By the end of this decade we may expect a minimum of 109,700 applicants for admission with a greater probability of 117,000 young men and women requesting places in our colleges and universities.

Private colleges and universities plan a sufficient expansion to accommodate 11,250 additional students. This means that the public institutions must be prepared to accept about 60% of the student increase expected in 1970. Some 30,000 more students will then be seeking educational opportunities beyond those provided in our secondary schools.

Major changes in our system of higher education are urgently needed to meet the demands that lie immediately ahead. Although the quality of education provided in the public schools, and particularly that offered in colleges and universities, has steadily improved it must be raised to new levels if we are to have the educated citizenry that is essential to maintain our position in a modern world. The problems of education which the pace of contemporary life places before us are grave indeed and their implications for the happiness and well-being of our people, and even for our survival as a nation, are such as to command our best efforts. The situation which confronts us requires immediate attention, for time does not wait, and to falter in meeting our responsibilities is to jeopardize our future.

"We Can't Burden Our Children With Deficit Spending"

Collegian's Lobby

Drive Opened For Tax Slash

By EDWARD P. MORGAN
ABC Radio

If I wanted to improve my journalistic mind, which is not a bad idea, I could enroll in a course on, say Greek civilization and then deduct the cost of it from my income tax as a legitimate business expense. Splendid. An improved mind improves earning power which improves economic growth, my own and the country's, which in turn improves the gross national product which is what all the experts say we are supposed to be improving.

But if I were a full-time student putting myself through school on my own earnings I could not claim the cost of my education as a tax deduction. There is weird inconsistency if not gross injustice here, for a student is denied help at the very time he may need it most and if he doesn't get it not only he but society loses. It's a vicious circle that dizzies the thoughtful citizen with its lack of sense. How can we expect the college generation to contribute its maximum talents to the general welfare if the system bars the development of those talents in the first place?

The answer was so obvious to three undergraduates at the Milwaukee Institute of Technology that they have formed a lobby to try to beat or rather change the system. They have drawn up a plan for students' tax relief. It would help full-time students supporting themselves by giving a tax exemption of at least $2,400 to unmarried students, at least $3,000 to married ones and at least $3,600 to the latter if they have one or more children.

The lobby calls itself the Committee for Student Aid. Its chairman, Joseph LaMarche, a 23-year-old Milwaukee Tech sophomore majoring in foreign languages, is being helped through school by his wife who works full time as a hospital laboratory technician. LaMarche reported that the committee has written students in 100 colleges urging support for its plan. Student councils at Milwaukee Tech, Marquette, Carroll College and the University of Wisconsin have already passed resolutions supporting it.

Pointing out that students in most other countries get government support, LaMarche and his fellow lobbyists, Jay Watson and Gene Bruggink, argue that their proposal would provide incentives to high school graduates to go on to college, allow married students to continue their studies and increase student purchasing power.

Whether or not great minds run in the same channels, the interesting fact is that a number of U. S. senators and representatives have already introduced bills at this new session of Congress aimed at tax relief for families financing education of college students. Pres. Kennedy will send his 1963 education program to Congress (soon). Presumably it will be a package concentrating on a college building program which was torn to shreds last year .

Sen. Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota introduced legislation for a generous pattern of scholarships and loan insurance in effort to tap the talents of young people of top scholastic ability. He estimated more than 150,000 excellent scholars a year fail to go on to college or university due to lack of funds.

"We are living today on the resources of yesterday" Humphrey said, pointedly implying that we are wasting some of the best resources of tomorrow. Every year we go to the well for aid to education and every year we haul up a teacup's worth of improvement.

At the Fund for the Republic convocation in New York, Admiral Rickover, the Navy's nuclear expert who advocates a disciplined, rugged-individualist school of education without frills, scored the nation's neglect of the teaching profession.

Teachers, he said, should be paid more than senators or admirals even if the money has to come out of the defense budget. Perhaps they should be paid as much as ball players even if it means a modest curb on the national budget for race track betting, martinis and bubble gum.

Rickover touched another aspect of education about which there is, and should be, growing concern—the curriculum and the danger that in trying to assess and perhaps demand improving changes in its quality the public is being held at arm's length by a powerful clique of educational "promoters and administrators." Too many liberals in and out of the field of education have tried in the past to smother such criticism with shrill cries that it all comes from reactionaries. Some of it does and some of it does not. It should not be too difficult to distinguish between the two.

Educators are supposed to know more than the rest of us about how and what our children should be taught and undoubtedly the majority do. But they are not so responsive as they should be to sincere questions about so-called "baloney courses," emphasis on what Rickover calls "saleable skills" and a packet of other items reflecting on the quality of American education.

We've got to enlarge and improve our educational plant physically to accommodate the demands of a mushrooming population but if we don't improve the quality of our education along with it we are wasting our time and money. In fact, the quality always should come first.

Now a clean-filling, smooth-writing, money-saving Parker cartridge pen...only $3.95

New PARKER ARROW

This pen can save you money on cartridges. Parker Super Quink cartridges are BIGGER and last longer (each is good for 8 or 9 thousand words). But, even if you didn't save a dime, this pen would be worth the extra price. It's a Parker.

And only Parker gives you a solid 14K gold point tipped with plathenium—one of the hardest, smoothest alloys ever developed. It should last you for years no matter how much you use it.

The pen won't leak the way cheap ones do. It has a built-in safety reservoir, and meets most of the tough specifications we set for our $40 pens.

If you have trouble saying it, say it with a Parker. If you're a little shy and have difficulty saying "I love you" or even "I like you very much"—say it with a Parker.

The new Parker Arrow makes a beautifully expressive gift and looks as if you paid a small fortune for it.

The new Parker Arrow comes in black, dark blue, light blue, light gray, and bright red, with a choice of four instantly replaceable solid 14K gold points. Includes five free Super Quink cartridges with pen-protecting Solv-X (49¢ value).

Frosh Snare 56-54 Victory Over Deaclets

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC's freshmen bobbled and stumbled their way to another exciting but sloppily-executed win here yesterday afternoon.

Ken Rosemond's hair must be graying by day, for this time the margin was only two points (56-54), and he had to watch his big men foul out one by one before the victory could be put in the bag.

Wake Forest, which had bowed 64-60 earlier this year at Winston-Salem, did not die easily yesterday either.

The Deaclets were actually up by one at 50-49 with nine and a half minutes left before they finally surrendered to UNC's slow-down stall.

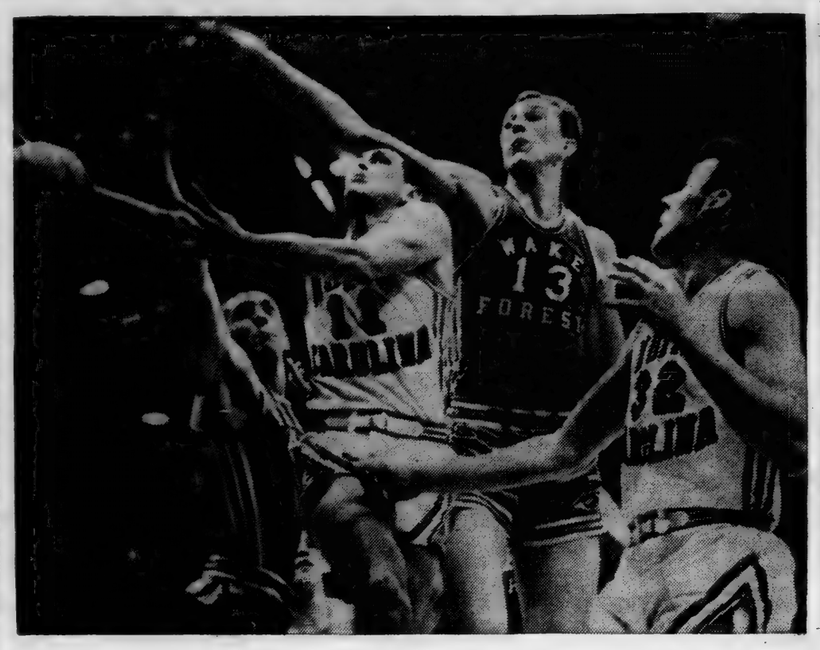
Two little-used substitutes operated the Tar Baby deep freeze very skillfully in those final minutes.

Mike Iannarella popped in four mile-long one-handers from his quarterback spot at the top of the circle while Jimmy Archer served post duty in the absence of Bob Bennett, Jim Smithwick and Bill Harrison, all lost on fouls.

Bennett, harassed all day long by a collapsing zone defense and the pressing maneuvers of quick Bob Leonard, managed just one field goal before leaving the game with 1:16 showing.

Leonard, a powerful 6-2 guard, scored 13 points off another masterful defensive job by Jimmy Moore. But he could not get the big buckets needed at the end.

The future Deacon star drove three straight times in the closing minutes, only to see his shots blocked when one of them would have tied the contest.



John Yokley and Smithwick led UNC scorers with 13 and 10 points, respectively. For Wake, Tommy Byrne and Richard Block, a strong 6-5 center, joined Leonard at the 13-point mark.

The win gives the Tar Babies an 11-1 record, but for the second straight game they were definitely outshot—this time by 45.9% to 36.1%.

SCORING:

UNC (56) Smithwick 10, Moore 9, Bennett 6, Yokley 13, Hassell 8, Harrison 0, Iannarella 8, Johnson 1, Archer 1.

WAKE FOREST (54) Byrne 13, Nesbit 7, Leonard 13, Myers 2, Hutchins 4, Gentry 0, oyner 2, Block 13.

Brown Drives Between Two Deacons

Dejected At Loss, Smith Points To March Tourney

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Five thousand Woollen Gym fans and countless more television watchers saw North Carolina's national prestige go up in smoke Saturday afternoon.

And Coach Dean Smith could not conceal his disappointment.

"We're out of the league race, we're out of the national rankings, and now I guess the only thing to do is point toward March," the raven-haired basketball director said after the game.

"You can also mention I'm for the tournament now," he added, pointing up the well-known fact that Duke now has all but wrapped up the regular-season ACC crown.

The talk turned to what all conversations of Carolina basketball eventually turn—Billy Cunningham.

"If they go on season performances in picking All-Americans, then my boy certainly fits the bill," Smith said. "He didn't get much pre-season mention, but the kid has surpassed all my expectations."

The UNC coach used the adjective "great" and then lamented the afternoon's performance.

"We like to think we are not a one-man team—that we are good enough to win even when they jam Billy underneath and double-team him. But today we weren't that good. He carried us the whole time and his board work was just tremendous."

Cunningham, whose fantastic performance (32 points, 16 rebounds) was witnessed by his father down from New York, had 30 of those points with six and a half minutes to play. He took only one shot in the remaining time.

Smith explained the long drouth this way:

"When we got the seven point lead, we decided to go into our delay game. In this situation, we want Brown (Larry) to control the play—we like him to keep the ball and draw fouls. Billy didn't get the ball during this time, so of course he couldn't shoot."

Smith quickly went on. "You've also got to remember that they're laying for Cunningham in the key. We probably couldn't get too many clear passes to him anyway."

The coach was not through. He had some complimentary, even if despondently-put, words for Wake Forest.

"We've had our share of the close ones this year. Of course we'd like to win them all, but I've got to give credit to Wake. They came back with a tremendous effort after we had them down by seven. They are a much better club than people give them credit for."

Bones Kept His Confidence

By HARRY W. LLOYD

Lanky Bones McKinney, wet with sweat and showing just as much excitement after the game as he had during it, simply said, "It never crossed my mind that we'd lose."

His team had just had to come from 7 points behind with only six and a half minutes to play in order to defeat the Tar Heels for the fourth straight time.

With 3:45 to play, Bones' two big men had both fouled out and Carolina appeared to be on the upswing. Frank Christie and Butch Hassell got the credit for braking the Tar Heels and giving the Deacons their first win in their last three games.

The reason he wasn't worried, Bones said, was that he thought his defense would improve with the insertion of smaller men into the lineup. He said too that Richard Herring, who scored four of the last 10 Wake points, is as good as any pivot man he has. "It's hard for him to push 6-10 Bob Woollard out of the lineup, but Woollard took himself out when he shot and missed that long jump shot.

Proud of Record

"I guess those who thought we had died after our last two losses have had their blood pressure revived," quipped Bones. "We have a young club, and we make mistakes. Our record of 11-6 is not great, but we've only lost two in the conference. I'm proud. We showed we had a lot going down to the wire.

"We used four kinds of defense, and today was the best continued defense we have played. The boys played basketball, and it was rough. But if the temperature went up and down the way that game did, you'd catch pneumonia, wouldn't you?"

He Likes Billy

The Wake Forest coach heaped loads of praise on Carolina's Bill Cunningham, the boy who almost singlehandedly pulled the Tar Heels from 8 points behind and into a 7-point lead in the second half. "If you go up with him, he stays up in the air until you come down. He does twists, turns, and double bumps. I've never seen a sophomore in this conference who was so good—not even me," quipped the Deacon mentor, who played his ball at both N. C. State and UNC.

"The boy plays tough and is a very good sportsman.

"I know Carolina was hurting for Shaffer. But you know I was hurting for Chappell."

McKinney made a somewhat paradoxical comment on the conference tournament. "If you will remember three years ago, we shellacked Duke twice during the season, but who won the championship in the tourney? Duke." The Blue Devils have already beaten the Deacons twice this year. "But I don't look forward to playing Caroloina in the second game," he said. The Deacons have beaten Carolina twice this year.

Just whom the jinx against two-time winners is supposed to hurt or help, he didn't say.

–Cunningham Hits 32, But UNC Loses–

48-46 with a foul shot. Then Billy tied it up by breezing through the Wake defenders and pushing another one through. He drew a foul and put Carolina ahead, 49-48.

Christie hit a layup which pulled Wake ahead again, but the kid countered. McSweeney missed a shot and Cunningham hauled down the rebound and shoved it in. Billy stole a Deacon pass and hit McSweeney on a fast-break lyup. Dave Wiedeman narrowed the lead to one with two foul shots, Brown countered with a jumper and Dick Carmichael made it 55-54—still to close for weak Carolina hearts.

Mike Cooke missed a layup, but Billy came to the rescue again and swished his shot. Poteet made it 59-54 with two free throws, then Woollard and McSweeney swapped baskets. Cunningham gave the Tar Heels their biggest second-half lead, 63-56, when he added two more free throws at the 6:32 mark. He didn't take a shot from then until his final basket, over six minutes later.

Christie then discovered a hot hand and pulled the Deacs out of the fire. He hit on three straight jump shots in a minute and six seconds and turned the game into a real doozie.

Wake's height advantage was weakened at the 3:45 mark when Woollard fouled out. Brown's foul shots made it 65-62, but Woollard's reserve, Dick Herring, had much to say about the final outcome.

Herring cut the lead to one with two foul shots, Brown made it 67-64 with two of his own, then Butch Hassell hit two straight jumpers making it Wake 68, UNC 67. After Brown put UNC ahead again, Herring drove through for an important Deacon basket. Christie hit his foul tosses and it was all over for Carolina.

Christie and Hassell were identical in their performances for the victors. Each hit six of eight shots and added three for three on the foul line for 15 points—the pair also had two rebounds and three personal fouls apiece.

Carolina outrebounded the visitors, 35-31, with Cunningham snaring 16 and McSweeney 10. Woollard pulled down nine for Wake.

Forty-two fouls were called in the Big Four battle, each team committing 21. Watts and Woollard both fouled out for Wake, while Cunningham, Brown and Cooke finished the game with four personals.

Carolina's shooting was woefully weak, only 37.3 per cent. In the first half, the Tar Heels hit 32.4 per cent and Wake 52.2. The visitors finished with 49 per cent.

The scoring:

WF — Christie 15, Hassell 15, Woollard 11, Carmichael 10, Wiedeman 8, Watts 7, Herring 4, Koehler 2.

UNC—Cunningham 32, Brown 18, McSweeney 9, Poteet 7, Cooke 5, Galantai 0, Respes 0, Krause 0.

Minneapolis Orchestra To Play

Group To Give Pair Of Concerts Sunday

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, will give two concerts at Memorial Hall on Sunday, February 17.

The concerts will be sponsored jointly by Graham Memorial and the Chapel Hill Concert Series. The concert is the third in this year's Concert Series.

The afternoon concert, which begins at 2:30, will admit only UNC students and students' wives. Students will be admitted free of charge. The tickets for student wives are $1.00 each.

The evening concert, which begins at 8, will be open to the public. Seats on the first floor of Memorial Hall will be sold on a reserved seat basis at $3.00 each. The balcony will be available to students who will be admitted free of charge.

At the afternoon concert, the orchestra will perform four selections: Mozart's Symphony No. 38 in D major "Prague" K. 504; two nocturnes for orchestra by Debussy; variations for orchestra, opus 30, by Webern; and Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor, opus 120.

The selections for the evening performance are: Richard Strauss' Tone Poem, "Don Juan" Opus 20; Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3 (in one movement); and Robert Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B-Flat Major, Opus 38.

Skrowaczewski has been conductor of the orchestra since 1959. He had formerly been conductor of Poland's Warsaw Philharmonic Orchestra, of the Krakow Philharmonic, the National Philharmonic at Katowice, and the Breslau Philharmonic.

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra is celebrating its 50th anniversary this year. The orchestra is noted as one of the most widely travelled in the United States. While on tour, the orchestra presents some 70 concerts in over 50 cities. It has been called the "Orchestra on Wheels."

Tickets for the evening performance at Memorial Hall are on sale in Chapel Hill at Danziger's. Individual tickets, as available, may be purchased at the box office.

Meeting Held To Discuss Withdrawals

The Student Party will meet tonight at 7:30 in Carroll Hall to discuss the recent withdrawal of eight members.

Chairman Robin Britt said yesterday that, "A thorough discussion concerning the ideals and purposes of the two groups has taken place between SP leaders and the members who have broken away.

"I feel that a much better understanding of the considerations involved has arisen from these discussions. The purpose of the Student Party meeting Tuesday night is to inform the party as a whole of the nature of these discussions and to define as accurately as possible the respective positions of the groups."

Britt went on to "strongly urge" every Student Party member to attend the meeting.

In addition to discussing the split in the party, legislative vacancies in Dorm Men's I, II, III and VI and Town Men's IV will be filled.

Infirmary

Students in the infirmary yesterday were Harriet Rogers, Sarah St. John, Nancy Carroll, Roberta Phillips, Ann Morrow, Susan Kenerly, Linda Goldberg, Wilbur Johnston, Forrest Green, Franchester Brennaman, Peter Brown, Edward Lowdermilk, James Poole, John Barber, Raeford Jones, John Williams, Larry Moore, Joseph Jones, Wade Taylor, Andrew Harrell, Joseph Gibbs, Edward Brinton, Harry Broome, Garth Fergerson, David Loftin, Gerald Turner, Frank Silver, William Andrews, John Eudy, Charles Deyton, Senapratt Viswanathan, Diane Hile.

FOLKSINGERS

Joe and Penny Aronson will present a special "Valentine's Concert of Folksongs and Satire" at 8 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 14 in Memorial Hall. Tickets are on sale at Kemp's and at the G.M. desk. Tickets are $1 and will also be sold at the door.

Higher Enrollment Plus No New Space Equals 3-Man Room

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

The three-man room will be back next year, according to Housing Director James Wadsworth.

"Almost all of the dormitories will be subject to the three-man room system," Wadsworth said.

Increased enrollment and the growth of the graduate program are the primary reasons for the return to the three-man room.

Because of the opening of Ehringhaus and Craige dormitories for men and the renovation of Cobb for women, many dorms this year weren't subjected to the crowded conditions which existed in the past.

A few buildings such as Joyner, and a couple in the Lower Quad had several three-man rooms this year, Wadsworth said, but most of them were cleared up by the second semester.

Things really looked good for this semester, the best in a long time. But they look dark for next year," the Housing Director quickly added.

A few dorms will not be subject to the three-man room system because they weren't equipped and built to handle a third man. These include Teague, Parker, Avery, Craige, Ehringhaus and Connor.

Wadsworth said that Old East, Old West, Carr and BVP already have three and four men in their suites, and therefore that particular housing arrangement will not change.

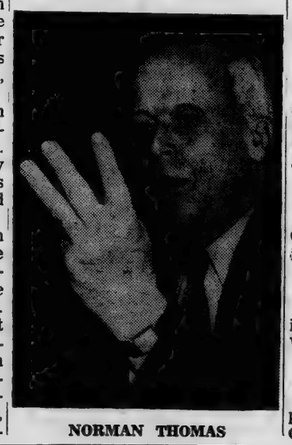
Socialist Norman Thomas To Speak Here Next Week

Norman Thomas, long-time socialist leader and civil libertarian, will speak at 8 p.m. next Monday in Memorial Hall under the sponsorship of The Carolina Forum.

Although no specific topic for the speech has been announced, Mr. Thomas is expected to discuss disarmament and other international problems. A general question period will follow the talk.

A forceful and eloquent speaker, Mr. Thomas has raised his voice in behalf of a wide variety of causes during the fifty-odd years that he has been a part of the American political scene.

One of the founders of the American Civil Liberties Union, he has participated in many free speech cases (notably the Passaic textile strike of 1926) and in many other struggles in support of the rights of free speech, free assemblage, and picketing.



He has run for many offices on the Socialist Party ticket, including six presidential campaigns. Many of the reforms advocated by Thomas' party during the 1920's were subsequently implemented during the New Deal.

Thomas was one of the first men to call America's attention to the plight of the Southern sharecropper and helped to organize the Southern Tenant Farmer's Union.

During World War II, he fought "for a peace based on the cooperation of free peoples and rejection of both vengeance and imperialism." Since then he has campaigned for world disarmament, with international control and inspection, and against both "get-tough" imperialism and appeasement of the Soviet Union.

He is a member of the National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy, a sponsor of the Student Peace Union, chairman of the Post War World Council and of the Labor Research Institute. He is also a member of the League for Industrial Democracy and the Workers Defence League.

Thomas, in accepting the Forum's invitation to address the student body, noted that some of his "happiest experiences have been addressing The Carolina Forum down through the years." His last Chapel Hill visit was in 1954.

Ground Rules Are Laid For Disarmament

American And Soviet Representatives Meet

GENEVA (UPI) — American and Soviet co-chairmen of the 17-nation disarmament conference met Monday to lay ground rules for the nuclear test ban talks which will resume Monday under the shadow of a bitter Russian denunciation of new U. S. underground testing.

"The government of the United States bears full responsibility for the possible consequences of this step" the Soviet government said in a statement on last Friday's Nevada detonation. The official news agency Tass said the U. S. testing "hinders" an agreement.

President Kennedy's special envoy, William C. Foster, director of the U. S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, conferred Monday for half an hour with his Soviet counterpart, first deputy Foreign Minister Vassili V. Kuznetsov.

West Plans Strategy

The two envoys set the stage for the talks on nuclear and general disarmament after a seven-week recess.

Foster is to present a message to the opening session, and informed sources said he will deliver a personal appeal from President Kennedy for progress.

Foster met Monday with the Western delegation chiefs from Britain, Canada and Italy to align Western strategy. He also talked with the chief of the Indian delegation as other U. S. delegates sounded out other envoys from the neutral bloc.

The Americans sought to establish the neutrals, reactions to the Soviet announcement of willingness to allow three annual inter national inspections of on-site monitoring devices on Soviet soil.

Need More Inspections

Joseph Godber, British minister of state for foreign affairs, reflected the cautious Western position in a statement:

"The Soviet acceptance of the principle of obligatory on-site inspection is a welcome step forward in their position — but not far enough. One step may be followed by another.

President Kennedy has said a minimum of eight to ten annual inspections are necessary to police a test ban treaty.

Western delegates said the Soviet statement condemning the U. S. testing on the eve of the conference probably indicates the Russians have adopted a "tough opening line" for the talks.

Four More Executed By New Iraq Regime

New Polaris Successful In Tests

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) — A classy new Polaris missile with a giant's reach Monday scored its second success in four days and buoyed Navy hopes for a powerful addition to its submarine striking force by mid-1964.

The 30-foot Polaris, an "A-3" model, roared 2,000 miles across the Atlantic Ocean in about 20 minutes. The Navy called it "completely successful."

Shaped like a snub-nosed bullet, the "A-3" is the mightiest weapon ever devolped for a submarine. The Navy hopes to have it combat-ready around the middle of next year.

The "A-3" like its two predecessors in the Polaris family, is designed for launchings from submerged nuclear submarines. But it was fired from a land-based launching pad Monday so that engineers and technicians could concentrate on "basic missile development."

The results were encouraging. The Polaris "A-3" is described as "just about 85 per cent new," meaning that internally it bears little resemblance to the earlier Polarises. It performed almost flawlessly Monday.

The rocket, powered by newer and more potent solid fuels, streaked from the firing pad and carved a brilliant white trail into the sky. While comparatively simple steering system kept it on course, the missile's engines separated smoothly and sent a nose cone to the edge of space.

The Polaris "A-3" had scored its first success last Thursday after six setbacks. That one had different objectives, however, including a full test of delicate new all-inertial guidance system. Accuracy was not a main objective. Monday.

The pair of successes indicated engineers were on the right track toward solving problems, basically in the second stage, that had caused the earlier "A-3" mishaps.

The new missile will give nuclear submarines the ability to strike with a potent nuclear punch at targets up to 2,880 miles away. This brings any target in the world within range of the deadly submarine-missile combination.

Space Mobile Demonstration To Continue Until Thursday

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration's mobile space science lecture - demonstration will be in Chapel Hill until Feb. 14 on its tour of the country.

A typical 50-minute Spacemobile demonstration answers six basic questions: What is a satellite? How does it get up into orbit? What does it do? What good is it? And what are NASA's plans for future space exploration?

Besides its electronic and mechanical devices for demonstration purposes, the unit also carries several scale model space vehicles of which the most interesting is an operating scale model of a passive communication satellite system.

The Spacemobile's flexibility and versatility make it usable not only in its continuing program in elementary and high schools throughout the United States, but also in colleges and universities to assist NASA lecturers participating in space and science institutes, seminars, and aerospace education workshops.

The demonstrations, which are all timed to precede regular showings of the Morehead Planetarium program will be given at 3 and 7:30 p.m. through Feb. 14.

Gripe Group Plans Meet Thursday

The University Party Grievance Committee will meet Thursday, in Stacy Dorm at 9 p.m.

Marshall Bellovin, Co-Chairman of the Grievance Committee, said that problems encountered in the Lower Quad will be discussed. Some of the problems anticipated concern the possibility of athletic equipment in the Quad (such as volleyball courts, horse shoes, and ping pong tables), yelling across the Quad, and the social facilities of the Quad.

Several girls will be present to discuss the social room problems and the possibilities of exchange parties with the women's dorms.

Dorm Manager of the North Campus will be available to discuss bulletin boards in the rooms, the general conditions of the rooms and the dorms, and the possible improvement of the study rooms and social rooms.

In its functions as a traveling platform committee, the Grievance Committee will also seek suggestions for the University Party platform.

Bellovin urged that all residents of the Lower Quad attend the meeting since plans will be made for improvements in living conditions there.

SOCCER SCRIMMAGES

Every Friday at 4:00 p.m. during the spring semester, there will be a practice soccer scrimmage between the varsity and all other interested persons. The games are informal, and any interested soccer player is invited to play.

Abe's Relative Is Opposed To Forced Integration

(MANCHESTER, Vt. (UPI)—Abraham Lincoln's great-granddaughter said Monday she is opposed to "the aggression of the federal government in forcing integration on the South."

Referring to Lincoln's 154th birthday anniversary, Mary Lincoln Beckwith, 64, said:

"This is a good time to reflect, and I think Abe Lincoln would do a lot of reflecting himself if he were here."

Miss Beckwith, whose family lived in Kentucky and South Carolina, has lived more than a half century at Hildene, a 1,000-acre dairy farm built by her grandfather, Robert Todd Lincoln.

"We're Southerners," she told United Press International, "But I don't think of the South as a separate culture. It's part of the union. The aggression of the federal government in forcing integration concerns me, and I disagree with the stand taken by Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy on this matter."

Miss Beckwith thinks the segregation problem stems from the fact "that people and anmials just don't like strangers. And when strangers are suddenly thrown together, people and animals alike bristle."

"It's a curious sort of provincialism," she said, "yet it is absolutely universal. The question is not confined to the Southern Negroes. We have it here in Vermont with the migrant workers in the summer. They have had it in Massachusetts, as I recall, especially with the Portuguese. And it's the same question in Africa and other parts of the world."

Miss Beckwith said part of the difficulty is "that we've come together so suddenly with the airplane and other means. People just can't grasp the situation."

Regarding desegregation, Miss Beckwith observed:

"I think we are moving along the right lines, but the federal government is a little too aggressive."

"I realize that the process of integration must seem to be taking a very long time to some people. But I think it may take even more time than it has. It's like nature which takes an awfully long time in its evolution . . .

"I think more is accomplished by reasoning, brotherly love and simple human kindness, rather than the aggression which I think is shown by both sides."

Class Ring Orders Can Be Made Now

Orders for class rings will be taken by The Grail in Y-Court from 9-4 p.m., Wed-Fri. The Class of '64 or any previous class is eligible to order now. Delivery will be in about eight weeks.

The ring being sold, the Balfour ring, is the only official Carolina ring. These rings may be purchased at any other time from Richard Vinroot at the Phi Delt House.

U. S. Extends Recognition To Baghdad

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — An Iraqui rebel firing squad executed four high ranking retired Army officers as "traitors" Monday as the United States and Russia joined the growing number of nations recognizing the new anti-Communist Baghdad regime.

Baghdad radio reported the executions and also announced the new revolutionary regime had seized property belonging to ministers of the overthrown regime in its efforts to clean out pockets of Communist influence.

Westerners arriving here from Baghdad reported heavy movements of troops and tanks through the capital streets. This followed the lightning coup by young Army and air force officers who deposed and promptly executed premier Abdel Karim Kassem.

A visiting West German parliament member, Rudolph Werner, said that beside the troop movements, everything in Baghdad Monday "was dead quiet, frighteningly so."

Eight Iraquis Executed

The new executions Monday brought to eight the number announced who have died before firing squads. Kassem and three of his aides died the second day of the rebellion.

The officers executed Monday were identified as Brig. Gen. Abd Al Majid Jalil, Col. Husayn Khider Al Duri, Lt. Col. Ibrahim Kazim Al Musawi and staff Brig. Gen. Dawud Al Janabi, all retired.

Baghdad radio said the officers were shot because they "violated the people's rights and lived in corruption." Informed sources said however, the four officers had given court testimony against supporters of U.A.R. President Gamal Abdel Nasser. The pro-Nasser group was tried in 1959 for attempting a revolution against Kassem.

Throughout the day the list of nations recognizing the new Baghdad government grew. The United States, West Germany and Britain led a parade of Western nations to accord recognition. The Soviet Union followed suit Monday afternoon.

The Soviets declared that Moscow recognizes the right of the people of each state to determine their government. Neighboring Middle East nations, including a number hostile to Nasser, joined the parade.

Dormitory Spotlight: Aycock

This is the first in a series of articles on UNC dorms. It is sponsored jointly by the dorm presidents and the Communications Committee.

An improved social room, an active executive council and a top-notch intramural program are only a few of the features of Aycock dorm this year.

The redecoration of the social room has been completed, and residents have gained co-ed visiting privileges as a result. The room was re-painted, curtains hung and walls decorated with a mirror and intramural plaques.

Headed by President Doug Jackson and Vice-President Spencer Willard, the executive council meets regularly to discuss and organize plans. The council's success is illustrated by an active social schedule, increased attendance at dorm meetings and a general interest in dorm affairs.

Intramural Manager Sam Hunt has led Aycock to a successful fall showing, and there has been better than average participation. Prospects are good for strong teams in the spring sports.

"Control of study hours has been excellent," commented dorm Secretary George Carson. "We feel that Aycock is as good a dorm as there is on campus."

Panhell Reception Set

The Student Legislature will meet at 7:30 Thursday night, February 14th instead of at 7 as originally announced.

PANHELLENIC COUNCIL

The Panhellenic Council will have a reception for all Sophomore, Junior, and Senior girls who are interested in Informal Rush. The Reception will be held Sunday, Feb. 17, in the TV Room of Graham Memorial, from 8 to 9 p.m. Those wishing to participate in second semester rush may sign up at the reception. (Dress informally.)

RULES COMMITTEE

The Rules Committee will meet Thursday at 3 p.m. in Roland Parker 1. The IDC, IFC and WRC will please submit their by-laws to the committee at this time. If the by-laws are not available, a representative should attend the meeting.

ACADEMIC AFFAIRS

The Academic Affairs Committee will meet Wed. at 5 p.m. in RP 111 of GM. All members should attend.

IDC

The IDC meeting tonight is an important one. The Council will nominate candidates for the office of Vice President, will consider an amendment to the IDC by-laws and will discuss revisions for the Court by-laws. The meeting is at 7 on the fourth floor of new East.

SOPH SOCIAL COMMITTEE

There will be a meeting of the Sophomore Social Committee today at 6:30 p.m. in RP 1.

ESP AND HYPNOTISM GROUP

An organizational meeting of the ESP and Hypnotism Study Group will be held Thurs. at 8 p.m. in 105 Hanes Hall.

All interested persons are invited to attend.

JUNIOR CLASS DAY COMMITTEE

The Junior Class Day Committee will meet Thurs. at 7:30 p.m. in RP 11.

FRESH CLASS CABINET

The Freshman Class Cabinet will meet Sun. at 7 in the Grail Room. It is important that all members attend.

UP

The University Party will hold interviews for appointments to fill its two vacant Legislature seats in Town Mens II and its one vacant seat in Dorm Mens I. The interviews will be held between 3 and 5 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 13 and 14, in Student Government offices in Graham Memorial. There will be a sign up sheet in the Graham Memorial Information office.

CAVE CLIMBING CLUB

The Cave Climbing Club will meet tonight at 7 in room 302 of Woollen Gym. All persons interested in spelunking, rock climbing or hiking are invited. Plans will be made for a trip to Virginia.

WRC MEETING

The Women's Residence Council will meet tonight at 6:30 in the Grail Room. Attendance is mandatory.

U. N. SECRETARIAT

A Secretariat for the U. N. Model Assembly is now being formed. Those interested may meet Judy Alexander Wednesday at 5 p.m. at second floor Y-Court.

SOPHOMORE CANDY

There will be a meeting of the Sophomore Candy and Finance Committe at 5 p.m. in the Woodhouse Room at G.M. Members are asked to bring the money from their sales.

A Glaring Omission

The catalogue of the University of North Carolina has long omitted one department in which a large number of students take courses. This is the Y-Court department.

It is one of the oldest and most distinguished departments in the University. Y-Court 16, the prerequisite for all other courses in the department, has long been the largest introductory course in the university. An estimated 1,499 people were enrolled in the course this fall.

The faculty of the department has gained world-renown for their scholarship in the field of Y-Court. Professor Felicia Walker's article on "The Necessity of Bass Weejuns for Successful Y-Courting," which appeared in Nett (June, 1960), the leading German Y-Court publication, is already a classic in the field. Chairman of the department, Publius X. Throttleford, rocked the academic world in 1956 with the publication of his definitive work, On the Intonation of Hi You: a Study of the Accents of 4,-103 Co-eds at a Southern University.

Associate professor Walter Rx. Dellinger has recently conducted exhaustive researches into the question of the proper attire for Y-Courting. He hopes to publish his findings shortly, and he promises that all who sign up for his Y-Court 10:01 will get a preview of his findings.

Some of the most popular courses in the department include 7:59, Coffee for Breakfast; 10:59, Check Cashing; and 3:22, Reading the Want Ads and Riders Wanted (when in season).

Famous Graduates of the Y-Court department include Hand-em Out Frazier, President of the Canadian Tobacco Company; H. R. Scrwonk, world-famous maker of manhole covers; and Prudence C. Patience, first president of the Planned Parenthood League of Massachusetts.

Some one should take steps to recognize this outstanding department. It is, and long has been one, of the foremost attributes of the university. No where else is so much learned with so little effort, or so little learned with so much effort, or we're not so sure. "Hi you, see y'all." —Bill Imes

Opportunity

Each year the Student Government offers two exchange scholarships for study at the Georgia August University in Goettingen, Germany.

Goettingen, a scant fifteen miles from the East German border, is situated in Lower Saxony in the broad valley of the Leine River. Undamaged by World War II, the city now numbers 80,000 inhabitants and retains many buildings dating back to the late middle ages.

Throughout Germany, Goettingen is noted for her university. The Georgia August University, around which the city's cultural life is centered, was founded in 1737 by Georg August II, King of England and Elector of Hanover. Numbering such former students as Heinrich Heine and Otto von Bismark, the university has grown to an enrollment of 8000 students and offers courses in the liberal arts, the sciences, medicine, law, and theology.

The two UNC scholars will be full members of the college community and will be able to participate in all phases of its academic and social life.

In Germany the exchange students will find themselves within a background of a rich cultural heritage on the one hand, on the other, of new social and political forces emerging from the chaos of the world war.

This is an opportunity to see, to think, to feel, and to be exposed to the new ideas and forces which are active in Europe today. For the perceptive individual, this is an invaluable opportunity in education.

That Time Again

A warm, gentle rain washes the red mud of the North Carolina campus; those with short memories who can forget March snowstorms think that the arrival of spring is heralded.

Whatever the weather, it is February again, and the Order of the Grail is conducting its annual class ring sale in Y-Court on February 13-15 from 9 to 4.

Juniors have been, hopefully, snowed by luxuriant invitations which make it sound as if the junior were being allowed to buy the ring by special dispensation of some high lord. This is not the case. The Order of the Grail is in business. It is trying to sell a good-quality class ring to as many students who will buy one.

The profits which the Grail makes are small and are used entirely for the purpose of offering scholarships or loans to deserving students. The ring for sale is the official class ring; we urge all members of the class of '64 and all previous classes to drop by Y-Court to at least look at the rings even if they had not previously considered buying one.

Deadline

We would like to call the February 15 deadline on applications for the North Carolina State Government Summer Internship Program to the attention of all students who are just slightly interested.

If you are more than slightly interested or even partially informed, you are, no doubt, already aware of the deadline.

We urge you to apply.

Pearsall Recommendations

UNC: Future Expansion And Coordination

The Special Committee of the Board of Trustees have agreed upon a number of recommendations designed to strengthen the University and foster larger service in the future. These recommendations are interrelated and each is dependent upon the others. Therefore, they are submitted as a program. That is, the force of each recommendation is conditioned upon acceptance of the others.

1. DEFINITION OF UNIVERSITY PURPOSE

The Governor's Commission on Education Beyond the High School has recommended a new statutory definition of the purpose of the University. We concur in this proposal and recommend that it be enacted by the General Assembly. The proposed definition is as follows:

> The University shall provide instruction in the liberal arts, fine arts, and sciences, and in the learned professions, including teaching, these being defined as those professions which rest upon advanced knowledge in the liberal arts and sciences; and shall be the primary state-supported agency for research in the liberal arts and sciences, pure and applied. The University shall provide instruction in the branches of learning relating to agriculture and the mechanic arts, and to other scientific and classical studies. The University shall be the only institution in the State system of higher education authorized to award the doctor's degree.

There are, to be sure, existing definitions, historic definitions asserting the aims of three separate North Carolina institutions which have become the University of North Carolina. The charters and successive statutes reveal the traditions of the state university, the land grant college, and the state normal school in their progressive development into one paramount state university.

By act of the General Assembly of 1931, the University of North Carolina, the North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering, and the North Carolina College for Women were "consolidated and merged" into the University of North Carolina. But a statutory definition of the new entity is lacking, and to that extent the realization of actual consolidations has been hampered by a persistent ambiguity of purpose. The time has come to have a clear and straight-forward statutory declaration of university purpose and one which reflects the essential unity of the university organization.

With the projected development of all state institutions of higher education, the needed broadening of programs within the University and the proposed establishment of new institutions, it has become necessary to have a basic guide for differentiating between the functions of the University and other state colleges. Thus the recommended definition would reiterate university responsibility along with the other colleges for undergraduate instruction in the liberal arts and the sciences. It would recognize that the University is the principal institution for education in the professions. The University would be the primary state institution for academic research and the only one authorized to award the doctor's degree.

The definition is the point of reference for other recommendations looking toward enlargement and improvement of university service. Its enactment into law by the General Assembly is regarded by this Committee as constituting a condition precedent to the actual implementation of other changes recommended in this report.

2. COEDUCATION ON ALL CAMPUSES

The Woman's College of the University has, as its name suggests, largely restricted its programs to young women. At times in the past, men have been accepted as students, particularly at the graduate level, and at present men are admitted as graduate students. No dormitory facilities have ever been made available to men so the men who attend this unit of the University have done so on a commuting basis.

Although there has been a branch of the University in Greensboro since 1931, there is no university program open to men in the Greensboro area at the undergraduate level at this time. The population of the region in and immediately surrounding the city of Greensboro has reached such dimensions that the wisdom of restricting university programs in this branch of the University to women must be re-examined. To hold to such a restriction would be to fail to use educational facilities that are already in being at the same time that we are striving to secure additional facilities. University education is being denied many young men in this populous area of the state because of their inability to afford the costs of attending the University at Chapel Hill or State College.

The definition proposed for the University and the change in name proposed for the Woman's College emphasize our responsibility for enlarged and improved programs on the Greensboro campus. It is difficult to conceive of a full-fledged university program at that institution restricted to women, for such restrictions are intrinsically inconsistent with the concept of a modern university. Opening the campus of the University at Greensboro to men will greatly strengthen that institution's opportunities to obtain faculty members of distinction and so to develop research and creative work to the levels expected of a university.

Although no dormitory facilities have been provided for men on the campus at Greensboro and none is being planned for the immediate future, we recognize that it may become desirable to provide such facilities when the full utilization of the resources of that institution warrant this action.

For much the same reasons it is considered advisable to open the institutions at Raleigh and Chapel Hill more widely to women and to commuting students. The first step in broadening educational opportunities should be greater utilization of existing institutions. The University at Chapel Hill does not now admit women at the freshman and sophomore levels. This limitation imposes hardships for certain programs, particularly the fine arts and those in music where women's voices are necessary in developing choral work. They are unduly restrictive in other programs and are inconsistent with the full utilization of the educational resources of the University to meet the needs of the people of the state.

We recommend, therefore, that the campuses of the three units of the University be authorized to admit men and women at all levels.

3. BROADER UNDERGRADUATE EDUCATION

The recommendation of the Governor's Commission on Education Beyond the High School that existing community colleges at Charlotte, Wilmington, and Asheville be expanded to four-year, non-resident colleges has been noted earlier in this report. The Board of Trustees of the University strongly endorses this recommendation and commends the full support of the University to the development of these institutions to maximum usefulness.

The resources of a university must be such as to provide those who seek education at its hands with some understanding of the richness of man's intellectual achievements. It is not enough to train young men and women in the arts and skills of a profession; it is not enough to produce highly trained specialists in narrow disciplines. A university education must combine the training essential for the scientist, the lawyer, the engineer, the medical doctor with some appreciation of the traditions of the past, with some acquaintance with literature and the fine arts, and with some understanding of the ideas which have made the world what it is today. A university cannot be a university and discharge its responsibilities as an educational institution unless it offers its students an education of sufficient breadth to insure their participation in society as well-informed, thoughtful citizens.

It is important and necessary, therefore, that the University of North Carolina take steps to see that on each of its campuses opportunities are made available to provide the breadth of educational experience consistent with the standards of the University. For these reasons we recommend that a degree program in the liberal arts be authorized at the Raleigh campus. Curricula in the liberal arts already exist at Chapel Hill and Greensboro.

4. A PLAN FOR FUTURE EXPANSION OF THE UNIVERSITY

A university has responsibilities that differ in several ways from those that are characteristic of a college. Prominent among these is the emphasis given in a university to research on the part of the faculty and to the training of graduate students. Because of the wide scope of university programs and the importance attached to research, their faculties are made up of scholars and scientists in many disciplines. The existence of high levels of competence in many different fields is a source of strength to each discipline and provides opportunities for educational programs that are not possible in the more restricted offerings of a college.

North Carolina has a single state supported university with campuses at three geographical locations to provide for the citizens of the state the kind of educational opportunity that only a university can supply. As the only university supported by the state, the University of North Carolina recognizes its responsibility to meet demands for extending its educational programs to other areas in the state when the resources of its existing campus cannot meet needs that are real and pressing.

North Carolina is a vigorous and growing state. Its expanding economy is developing centers of population in areas remote from the sites of its University campuses. The citizens of these regions feel keenly the need for the rich and varied educational programs that the University provides and which, because of distance, are denied to many of them. As these needs continue to grow, the University must be prepared to meet its responsibilities to these people by enlarging its resources even to the point universities of this country and do its full share to assist in the task of enlarging man's understanding of himself and of the world of which he is a part. of establishing new campuses when carful study warrants such action.

The intent of the report of the Carlyle Commission is to bring about in the state a well coordinated system of higher education. This requires a clearly delineated differentiation of functions between the different kinds of institutions of higher education and a sharply defined definition of the responsibilities of the University. It becomes necessary, therefore, that the University be placed in a position that will enable it to meet the needs for University type education as needs arise.

The requests of the trustees of Charlotte College, Wilmington College, and Asheville-Biltmore College that these institutions become units of the University of North Carolina have been given thoughtful and sympathetic consideration. After careful study we recommend that the statutes be amended to authorize the Board of Trustees of the University to establish additional units of the University subject to applicable statutory procedures and the following conditions:

1. That the need for the development of a new unit be established by a thorough study of the area in which the new campus is proposed. Such a study is to be made under the direction of the Board of Trustees.

2. That additional funds be made available for the establishment of the new campus to insure that the quality of the instructional and research programs at the existing units of the University be maintained at the highest possible level.

3. That standards and criteria prescribed by the Board of Trustees shall prevail at the new campus in the same manner that they apply at the existing units of the University.

The Committee recommends the foregoing as establishing a sound and stable procedure whereby new units of the University may be established in other areas of the state in the future. It is our judgment that a real need for educational programs of the kind that only a university can provide will exist in areas where rapid increases in population have occurred. Industrial development likewise creates a demand and a need for graduate and specialized education..

As soon as legislative authorization is provided we recommend that the University undertake a comprehensive study of the need for the establishment of new units of the University and report its recommendations to the Board of Trustees.

5. ONE NAME FOR THE UNIVERSITY

In 1931 the legislature united the University of North Carolina, the North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering, and the North Carolina College for Women into a single institution: The University of North Carolina. This union was not accomplished without difficulties, for each of the institutions felt deeply the loss of its independence. Major changes in academic programs were made in the interest of economy and the more efficient use of the funds available. Whole curricula were transferred from one institution to another to avoid duplicating programs of instruction in professional fields and to concentrate the full resources of the state behind specific programs. Graduate work was centralized in a single graduate school and many other steps were taken to strengthen and enrich both teaching and research study.

In recognition of the traditions associated with each of the three campuses, each institution was given a name that reflected both its former as well as its new status as a unit of a single university. Thus at Raleigh, the North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering became the North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering of the University of North Carolina. This unwieldy title quickly became North Carolina State College in the minds of faculty, students, and the general public so its new status as a component part of a single university was not identified in its popular name. The North Carolina College for Women became the Woman's College of the University, a title which recognized both its distinctive character as an institution for women and its newly acquired status as a branch of the University.

State College was founded in 1887 as the North Carolina College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. In 1917 the name was changed to the North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering. The present name (North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering of the University of North Carolina) was adopted in 1931.

The Woman's College was founded in 1891 as the Normal and Industrial School. In 1897 the name was changed to the State Normal and Industrial College. In 1919 the name was again changed to the North Carolina College for Women. Since 1931 the name has been the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina.

The Chapel Hill campus retained its former title since its position as a university was not changed by the new legislative act.

In spite of disappointments and deep concern on the part of numbers of faculty members and others, the passage of time has demonstrated the wisdom of the changes that were made and rewarded the courage of those responsible for carrying through the necessary reorganization. Under the new centralized administration, great progress has been made. Each unit of the University has flourished, salaries have improved, physical facilities have been enlarged beyond what was thought possible, and reputations for scholarly work have been enhanced. The union of the three separate institutions has brought added strength to them all.

While important progress has been made under a central administration the fact that each unit of the University has had a separate and distinctive name has hindered the full development of a spirit of unity and common purpose on the three campuses. The institution at Raleigh has reached a stage of development where it is no longer appropriate to refer to it as a college. It has now become a university. It is also inappropriate to continue to call the institution at Greensboro a college in view of plans to advance the general program to university scope and status. To retain the name Woman's College while acting to admit men would be anomalous.

These facts indicate to us the desirability of changing the names of the three institutions comprising the University of North Carolina so as to identify them as component units of a single university. We have, therefore, devoted much time and thought to the nomenclature problem. In our study we have welcomed the advice and criticism of students, faculty, alumnae and alumni, trustees, and many others. We have studied the systems of nomenclature used in other state-supported universities with multiple campuses or branches. From these deliberations has emerged a nomenclature for the University and its three campuses that removes the objections to the titles now in use and identifies clearly each institution as a component unit of a single University.

We recommend that the title now used to designate the single University with its three campuses, "The University of North Carolina," be retained: that the institution at Chapel Hill be given the name, "The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill,"; that the institution at Raleigh be known as, "North Carolina State, The University of North Carolina at Raleigh,"; and that the unit at Greensboro be given the title, "The University of North Carolina at Greensboro."

Mardi Gras Ball To Have Can Can Revue

Dot Silver and her Can Can dancers will be the featured floor show at the third annual Mardi Gras Ball.

The ball, a masquerade, is sponsored by the Alliance Francaise of Chapel Hill and will take place at the American Legion club house on Saturday evening, Feb. 23, at nine o'clock.

Tickets for the affair at $3 each, will be on sale at the Intimate Bookshop, Graham Memorial, and the Book Exchange in Durham.

The Grande Marche for judging of costumes will begin at ten thirty.

24 Girls May Enter As Freshmen In Fall

For the first time at UNC, girls majoring in Art, Music, and Dramatic Art will be admitted next fall into the freshman class.

Of the twenty-four freshmen, ten en students will be screened by appropriate art, music and dramatic art departments to ascertain whether the applicants possess talent, experience and promise of future proficiency in one or more of these three areas of study.

Of the twenty-ofur freshmen, ten will be music majors, six in art, and six in dramatic art. The trustee ruling that no more than 15 per cent of the entering student body may come from out of the state will apply to the admission of the 24 undergraduate freshmen women.

Chancellor William B. Aycock stated that the University's first priority in student growth at Chapel Hill will be in accepting increasing numbers of graduate and professional students, and after that, transfers in the junior and senior year. Third priority in growth will be in the freshman class.

Fall enrollment at Chapel Hill in 1962 was 9604 students. Of these 2,070 were women, the largest number of whom were juniors and seniors. The only girls up to now admitted as freshmen are those in schools of nursing, pharmacy, dentistry, public health, or are daughters of residents of the Chapel Hill community and live at home and attend classes with permission to enroll in the General College.

Halting Crime Is Your Goal, Parolers Told

Recounting the old proverb that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, Gov. Terry Sanford yesterday told a gathering of parole board officials from across the nation that the best way to prevent crime is to bring the proper influences to bear on school children.

"The public school may well be the place where we can first discover and correct criminal tendencies before their manifestation multiplies the problem of correction," Sanford said. "We must use scientific knowledge to rip up the roots of crime before they sink deep and spread into the developing personality of a schoolboy or girl.

"We seem to be spinning in an inflationary spiral of institutional failures," Sanford told the officials in a meeting here preliminary to the First Institute for Parole Board Members, which will last through next week.

"Too many delinquents pass uncorrected through the juvenile courts and correctional agencies into the courts and correctional services for adult offenders and out again with their criminality confirmed," the Governor added. "We should place the greatest stress upon programs designed to stop the growth of criminality as close to the seed stage as we can get."

Sanford emphasized the importance of paroles in the rehabilitation of criminals. "Parole is a sensible way of retaining needed controls and providing rehabilitative assistance to persons released from prison during the period required for them to complete the difficult change from inmate to parolee to useful citizen," he said.

The Governor placed on parole officials such as those assembled the responsibility for cultivating public opinion favorable to the parole programs.

"Unfortunately," Sanford said, "parole has too often been confused with sentimental approach toward the offender." He pointed out that "there is a compelling logic for a wisely operated parole program as part of a system of justice which seeks to protect the public while maximizing concern for individual dignity. This is not sentimentality.

"Public attention should be called to the fact that tens of thousands of parolees are living in the free community and making an acceptable adjustment," he added.

Sanford explained North Carolina's work release program to the parole official, and said that its rapid growth and remarkable success has attracted national and international attention."

He pointed out that in addiion to the advanage of having inmates "earn their own keep" while in prison, their self-respect and confidence is increased, and they have a running start on final rehabilitation when they are released.

Boone Writer Will Address Meeting Here

John Corey of Boone, one of North Carolina's outstanding news feature writers, will address the American College Public Relations Association regional meeting here Thursday.

His topic will be "Writing College and Educational Facts: News Releases, Features, Columns." The speech, in 08 Peabody Hall at 3 p.m., will be open to the public.

Mr. Corey will be addressing college and university public relations officers from five states. Robert J. Sailstad, Davidson College public relations director will preside at the three-day meeting in Chapel Hill, Feb. 14, 15, 16.

Corey is a member of the faculty at Appalachian State Teachers College in Boone. He is a former newspaper reporter and editor, and his column on public school children and teachers appears in daily newspapers all over the United States.

He won the American College Public Relations citation in 1960 for his column, entitled "School and Your Child."

Besides teaching educational psychology at Boone, Corey is alumni secretary, head of the news bureau, and a Danforth Fellow.

Radio Station Needs Summer Staffers

Don Schain, manager of WUNC radio, announced today that the station is looking for interested persons to fill staff positions for the spring semester.

"We can find a job for almost anyone who is interested in broadcasting," he said.

WUNC, "The Voice of the University," operates on a FM frequency of 91.5 megacycles. Broadcasting nightly from 6-11 p.m., the station depends upon students interested in broadcasting for its staff. WUNC features programs of music, information, and special events.

Last spring, the station increased its power to 50,000 watts, and its signal can now be received within a 100-mile radius of Chapel Hill.

Students interested in working at WUNC are invited to come to the studios and offices in Swain Hall and apply. Positions are open in announcing, engineering, programming, news, public relations, promotion, and production.

WUNC will be on the air nightly from now until April 9, when the station will sign off for spring vacation. The daily program schedule is available at the station in pamphlet form.

Some programs of interest this year on WUNC include "Carolina Roundtable," a discussion program in which listeners' comments and questions are aired: "Spectrum," featuring outstanding broadcasts of music and unusual events; and regular broadcasts of ACC basketball games.

How far can your ideas take you in the new world of opportunity in data processing at IBM?

Growth and discovery: The development and application of data processing at IBM open a new world of exciting opportunities for individual career growth. Data processing is producing some of the most far-reaching developments of our age. Each basic advance in technology and application requires new concepts. Ideas—new thinking and new ways to approach problems—are needed. For the individual who likes to discard conventional solutions and find new ideas, there's room to grow in IBM.

IBM offers graduates with Bachelor's or advanced degrees in Engineering, the Sciences, Business Administration, Economics, or Liberal Arts challenging assignments in the marketing of information systems and equipment. These opportunities increase with each new system that is designed to meet the growing needs of business, industry, government, research, education, and space. Each technological advance and each new application can enlarge the scope of your own career at IBM.

A wide range of positions: Rewarding opportunities will exist in more than 190 IBM Sales and Service Offices, located in major cities throughout the United States. Positions open include:

Marketing-Sales: The IBM Data Processing Representative is a consultant to his customers. He calls on customer executives, giving timely information, presentations, and demonstrations for better business management and controls through data processing.

Systems Engineering: IBM Data Processing Systems Engineers are men and women who study customer requirements in depth, devise the best approach, define a preferred machine and operational solution, and assist in the implementation of this solution.

Customer Engineering: The IBM Customer Engineer is a specialist in precision data processing machines and systems. He is responsible for the installation, maintenance, and functioning of IBM's vast line of electronic and electromechanical equipment.

Opportunities for advancement: IBM offers you extensive initial training, both in the classroom and on the job, in the area of your special interest. This training continues as you advance along a planned career path leading to professional or managerial positions. IBM also offers company-sponsored education programs to keep you abreast of developments in your field, and a tuition-refund plan to give you financial assistance for graduate study.

Company-paid employee benefit plans are comprehensive, and include life insurance, family hospitalization and major-medical coverage, sickness and accident pay, and retirement benefits, to name but a few.

See your college placement director to determine when IBM will interview on campus, and make an appointment to see our representative. We will be glad to discuss openings and opportunities at IBM, including our training and education programs, financial rewards, and company benefits. IBM is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

Rejuvenated Wolfpack Lays In Wait Tonight

Molinas Gets 10-15 Years

NEW YORK (UPI) — Gangling ex-basketball star Jack Molinas, who was accused as the "master fixer" in the bribery scandal that involved 47 players from 27 colleges, was sentenced Monday to 10 to 15 years in state prison.

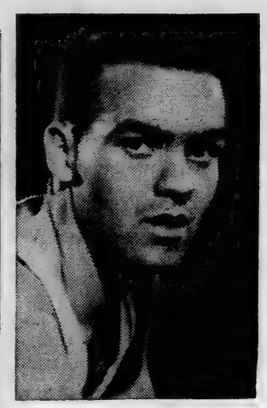
Judge Joseph A. Sarafite of state Supreme Court, who sentenced Molinas and called him a "completely amoral person," also moted out lesser terms to three of Molinas' associates in the bribing of college players.

Five other persons ,all former players who pleaded guilty to bribery charges, were given suspended sentences by Sarafite because they "cooperated" with the district attorney. Sentencing of a ninth man was postponed because he is under psychiatric observation.

Billy The Kid And UNC Posse To Test 'Circulatory Motion'

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Wily old Everett Case, his growling Wolfpack and some 12,000 basketball fanatics wait in anticipation tonight as North Carolina invades Reynolds Coliseum to renew an old grudge battle.



Last year, Carolina walked into the Coliseum credited with a 10-point Chapel Hill win over its hated relative. The Tar Heels walked out soundly humiliated, 85-57.

This season, UNC was forced into a forty-five minute contest before being able to lock it up in overtime on Larry Brown's jumper. The score was 67-65.

Since that time, ancient master Case has rounded his boys into tournament shape with the installation of a new shuffle type offense which he calls "circulatory motion."

The "motion" almost paid off Saturday night as the Wolfpack put up a heroic battle before falling to Duke, 56-55.

State's ACC record of 4-7 is a deceiving one. The Pack has lost to the two best teams in the conference by the combined total of three points. They have dropped two games they shouldn't have to last-place Virginia. Tonight, they will be out to prove there is still a big "four."

KEN ROHLOFF

And leading the charge will be flashy guards Ken Rohloff and Jon Speaks. Speaks, NC State's most proficient scorer, sat out some of the Duke game due to an injury. But he may go all the way tonight. If he cannot, 6-2 newcomer Don Greiner will step in.

At center, Case will probably start 6-8 John Key with 6-10 Ron Gossell, the understudy. The forwards will be chosen from Jim Whitfield, Pete Auksel and Larry Lakins—all 6-5 or better.

Carolina, still hopeful of a second-place ACC finish, will again have to make room for a spectator on its team bench. Charlie Shaffer will definitely not suit up, and his absence will be felt underneath the boards.

In his place, Coach Dean Smith will probably alternate Mike Cooke and Ray Respess to go along with Brian McSweeney at the other forward position.

The guard slots will be handled by Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet. Slick quarterback Brown is averaging a shade under 15 points a game, while Poteet is long overdue on his shooting from the field. Yogi experienced a miserable two for 13 from the floor in the Wake Forest loss.

UNC's fifth man will probably be responsible for half the expected attendance tonight. He is 6-4 Billy Cunningham, now being called the finest sophomore ever to bounce a basketball in the ACC.

Cunningham is now averaging 22.4 points a game due to his 65 markers in two games last week. A more important aspect of his play tonight may be his rebounding work, for, according to Coach Smith, State presents one of the best off-the-board teams in the league.

Gametime tonight is 8:15 p.m. The freshman preliminary will begin at 6.

Murals Begin Cage Playoff

By STUART BALL

The single elimination Intramural Basketball Tournament got underway yesterday as Dormitory blue and white teams started pounding away at each other in an effort to determine this year's winners.

Today the fraternity divisions do battle, and Phi Delta Theta, defending champion in both blue and white sections, has its work cut out to retain the crowns.

In today's blue division games Phi Delt meets SAE, Chi Psi takes on ATO and DKE does battle with Pika. The white teams have five games scheduled: Phi Delt Swords vs Sigma Chi; Sigma Nu Whites vs Kappa Sig; Sigma Nu Losers vs Phi Gam Fijis; ATO Buckeyes vs Delta Sig Rogues and the Chi Psi Psychoes vs the PiKA Plebians.

Favorites are hard to determine as 13 teams enter the tourney with perfect records. The white division has 22 participants and nine teams with unblemished records. The blue teams number 14, and five are undefeated.

Walt Tuthill, assistant intramural manager, announced Monday that both bowling and table tennis entries will be due tomorrow at 6 p.m.

Bowling Leagues will be set up with four divisions. Respective winners in each will compete in a single elimination playoff for the title.

Table tennis is a point system activity with 100 possible points and will be set up in fraternity, dormitory, and grad divisions.

Cindermen Win

By LASZLO BIRINYI, JR.

Perhaps a more appropriate name for UNC's indoor track and field team might be the indoor cross-country team.

Saturday, this team played host to Clemson and N. C. State in a triangular track meet, and won by the razor-thin score of 63½ to Clemson's 60½.

State was able to score only 13 points. Of Carolina's eight firsts, members of the cross-country team captured six, either as individuals or as members of a relay team. Clemson outscored Carolina in the field events by six points even though Carolina managed to capture two firsts, the same number as Clemson.

Carolina's first victory came in the pole vault where Heath Whittle defeated Stuart Corn of State. Corn defeated Whittle the last time the two had met, but this day belonged to the Carolina thin-clad as he cleared 14 feet, 6 inches better than Corn's best effort.

Carolina's other field victory came in the high jump where Tom Clark soared to a height of 6 feet, 6 inches. In other field events, UNC could capture but one fourth as William Graham III finished fourth in the shot put which was won by T. McLoughlin of Clemson with a put of 48 feet 7 inches.

In the sprints and hurdles, John McNinch captured a third in the 60 yard dash which was won by B. King of Clemson. King's time was 6.4 seconds. King also won the 70-yard high hurdles where T. Brown and A. Wellmen, both of Carolina, finished second and third respectively. Brown scored another second in the low hurdles but once again King,

UNC Flippers Swim By VPI

Reserve bench strength provided the points Saturday as Carolina's varsity swimmers swamped VPI, 62-33.

Coach Pat Earey cleared the bench, enabling many of his reserves to see action, as the Blue Dolphins copped nine ot eleven possible first places.

Carolina faces an all-important ACC engagement tomorrow night in Raleigh when it faces an unbeaten and strong NC State squad.

Scott Smiley, Earl Bradford, Harry Schiffman and Thompson Mann combined to win the medley relay. Smiley and Schiffman returned later to join Archie Millis and Joe Mummaw on the winning freestyle relay entry.

Harrisson Merrill and Thad Adams finished first and second in the 200 freestyle while Marion Smith and Howard Cone were one-two in the 50 yard sprint. Jack Anker added the fourth first place of the day for UNC in the individual medley.

Sophomore Dave Moody, competing in his first varsity meet of the year, won the diving event. VPI's Tomilson and Buie scored firsts in the 200 butterfly and breaststroke events, respectively. Larry Kowal, (100 freestyle) Russell Redding (backstroke) and Mike Bissell (500 freestyle) also took first firsts for Carolina, with Redding turning in his best time of the year, 2:17.1 in the 200-yard event.

Chancellor Aycock Predicts

Enrollment 12-13,000 By '70

By CHUCK NEELY

In an hour-long talk to a Gerrard Hall audience Monday night, Chancellor William B. Aycock predicted a UNC enrollment of 12,000 to 13,000 students by 1970.

Sponsored by the Student and University Parties and the State Affairs Committee, Chancellor Aycock spoke on plans for expansion for the University at Chapel Hill and the problems confronting the three branches of the consolidated University.

Chancellor Aycock noted that the purpose of student government was an important one in that it was up to student government "to develop leadership in the realistic laboratory of campus life." To attain that end, the Chancellor said a new student union was "essential." He noted that the facilities of Graham Memorial and its floor space are greatly lacking when the needs of the different organs of student government are examined.

He said that the proposed student union would provide 100,000 square feet of floor space devoted entirely to student activities, with another 25,000 square feet for a book store and other needed facilities. Graham Memorial provides only 25,000 square feet to meet the needs of UNC students.

In addition to a new student Unio, Aycock said that plans for a new dormitory and an undergraduate library are being pushed in the General Assembly. He stated that the University was virtually assured of the construction of a new auditorium-basketball court in the near future.

Plans for this building are now before the legislature, and stand a good chance for passage, according to Chancellor Aycock. If the plans are passed, construction will begin in time to have the new court open for the 1964-1965 season. At present, some 6600 permanent seats are envisaged, with provision made for the erection of 2800 seats in bleacher form, thus bringing the total seating capacity to 9400.

While the auditorium-basketball court would be entirely state financed, it is probable that the University will have to look elsewhere for at least part of the funds necessary to build the undergraduate library, the student union, and the new dormitory. It is hoped that the state will provide at least half the needed funds for these proposed buildings. If the funds fail to materialize, the University will seek help from private sources, increased dorm rent, and the Federal government.

However, the Advisory Budget Commission has already given its approval for the construction of an undergraduate library which will help ensure its legislative passage.

The proposed buildings would be located as follows: the undergraduate library would be built on the east side of Louis Round Wilson Library, as an addition to that building; the student union would be constructed on Emerson Field; and the new auditorium would be built beside Woollen Gym extending over a portion of the Intramural Field.

Chancellor Aycock's discussion was not confined to the University in Chapel Hill alone. He referred to the proposed name change and clarified the issues involved. He stated that under the three-point system which has been devised by the Pearsall Committee, the three main campuses of the Consolidated University would be expanded, that Charlotte and Wilmington Colleges would become four-year institutions with Asheville-Biltmore joining their ranks in time; and that a system of community colleges, or two-year colleges, would be evolved. Whether or not the new four-year colleges would become an integral part of the University of North Carolina will be decided by the Board of Trustees in the future.

Aycocok noted that more emphasis would be given to an expansion of the Graduate School and the schools of graduate study at the University in Chapel Hill, to provide an opportunity for the increased number of college graduates produced by the new four-year colleges.

Under the plan advocated by the committee, WC will accept undergraduate men not earlier than 1964, with State forming a program of Liberal Arts, and with Carolina registering a slight increase in the number of freshman women admitted. These women will be admitted to study Art, Music, or Dramatic Arts in the fall of 1963.

On the whole, Aycock said he felt that the proposed University and college system for North Carolina was a good noe and one that must be carried out if the youth of the state are to be properly educated.

Asian Flu Not Yet Epidemic; About 40 Cases In Infirmary

By MARY REGAN

A spokesman for the UNC Infirmary said yesterday the expected Asian flu epidemic is not explosive so far." He added that the number of flu cases entering the infirmary slacked off yesterday afternoon.

If the flu reaches epidemic proportions, the spokesman said students will remain in the dorm and will be treated there. However, he said he "would call the signals when the time comes."

Of the 45 students in the infirmary yesterday, approximately 90 per cent were suffering from Asian flu.

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Allison Allen, Patricia St. John, Roberta Phillips, Ann Morrow, Susan Kenerly, Linda Goldberg, Diane Hile, Linda Stephens, Betty Whitley, Sally Duren, Wilbur Johnston, Richard Johnson, Martin Brennaman, Ralph Reed, Neil Clark, George LaMonte, James Lindley, Scott Silliman, Harry Lindley, James Poole, Joseph Jones, Wade Taylor, Andrew Harold, Joseph Gibbs,

Interviews for the executive positions will be held from 2 to 5 p.m. Monday through Wednesday next week in the Y.

Campus Briefs

Y OFFICERS INTERVIEW

Interviews for major YWCA executive offices will be held next week, Donna Bailey, president of the YWCA, announced today.

"It is not necessary that these officers have a great deal of previous experience, she said. "The important thing is that they should be interested in the work of the Y and be willing to work."

The offices involved are president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, membership chairman, and worship chairman.

There will be a meeting for all girls interested in Y work Thursday at 5 p.m. in Gerrard Hall. The officers' duties will be explained at the meeting.

A.P.O. RUSH

Alpha Phi Omega, National Service Fraternity, will have Spring Rush at 7:00 p.m. February 18 in the TV room of Graham Memorial, and February 19 in Roland Parker Lounge in Graham Memorial. All who are interested in service to the University are invited.

AFS

The American Field Service will meet upstairs in Lenoir Hall at 6:00 Thursday night.

WESTMINISTER FELLOWSHIP

The Westminister Fellowship has scheduled a retreat for Saturday and Sunday, February 16 and 17. Cars will leave at one and two o'clock Saturday. The topic for the retreat will be a discussion of "mendacity". Further information and reservations are available at 942-3753.

CROSSROADS AFRICA

A film, "Crossroads Africa," about the pilot peace corps project in Africa, will be shown tonight at 7:30 in Carroll Hall.

Jim McCorkle, a graduate instructor here, will introduce the 54-minute film. He participated in the "Crossroads" project in 1961.

THE MARINES HAVE LANDED

A U.S. Marine Corps officer selection team will be on campus on the 13th, 14th and 15th of February 1963 to talk with students interested in becoming Marine Corps officers. All interested students should contact the selection team at "Y" Court through the 15th.

CIRCULO HISPANICO

Circulo Hispanico will meet Friday at 7:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge in Dey Hall, 4th floor. The program will consist of Spanish songs with guitar accompaniment by Maria Elena Bravo and Miriam Almaguer. Refreshments will be served. All are invited.

CWC

The Carolina Women's Council will meet at 6:30 p.m. today in the Grail Room at G.M.

All dorm women interested in playing in the CWC's bridge tournament should sign up now with their dorm social chairman.

Heels Overcome State Lead, 68-63

By HARRY LLOYD
(Special to the DTH)

RALEIGH — Billy Cunningham's clutch rebounding in the closing minutes was worth more than his 23 points last night as North Carolina came from behind to defeat the State College Wolfpack, 68-63.

The Tar Heels won their seventh ACC game of the season and their second over the tough Wolfpack.

In a freshman game, UNC's Tar Babies sustained their second loss in 13 games, 83-55. The win for the Wolflets gave them a 6-7 mark.

Some 11,400 fans in Reynolds Coliseum saw State take a lead with 5:06 to play on Jim Whitfield's three-point play, and then push the advantage to three on Ken Rohloff's jumper.

But then Yogi Poteet, Ray Respess, and Cunningham hit consecutively for UNC, and Coach Dean Smith's charges were never headed again.

After substitute Don Greiner hit for State, Larry Brown hit two free throws with 1:28 left to give UNC a 62-59 lead.

State then missed on two straight foul shots, and Cunningham was there both times to make the save for Carolina.

Cunningham's turn shot with 30 seconds left sewed the game up for UNC.

Shaffer, Cooke Out

Poteet trailed Cunningham in scoring with 17, and Ray Respess had 13. Neither Charlie Shaffer, with an injured elbow, or Mike Cooke, with the flu, saw action in the game.

Pete Auksel led State with 15, John Key had 12, and Rohloff 10.

Auksel hit a jump shot at the end of the first half to give State a 29-27 lead at intermission. The opening period was close all the way, with no more than six points separating the teams.

Cunningham's first basket on a layup gave UNC its first lead at 8-6. Billy then canned a free throw, and the Tar Heels had what turned out to be their biggest lead of the period, three points.

After the score was tied at 14-14, State scored three times in a row on baskets by Key, Sinnock, and Auksel to give the Wolfpack its widest margin.

State's halftime lead came from the fact that it had a perfect seven from the foul line. Cunningham, three for three from the line, was the only UNC player to hit a first half foul shot.

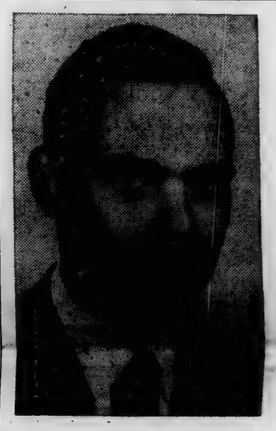
Billy had 13 in the first half to lead both teams in scoring.

Dorm Spotlight Is On Cobb Girls

The only time the men see Cobb these days is when they meet their dates.

The girls have taken over.

The redecoration of the dorm was completed last summer and it is now perhaps the most attractive on campus. The girls love it.



Juniors predominate in West Cobb, and an active group has resulted. Residents hold positions on the Women's Resident Council and the WAA. A volleyball team collaborated with a fraternity to win the Co-Rec tournament.

The House Council, composed of three representatives from each floor, is led by Dorm president Kay Stinson. The group was responsible for the acquisition of three extra telephones for the dorm.

Study hours are observed well, and there are several rooms on each floor set aside for this purpose.

Other officers are vice-president Ormand Deane, secretary Shelby Purser and treasurer Carol Moore.

RICHARD LEE BRAND

Brand Found

Body Found Yesterday Afternoon

By MICKEY BLACKWELL
And GARRY BLANCHARD

The body of French graduate student Richard Lee Brand, a .22 caliber pistol still in his hand, was found at 4:45 p.m. yesterday. Brand had been shot once in the head.

The body was found in a wooded area about 30 yards from the intersection Pittsboro Street and Chase Avenue by Dr. Phillips Russell, out walking his dog at the time.

Police said they believe the gun to be the same one reported missing Monday from the home of a girl classmate of Brand's, where a note was found last week indicating Brand had been despondent for some time. Police are still not releasing the content of the note.

Police declined to release the exact content of the note.

Police declined to release the name or address of the classmate.

Brand's mother and stepfather had left only hours before Brand's body was found to return to their home in Oklahoma City. Police revealed that while they were in Chapel Hill they received a telephone call from their daughter, still in Oklahoma City, during which she said she had received a letter from Brand postmarked Feb. 6th. Brand was last seen on Feb. 5th, walking in the general direction in which his body was found.

Police said Brand probably mailed the letter from the vicinity of Victory Village on the 5th, but the mail had not been picked up until the following day.

The body is at Walker Funeral Home in Chapel Hill. Orange County Coroner Allen Walker Jr. has ruled "probable suicide."

Pendergraph said a picture of Brand and descriptive information has been sent to authorities in both these towns. "We haven't heard a thing from them yet," he said.

Brand's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Leo W. Scott, were in Chapel Hill several days trying to provide information on Brand's disappearance.

Before they left yesterday to return to their home in Oklahoma City, Mrs. Scott said she had heard nothing about her son. She said she felt her son "may come walking back in here."

Mrs. Brand doesn't believe her son was bent on suicide. "I don't think he'd ever take his own life. I think he's just plain tired and wanted to go off for awhile."

A note written by Brand indicated he was in a depressed mood, according to local police. Some officials agree with Mrs. Scott that Brand might have decided to "get away from it all" without telling anyone. However, his car is still here and there is no indication he packed any clothing.

Chapel Hill police and University officials organized a mass volunteer search last Thursday, but no clues or further evidence turned up.

Tour Program Data Available

Dr. Robert E. Cralle, Executive Director of the University Study Tour to Hawaii, announced recently that bulletins and application forms for the 1963 University Study Tour Program to the University of Hawaii Summer Session are now available.

Special rates for Mainland students and teachers for the 6 week (54 days via ship) Hawaii Summer Session Program begin as low as $555.00. Off-campus activities include dinner dances, island sightseeing trips, beach parties, cruises and field trips.

Students Urged To Reserve Dorm Rooms For Fall, Summer

UNC Director of Housing James Wadsworth yesterday urged all students who want to make sure they have a place to live next year or who want to reserve the same room they have noow to pay their deposits by Apr. 1. This date also holds for summer school reservations, Wadsworth added.

"The student takes a real chance when he doesn't pay his deposit on time. Every year we hav people coming to us complaining because they were placed in a dorm where they didn't want to be. And every time it's because they didn't pay their deposit by April 1."

Wadsworth said that the Housing Department couldn't designate roooms for incoming Freshmen until April 2. "At that time students on campus who haven't paid their room deposit stand a very good chance of losing their rooms for the next year," he said.

Summer school rent is $20 for a double room, $30 for a single room and $40 for married couples. This rent is due with the Summer School Application.

The Pen's Poison, But Manners Are The Motive

'Otelia'—It's No Pseudonym

By ALAN K. WHITELEATHER

Otelia Connor writes such stinging comments on the social manners of our times that she has been suspected of being the pseudonym of a crotchety editor whose pen has an acute case of acid hemophilia.

Over a goodly number of years—the exact number is better left unsaid — Mrs. Connor has been nipping the group conscience of the Durham-Chapel Hill area.

Currently, she operates as The Gadfly of Chapel Hill, particularly raising welts on the hides of University of North Carolina students. At any time of day or night, she will be on hand to pick off the wanderer from good manners.

Only the lone transgressor will be aware of her attack—until the arrival of the first newspaper she can find space in. Mrs. Connor, better known just as Otelia, is an inveterate letters-to-the-editor writer.

Otelia doesn't confine herself solely to manners. Her forays into nose-picking, door-holding and telephone-monopolizing have come primarily since her migration to Chapel Hill about six years ago.

Otelia says she writes about "anything that hits my head." Devout readers of the letters-to-the-editor columns will confirm that everything gives Otelia a pretty hard knock.

Otelia's flypaper is the social injustice, the underdog, the over-inflated fathead who needs pricking, the plain, old common decencies. Her interests may touch on an ill-deserved parking ticket or underpaid teachers.

Otelia's accent is on people — that renowned "human factor" in any situation or circumstance. And among people, it is the individual that is important to her.

Otelia is a product of the plantation South. In fact, she was educated in her home, spending only three years in public schools.

She hankers after and practices the social code of yesteryear, a system that soundly preserved a woman's femininity. But she has just enough brashness to make her genuinely exciting.

Otelia's lament is that she has to remind today's youth she is a lady. (She doesn't think only of herself here, but of all women.) As a result, she finds herself doing what "their parents should have done." Take the following example from her writings:

"One day I was going out of a double door at Lenoir (UNC campus dining hall) and had pushed the right door out, when a swarm of students came marching through.

"I said, 'Look here. Don't you see a lady trying to get through?' "

The students snickered, but Otelia got through, the students having been stopped "dead in their tracks."

Otelia's sometimes blunt broadsides have built up the Otelia Connor myth. (One newspaper even found it necessary to reasure its readers that there really is an Otelia Connor.)

In actuality, Otelia was a housewife and mother of two children. "All those 9,000 (students) are my children, now." She is the widow of an American Tobacco Co. executive and lived all of her married life in Durham.

"I lived in Forest Hills in Durham, and all I did was chauffeur the children. I never want to live in the suburbs again."

Her children grown, she looked around for a place to light. She stuck to Chapel Hill. "It's a wonderful place to hang your hat . . . and you can get around without a car."

Otelia just chuckles when she is called the unofficial guardian of the public manners.

"I always tell people I'm one ambassador without portfolio. They don't know what that means. . . . I guess I really don't either, but it usually starts a conversation that gives me something to write about."

Many are the people who have found she will present credentials at the drop of a social courtesy. And with her youthful spirit, she promises to be on the job for years to come.

Bids Being Taken For New ZBT House Near Golf Links

Construction bids are now being prepared on the new ZBT Fraternity House on Finley Golf Course Road, according to Larry Fine, ZBT President.

The bids will be received in Chapel Hill in late February by the fraternity's building committee and architect. April 1st is set as the proposed date for the beginning of construction.

According to ZBT President Fine, "We are extremely pleased that we will be able to begin construction in the early Spring so that the new house will be ready next fall. The new house is a symbol of ZBT's progress and bright future at UNC. Zeta Beta Tau Fraternity was chartered at U.N.C. in 1927 and is presently housed in its own building at 121 W. Rosemary Street.

The new quarter-million dollar fraternity house will be located in the new fraternity court in the southern-most 1½ acre. With sleeping accommodations for 44 men in the beginning, the two-story, completely functional fraternity house features light, airy two-man rooms with dining and recreational facilities for over 100. All resident living and study areas are on the second floor with bedrooms opening not only to the interior areas but also onto an enclosed balcony. The first floor contains the dining and kitchen areas as well as lounges, recreation, guest and utility areas. A complete housemother's apartment with private bedroom, living room bath, and kitchen is also on the first level. Rooms on the first floor open, through sliding glass doors, to a walled courtyard on both sides of the house.

Artist's Concept of New House

Architect for U.N.C.'s newest fraternity house is Mr. Jerome M. Cooper of Atlanta, Ga. The new house is being financed by the local chapter's Alpha Pi Foundation with the assistance of the chapter's alumni and National Fraternity.

Enthusiasm And The Line Between Interest And Pressure

There is an overwhelming amount of basketball enthusiasm in this state which quite often appears to be the source of unnecessary contention between various organizations and concerned individuals.

The enthusiasm and support which should be pure boon to any school or college in the area, occasionally grows out of proportion and turns into a vicious, frightening bit of public "pressure."

We would not contend that this warping of enthusiasm is the general case, nor, specifically, that the issue we propose to discuss herein is an exact case in point. But we feel that a column which recently (Saturday, February 9) appeared in the sports pages of the "Greensboro Daily News" provides, perhaps inadvertently, some insight into the source and nature of misdirected public concern for the operation of a school's athletic program.

* * *

The column to which we refer was written by the Sports Editor of the "Daily News," and it subtly chastized Duke University for cancelling its twice-played, Christmas-holiday basketball game against Wake Forest, which had been played in the Greensboro Coliseum since its inception in 1961.

We would like to take issue with both the column and the approach to intercollegiate athletics of which we feel it is indicative.

Although the game was a very popular event, and although many of us had hoped that it would become a regular event, and even though we aren't really "taken" with Duke, we feel that, as indeed wrote said Sports Editor, "it is Duke University's privilege to play whom it wants to, where it wants to, when it wants to."

Yet this, of course, is not a simple matter. Numerous involvements complicate the scheduling of any and all athletic events. There are various "obligations" to be met, requirements to be fulfilled, and aspirations to be achieved. We, as surely must practically every sports fan, realize the complexity of scheduling basketball events.

What we would like to be a simple matter, however, is the understanding on behalgf of all that public pressures and "demands" can too readily create unhealthy situations.

We suggest that the city of Greensboro, in general, and the Sports Editor of the "Daily News" in particular, not go too far with their condemnation of any university athletic department when it does not function, or schedule, as they might have it.

* * *

Perhaps some of the confusion on the matter comes from the unclear nature and intention of various supposed statements of fact which seem to color the aforementioned sports column.

The columnist writes that "Piedmont North Carolina was able to contribute this holiday feature to the intercollegiate basketball program, just when intercollegiate basketball in North Carolina was darkened by scandal and probation and de-emphasis."

What, exactly does this mean?

Certainly, it was a dark day for intercollegiate athletics throughout the nation, when news of the basketball scandals broke. But what about this matter of "contribution?"

Who contributed what? What is a holiday feature? Is it thousands of enthusiastic, loyal and loud fans, or is it two highly skilled basketball teams engaged in a spirited contest? Duke and Wake must certainly appreciate the support and the facilities, but it would seem that there is no "feature" without the game—the teams. Don't we, all too well, realize this now?

We would also question as to just who is the recipient of said contribution. It would seem, to this fan, that the athletic teams of Duke and Wake made quite a contribution. And that, in any event, whatever it was, whatever its source, the contribution was gratefully received by enthusiastic fans, rather than by a supposed broken and humbled intercollegiate basketball.

The columnist states that when the Big Four schools had no game, that Piedmont North Carolina gave them one, and that "it was a ringer-dinger-doo."

Well, hoping that we understand the term, who made the game a ringer-dinger-whatchamacallit? It seemed, at the time at least, that two skilled basketball teams from two fine colleges were doing their part to make it one of them there things. Can anyone imagine a game between Wake Forest and a local high school (say Page) being a ringer. . . . ? We can't, and we were glad that Duke University was providing the opposition.

Just as we regret that, apparently, Duke will no longer be providing the opposition. (Of course there are some better basketball teams in the immediate area, anyway.)

But though we will miss the "holiday feature," we would repeatedly stress the necessity for accepting a loss without manifestations of bitterness.

* * *

The line public between "interest" and "pressure" must surely be a very thin one, just as, no doubt, is the line between good public relations and protection of private interests. Perhaps Duke has crossed the wrong line at the wrong time; it would appear that way.

But nevertheless, let's keep the enthusiasm and emphasis where it belongs, for the good of the student-aahlete and his university, if not for the demands of over-zealous fans. (CW)

Trustees Told University Expansion Plans

Statement on University expansion at the Board of Trustess meeting in Raleigh Friday. Mr. Friday is President of the Consolidated University.

By WILLIAM C. FRIDAY

I am conscious of a rising sense of the importance of this occasion. A special meeting of the Board of Trustees has been contemplated for several months. During these months the work of many hands, and heads, and hearts has been directed toward this hour. I have had the sense this morning also that this meeting is the culminating event not of the work of several months but of years; not the result merely of the work of one commission or one trustee committee, but a logical development of generations of effort by faculties, alumni, citizens, and successive Boards of Trustees.

I have been thinking this morning about the meetings of this Board of Trustees, some that I have witnessed and some that I know only from history. Some have been characterized by quiet and routine transaction of business. Others have been marked by the vigorous debate and controversy which is properly associated with university life. But one always senses a great resource of popular leadership and latent strength when this body assembles. In the largeness of our membership we also feel a sound and secure identity with the richness and variety of the State which gives life to our enterprise, and draws life from it. Yours is the oldest trusteeship of any state university in America.

The naming of trustees was the very first action contained in the charter. By this act the future of the University was entrusted to their hands.

A university more than any other institution assumes a future. Virtually everything that it does presupposes a future. Thus greatness in a particular university requires not only that it understand and serve the needs of the times, but also that it wisely anticipate and courageously plan for the needs of the future. The line of development of our own University for these 175 years has been the line of trustee projection of the university mission beyond current problems into the life of future generations.

It is in this concept of trusteeship that the program which has been presented today is advanced. And it is in this mood of appreciation for the University's historic importance in the progress of our commonwealth that I undertake to say a few words about it. I will not burden you with a repetition of the elements of that program or a reiteration of the reasons underlying every one of the recommendations. The chairman of the Special Trustee Committee has done that with admirable clarity and force. However, speaking as one who has been called, for a time, to administrative responsibility in our ongoing University tradition I wish to express my enthusiastic and unqualified endorsement of the recommended program and my wholehearted appreciation to the trustees and to other University associates who have worked so devotedly to bring it forward.

I said I felt a rising sense of the importance of this occasion. I say this because I believe that destiny has called upon us to make a decision which will have the utmost significance for the future of the University and the State.

These are difficult times in the affairs of peoples and of nations. science and technology. It follows, perforce, that they are times of necessary growth and qualitative change in institutions of higher education. The question which we confront today is simply this: How will North Carolina meet these conditions? What response, in particular, does the University of North Carolina make to the threat and the challenge of multi-dimensional change?

There is no state in our union that has not felt strong currents forcing accommodation of institutional arrangements in higher education. Some have floundered in trial and error and moved from one improvisation to another with consequent impairment of standards, reputation, and accomplishment. Others have wisely combined flexibility and necessary growth with sound guarantees of quality and academic excellence. It is our desire and our aim to be one of these latter; and the aim is favored by the happy fact that thirty-one years ago our trustees looked ahead, wisely and boldly and projected into an undisclosed future what now has become our sound foundation and time-tested formula for yet another bold and confident advance.

When the General Assembly and some of the trustees, acting under the strong leadership of Governor O. Max Gardner, sought to effect the consolidation of three separate but kindred State institutions they acted in circumstances far different from those prevailing today. Strict economy in all State activities was imperative. The main threat to standards then was not uncontrolled expansion but debilitating retrenchment. The problem was to husband resources and protect vital institutions by a formula that would conserve the university idea in the crisis and give promise of greater fulfillment in the future. Although conditions were different they were actuated by the same perdurable aim, namely: a university of excellence and distinction for the State of North Carolina.

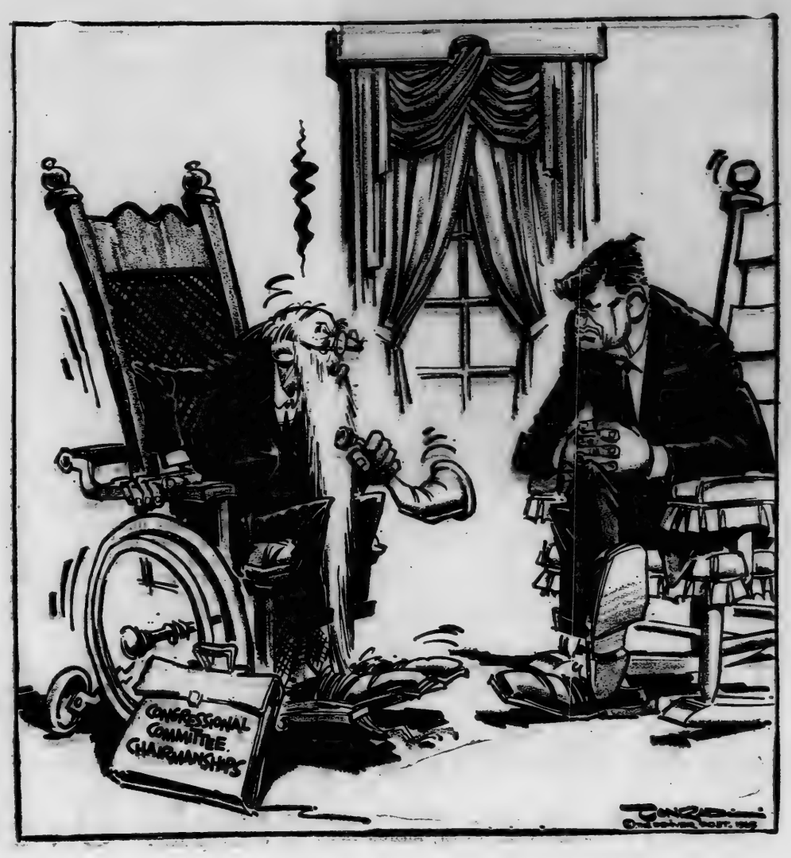
The words of Governor Gardner, spoken in an address of March 2, 1931, express the high purpose that he held and deep confidence he felt in the ultimate benefits to be derived.

I believe that this General Assembly will make a definite and permanent contribution to the progress and life of North Carolina in its general efforts to adjust our government to the problems of the period in which we live, but I declare to you in my judgment that the consolidation of these three great institutions under one central conrol will mean more for the future of North Carolina than any other and all other legislation with which we struggle. It makes possible ultimately the united support of North Carolina behind one great unified, co-ordinated, and intelligently directed educational enterprise.

The program which Governor Gardner advocated was not accepted by the Legislature without surmounting formidable objections and without rallying the concerted effort of citizens, trustees, faculties and alumni. Even then, but for the unexampled courage and resourcefulness of Frank Porter Graham, upon whom fell the task of shaping three hitherto separate and rival institutions into a larger conception of one three-fold university, it is doubtful that Governor Gardner's vision could have been realized. With the impulse of Gardner, the guidance of Graham and then Gray, and the powerful collaboration of Woollen, Carmichael, Brooks, Foust, House, Teague, Jackson, and Harrelson (not to mention present company and many others who are not here today) we have been brought to a favored place in the world of education and in the strength of our institutional resources and arrangements to push forward in another advance for our University and our State.

The Act of Consolidation coupled three institutions into one. It also established a plan for avoiding costly duplication. Instead of attempting to have two engineering schools we would concentrate our resources upon one. Instead of two business schools, there would be one. According to the plan of allocated functions, specialized programs, especially graduate and professional programs, would be developed on only one of the three campuses. At the same time there would be constructive cooperation and interchange among faculties and institutions. A member of our Graduate Council has called this "the doctrine of complimentary strengths." Thus, strength in design at Raleigh might complement strength in city and regional planning at Chapel Hill. Strength in food sciences at Raleigh might complement strength in home economics at Greensboro,

The thirty-one years since consolidation have been years of advancement for the three-fold university. The growth and progress of the three, and the one, is too evident for me to belabor it here, and besides it is not the past but the future to which we direct our attention today.



We face a new need and a new opportunity in a world that is largely transformed even in the short generation since 1931. We are not educating enough of our people. Despite our proud educational achievements, North Carolina ranks distressingly low among the states in the proportion of its adult citizens who attended college and the proportion of college age youth who go to college. In the face of this harsh fact we see a growing population, a burgeoning economy, and a future which is unlimited if we will but raise the educational level of our people. The need today is not to avoid duplication, but to duplicate, to multiply our educational offerings at the level of general undergraduate training while observing progressive enlargement of professional and graduate education within the University structure. We must call into play the structure and machinery established in thirty-one years of experience for a broadening of university programs and services appropriate to demonstrated needs of the present and and soundly estimated needs of the future.

The program which has been put forward today is a logical stage in the progressive implementation of ideas implicit in consolidation. It draws the gathered resources of the three-fold University into the ongoing effort to advance all education in North Carolina. It casts the line for future growth of the University within the concept of one State University. It provides for necessary expansion while at the same time preserving institutional integrity. By defining the University purpose, it protects against wasteful proliferation. By broadening admissions policies and undergraduate programs, it opens doors to many worthy and eligible students. By establishing a framework for future expansion, it assures a continuing attention to new area needs for University education. By adopting a name which denotes the oneness of the University, it assures a solid unity of the entire University family working for a better state.

I express my profound appreciation to William Aycock, John Caldwell, Otis Singletary, Donald Anderson, Fred Weaver, the faculty committee, and many others for the splendid spirit of cooperation and helpfulness in shaping this program. We are unanimous in our judgment that the best interests of the University and the State will be served when this program is fully implemented.

So it is with the occasion that fortune presents to us today. The people of the State await your answer this morning. As I see it, we either go forward on the bouyant impulse of a lofty program of larger service, or we say nay and rue the cost of forfeited opportunity.

Earey Says 'We're Ready'

By JOEL BULKLEY

"We're ready for State College now," reported coach Pat Earey yesterday as his varsity swimmers concluded their preparations for tonight's eight o'clock battle with an unbeaten Wolfpack team in Raleigh.

"We've had some real good competition (Princeton, Navy and the University of Florida) and we're in excellent physical shape and are therefore hoping for some outstanding performances from our boys tonight," the varsity coach added. He cautiously noted, however, that his boys will have to do better in this meet than they've done in their previous ones if they hope to win.

Carolina will be putting its 9-3 record, including a 4-0 mark in the ACC, on the line against an N. C. State team which has swept eight straight duel meets this year. Earey said that this year's State team is "better off than ever", having added some outstanding swimmers from their freshman team of last year to their squad which includes eight lettermen and four All-Americans.

Earey reportd that State may have an edge in the individual personnel department with All-Americans — Ed Spencer (butterfly); Pete Forgarasy (breaststroke); Smoky Ellis (freestyle sprinter) and Bill McGinty (freestyle). But, if our boys can bear up under the pressure and do well, we should really be able to accomplish a great deal.

Those upon whom the burden will be the heaviest include: Thompson Mann, Harrison Merrill, Bill Bloom, Thad Adams, Scott Smiley, Davis Roberts, Barry King, Frank Lea, Pete Swift, Mike Bissell and Ernie Oare.

Cat and Mouse

Coach Earey also related that both he and Wolfpack coach, Willis Casey will be playing a game of cat and mouse tonight as far as their lineups are concerned. He said, "Neither of us will announce specific starters and their events ahead of time, as the meet may be decided by this kind of strategy.

The "key" events will be the 200 freestyle, breast and backstroke races and the freestyle relay. Last year State took the last event of the day, the freestyle relay, against Carolina and walked off with a 50-45 win in the meet.

Baby Dolphins Lose; Meet Page Today

By BILLY HATFIELD

Coach Allen Gentry's record-breaking freshman swimmers finally had their lack of depth catch up with them Saturday as they bowed to Myers Park High School of Charlotte 52-43.

With sprinter Dickie Chance and backstroker Al Schreiber out with injuries and sprinter Tom Bennett missing because of scholastic difficulties, Myers Park managed to pick up five first places. Two of these, the 200-yard medley relay and the 200-yard freestyle relay were seven-point events.

In the 50-yard freestyle, Rick Inderfurth of Myers Park picked up a first place with a time of 24.0. Sensational Tom Murphy of UNC pulled off firsts in both the 200-yard freestyle and 100-yard butterfly events.

In the diving competition, Jones of Myers Park took first as did his swimming mate Wycne in the 100-yard backstroke. John Sheldon of UNC collected chopped firsts in the 100-yard and 400-yard freestyle events and Rick Forum won the 200-yard individual medley. Dick Boardman did a fine job in winning the 100-yard breaststroke.

Recruiting Restrictions Are Eased At UNC And State

The deemphasis of basketball at the Consolidated University of North Carolina may soon become a thing of the past.

The deemphasis, a result of the basketball scandals in which players at the University of North Carolina and North Carolina State College were involved, started in 1961 with the cancellation of the Dixie Classic tournament and restrictions on recruiting and scheduling at the two schools.

Monday, Chancellors at the two schools said that the recruiting and scheduling restrictions had been lightened. Both Carolina and State will be allowed to recruit four prospects each year from outside the Atlantic Coast Conference geographical area. In addition, the schools can add two more non-conference games to their 1963-64 schedules—making a total of 21 regular season contests.

After the scandals, the schools were limited to only two recruits outside the area and 16 regular season games. The 1962-63 schedules were increased to 19 games.

Chancellor John Caldwell of State said he and Chancellor William Aycock of UNC agreed on extending the recruiting limits because "we realize how difficult it has been for our institutions to compete against other schools in the conference for talented basketball players."

Carolina's basketball coach Dean Smith said, "It will definitely put us on a more competitive basis with Duke and Wake Forest. Being able to recruit four doesn't mean we will be able to get that number."

Smith added, "With the new ruling, we will definitely go outside the state and the area and try to get as many of the four as we can."

State's veteran coach Everett Case was also pleased with the decision. "I am very happy. It was an impossible situation the way it was. We couldn't have continued to compete with Duke and Wake Forest (number one and two teams in conference standings the past two years). This new freedom will help us a great deal. Four good players are enough to form the nucleus of a strong basketball team."

Caldwell added that the decision on recruiting will be made each year and "remain in effect as long as it doesn't upset the balance of North Carolina boys on the squads."

VIRGINIA TICKETS

Tickets are now available to students and faculty members for the Virginia-UNC basketball game on Feb. 20, on a first-come, first-served basis at the Woollen Gym Ticket Office.

Only one ticket may be purchased per person and each person must present his own identification and athletic pass cards.

State Indicates Interest In Negro Gridders

Earle Edwards, football coach of North Carolina State College, said Monday that he is interested in Negro prospects provided that they can meet the school's necessary requirements.

Three years ago Irwin Holmes was co-captain of the Wolfpack tennis team. He was the first Negro athlete to compete in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Other conference schools have indicated earlier that they plan to recruit Negro athletes who can meet the requirements of their schools.

Maryland already has a Negro on its football team and Billy Hildebrand of Wake Forest recently talked to an outstanding Negro high school football player in South Carolina.

"We intend to consider everyone recommended to us," said Edwards. "As far as I know, the road is open to recruit Negro players."

De Gaulle May Offer ECM Spot To Britain

Ban Talk Will Get Priority

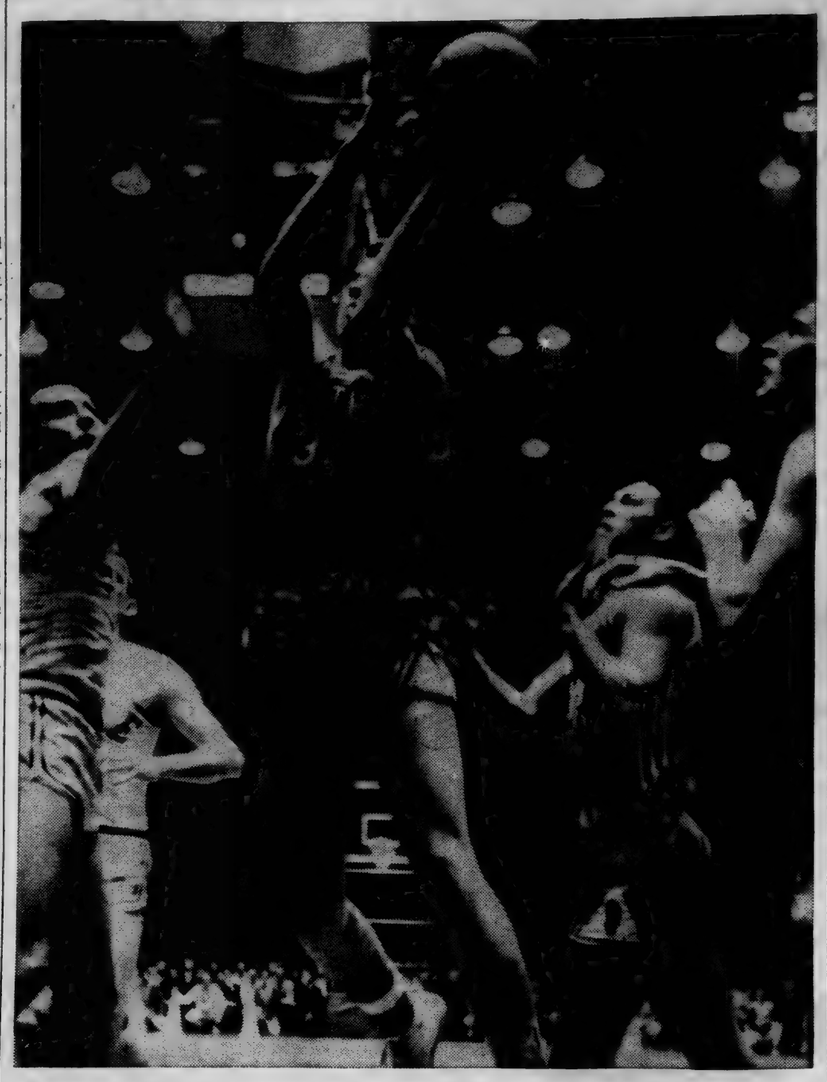
GENEVA (UPI) — The neutral nations sided with the West Wednesday on giving a nuclear test ban treaty top priority at the current 17-nation disarmament conference.

The eight neutral nations—Brazil, Burma, Egypt, India, Nigeria, Mexico, Ethiopia and Sweden—agreed at a closed meeting that such a treaty should be the No. 1 conference topic.

They acted after U.S. diplomats sought to win their support for pressuring the Soviet Union into sincere test ban bargaining.

The Russians opened the new round of disarmament talks Tuesday by taking a "tough line" on a test ban and stressing a Kremlin declaration that would strip the United States of its overseas nuclear bases. They appeared to be trying to sidetrack test ban talks.

Conference sources said the neutral nations decided to follow a "wait - and - see" strategy for the next two days while East and West continue their conference debate. Then the neutrals may spur a joint drive for speeding up the talks.



Whatever the neutrals do, it became clear Wednesday they were not distracted by the Soviet from working toward a test ban. "That old Russian magic is gone," one Western source said.

President Kennedy's special disarmament envoy, William C. Foster, conferred with neutral leaders about speeding up test ban talks.

Foster held sessions with delegations from Egypt, Nigeria, Brazil and Sweden. He also planned to see the Ethiopians before or after Thursday's conference session. Foster met with the Mexicans and Indians Tuesday.

Late Wednesday the four Western nations at the conference—the United States, Britain, Italy and Canada—held a strategy meeting to discuss the new Russian "hard line."

The so-called "Friendly Four"—France is boycotting the talks—were reported pleased wit hthe neutrals' negative reaction to the opening Soviet move.

BILLY CUNNINGHAM, Carolina All-American candidate, goes up for a basket during the opening minutes of the UNC-State game in Raleigh Tuesday. It was Cunningham, with a 22-point average, who sank a turn shot with 30 seconds left to sew up the game for Carolina after State had led with only 5:06 to play.

Dormitory Spotlight: Ehringhaus

Ehringhaus, though all freshman, has been the most active dorm on campus this year, and we are looking forward to a great spring semester.

Ford Rowan, the dorm president, had this comment yesterday when interviewed by the Communications Committee.

The dorm, one of the two largest on campus, has had an active social schedule throughout the fall semester, including a dance at WC, a mixer with Spencer, a beer party and three combo parties after football games.

Despite all the fun, the men seem to study hard. The large study room on the ground floor is utilized often by residents, and there is an excellent library. The books are almost exclusively concerned with freshman courses and the library is operated on the Honor System.

The dorm is divided into three sections for intramurals, and teams are fielded in every sport by each section.

Dorm administration is handled by an executive committee composed of dorm officers, IDC representatives and committee chairmen. It plans all dorm functions at its weekly meetings.

The newspaper, "The Outhouse," was distributed several times during the fall semester and plans bi-weekly publication for the remainder of the year.

Parking Tickets May Mean Loss Of Permit

As many as 200 students are in danger of losing their parking permits for having committed four or more parking violations this year, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs William Harriss said yesterday.

Harriss' office is authorized to suspend parking permits of those with five or more violations. Revocation means that an offender may not possess or operate a motor vehicle in or around Chapel Hill for the period of suspension.

This regulation applies only to tickets collected on the campus and not to town tickets.

Britt Blames 3 Factors For SPlit

The recent split in the Student Party was the subject of discussion at a meeting of the party and the newly formed Independent Student Party Tuesday night.

The events that led to eight SP legislators leaving the party were outlined by party chairman Robin Britt. He said three factors were responsible: a breakdown in the open forum within the party, a lack of party action this year and lack of communication between various groups within the party.

Student Government Vice-President Mike Lawler agreed with Britt that these factors had been important, but said the two groups shared different concepts of the political party as a campus organization.

A general discussion followed these two speakers with members of both segments participating.

The Student Party hopes to make a conciliation with the split group.

The party also voted to reduce membership dues from $1.50 to $1.

Stacy Meeting Will Discuss 3-Man Rooms

The question of three-man rooms in the Lower Quad next year, athletic equipment and social facilities will be discussed in Stacy dorm tonight at a meeting of the University Party Grievance Committee at 9.

Residents may also air any complaints they may have concerning any phase of the University.

Several girls will be present to discuss the social room problems and the possibilities of exchange parties with the women's dorms.

Marshall Bellovin, Co-Chairman of the Committee, said that Reid Sugg, Dorm Manager of the North Campus will discuss the general conditions of the rooms in the dorms, bulletin boards in the dorms, and the possible improvement of the study rooms and social rooms.

As an affiliate of the University Party, the group will also seek suggestions for the University Party's spring platform.

PHYSICS CLUB

Dr. Eugen Merzbacher will lecture on "New Quantum Effects" to the A.I.P. student section tonight at 8 in 233 Phillips.

Passengers Knew Crash Was Coming

MIAMI (UPI)—The body of a stewardess—her crossed arms still clutching a pillow to her chest in a standard survival technique— indicated Wednesday the 43 persons killed aboard a jetliner in the Everglades knew in advance they were going to crash.

There were signs that the plane first started to break up in flight —either from an explosion or violent weather.

These facts pointed toward this theory:

—Nowhere in the marshy wilds was there any furrow indicating the pilot had attempted any sort of an emergency landing.

—Wreckage was scattered over an area of two square miles.

—No piece more than 10-feet long could be found of the big wings that once supported the 100-ton jet.

The plane, Northwest Orient Airline's Flight 705 bound non-stop to Chicago, dropped from radio and radar contact at 1:42 p.m. EST Tuesday, just seven minutes after it took off into a violent squall line.

Area Was Cloudy

It was raining at the time and a cover of black clouds hovered at 800 feet. Tornado warnings had been posted for the area earlier in the day.

A helicopter pilot spotted the wreckage of the plane five hours after it crashed, but it was morning before most investigators could reach the remote area. What they found was a jig-saw of debris and death.

The major piece of the fuselage lay crumpled like a cigar that had been crushed under foot and a set of landing wheels stuck up grotesquely from the marshy turf. Bodies of at least 19 persons were thrown clear of the wreckage and, strangely, they dented the soft earth in a way that would indicate the plane was eastward when it hit—although the plane was headed westward when it took off.

The bodies not thrown clear were still strapped to their seats. The cockpit with three bodies inside was located a half-mile away from the smouldering fuselage.

Find Six Witnesses

Authorities found six persons who witnessed part of the air tragedy. The six were fishing on the Shark River, a few miles short of the crash site.

What they saw appeared to bear out the theory that the craft broke up in flight.

The fishermen said they were watching the dark clouds in the sky when "suddenly a fireball burst inside a thunderhead." "Then," said Gordon Mansfield, Ohio, host of the fishing party, "a streamer of fire fell out of the base of the cloud and stretched to the ground."

"It was followed by the sound of a heavy explosion."

Investigators poured over the wreckage for five hours Wednesday—painstakingly mapping every detail—before they would permit removal of the bodies.

Civil Aeronautics Board specialists found the plane's flight recorder and immediately dispatched it to Washington.

Use School As Morgue

When investigators were content they had a complete record of the crash, the bodies were removed and taken to a little two-room school house which had been converted into a morgue.

By mid-afternoon, authorities said they had counted 31 bodies. Coast Guard helicopters, using the school yard as a landing field, flew them out in groups of four and five. The victims were taken to Jackson Memorial Hospital in Miami.

Campus Chest To Aid Latin American Plan

The Campus Chest will give $700 to the Latin America student exchange program this year as one of four charities it will aid.

This program sends one UNC student each year to study in Latin America while Carolina hosts a South American student.

The rest of the money collected in the drive will be divided among the American Friends Service Committee, mental health and the World University Service. The Chest will decide the proportion of money given each.

The collection of money will begin March 11 with a solicitation drive that will run six days. An auction will be held March 12 and a Carnival on March 16. The Chest's goal is $6,000.

The money donated to mental health, Chest officials said, will be used in research in mental retardation of children. Money given to American Friends Service Committee and the World University Service, officials said, will aid students internationally with food, clothing and books.

LEGISLATURE

The Student Legislature will meet tonight at 7.

Flu Outbreak Doesn't Make Any Headway

The story on the Asian flu epidemic in Chapel Hill is that there is no story. And in this case, no news is good news.

Wire reports speak of an epidemic that is "sweeping" the east coast with North Carolina having been declared an "epidemic area," with flu outbreaks in approximately 20 counties and at least two deaths due to the Asian flu.

Orange County and the University, however, have been spared from most of the ravages of the flu epidemic, according to wire reports. A major outbreak of the flu was expected soon after University students returned from the semester break. The expected outbreak has not materialized as yet, according to Infirmary officials, though measures for treating students in the dormitories have been planned if and when it does.

Not Unusual

Dr. O. David Garvin of the Orange County Public Health Department said yesterday that his office had received "rather vague reports of a number of flu cases" though not an unusual number for the season.

He said further that there were many cases with the symptoms of influenza, but "not to a degree to be classed as Asian."

Absenteeism due to influenza has not been of significance to the University or to the public schools as it has been in other parts of North Carolina, he added.

Infirmary Quiet

Dr. Edward Hedgpeth of the UNC Infirmary said yesterday that "things are relatively quiet at the Infirmary," in referring to the traffic in flu cases. Most of the 40 cases of students in the Infirmary yesterday were flu cases.

Death Penalty Unfavorable To Di-Phi

The Di-Phi passed a resolution condemning capital punishment Tuesday night.

The resolution, which was introduced by Rep. Hubert Hawkins, was passed by a vote of 5-3, and by the Society and guests, 7-4.

The main arguments for passage of the resolution were that capital punishment is inefectual as a deterrent of crime, that man has no right to condemn his fellow man to death, regardless of that man's offense, and that in a progressive society such as that found in the United States, methods should and can be found to rehabilitate past offenders.

Opponents of the resolution stated that capital punishment was needed to eliminate the more brutal and unreconstructable elements of our society, that no man has the right to commit a capital crime and escape unscathed, and that present sociological methods for rehabilitation of criminals are far too inadequate to allow capital offenders to enter back into society.

At the conclusion of the meeting, President Arthur Hays noted that three Conditional Representatives had fulfilled the necessary requirments to become full representatives. The three initiated into the society were John De Freas, Leslie Bailey and James Reston.

A resolution was introduced by co-sponsors Nat Dean and Chuck Neely for debate on February 19. This is a resolution "advocating the right of all dormitory residents to hold office in the IDC." This resolution, if passed, would be a preliminary step toward allowing fraternity members to hold office in the IDC, if they were dormitory residents.

PANHELLENIC COUNCIL

The Panhellenic Council will have a reception for all Sophomore, Junior, and Senior girls who are interested in Informal Rush. The Reception will be held Sunday, Feb. 17, in the TV Room of Graham Memorial, from 8 to 9 p.m. Those wishing to participate in second semester rush may sign up at the reception. (Dress in formally.)

To Finance Construction

$10 Hike Expected For Dorms In Fall

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

UNC dormitory residents will face an increase in room rent next year.

Business Manager J. Arthur Branch said the increase was needed to repay borrowed money to build a nine-story, 925-man dormitory which tentatively will open in the fall of 1965.

The exact amount of the increase isn't known at the present time, but Branch reports, "It will probably be $10 per semester." The present rent for men is $85 per semester plus a $1.50 social fee.

The final decision on the exact amount of the raise probably won't come until the State Legislature decides whether to help in the construction of the new dorm.

No Help Anticipated

"As it stands now, we are not going to have any help from the state in constructing this dormitory," Branch pointed out. "But," he added, "President Friday and Chancellor Aycock are trying hard to convince the Legislature that half of the new dorm should be provided by the state."

The new dormitory will cost $2,544,000. UNC administrators are trying to persuade the state to pay $1,272,000 of that amount. "Until the legislators decide what they are going to do on this matter, we won't be able to say exactly what the rent will be. All we can say now is there will be an increase," Branch said.

Recent Increases

The last changes in room rent came in 1955 and 1957.

On May 1, 1955, rent as increased from $50.75 to $65.75 per semester. This increase partially supported the construction of Teague, Parker and Avery dormitories.

The last major change came Sept. 1, 1957 when rent increased from $65.75 to $85.75 per semester. This was to support the building of Craige and Ehringhaus dormitories.

The social fee was increased this semester from $.75 to $1.50 for men; the women's social fee is $2.50 a semester.

Man Wields Bomb, Asks Impeachment

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A man demanding impeachment of President Kennedy and Chief Justice Earl Warren drove his car onto the steps of the Justice Department Wednesday and lay under it for two hours before police flushed him out with tear gas.

From under the car the man, identified as Nathan Wise, 33, of Phoenix, Ariz., threatened to blow himself up unless permitted to talk with FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover about "rackets in the U.S. government."

Wired to the bottom of the car was an overnight-style suitcase which Wise said bore a bomb. But when dismantled by Army Lt. Leland D. Eisenhower, Arlington, Va., the suitcase was found to contain nothing more deadly than newspapers and a flashlight.

Lt. Eisenhower is no relation to former President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Gets Psychiatric Exam

Whisked off in a police car after being forced from beneath his car by tear gas, the short, stocky Wise was taken to D.C. General Hospital for a psychiatric examination.

In Phoenix, a family spokesman said Wise had been under psychiatric care. The source said Wise had a sanity hearing Jan. 25, but the Superior Court judge denied a motion that he be admitted to the state mental hospital.

He was last in Phoenix three or four days ago, and did not tell relatives where he was going. Wise is married and has a 7-month-old daughter, the family source said.

Told at the hospital that his handcuffs would be removed if he would behave, he replied: "I have alwas behaved myself." He told questioning police virtually nothing, except: "J. Edgar Hoover knows what I am here for." An FBI spokesman said the agency had no idea what Wise had in mind.

Justice Department building guards were the first to reach Wise after his auto suddenly swerved off Pennsylvania Ave., crossed the sidewalk and came to rest with the front wheels on the top of the FBI building's three steps.

Wise quickly got out of the car and crawled underneath. The building guards said he told them he sought the impeachment of the President and his entire cabinet. FBI agents who spoke briefly with Wise said he told them the same.

A little later Washington police Lt. John Dials talked with Wise and said he called for Justice Warren's impeachment. Deputy Police Chief George R. Wallrodt said Wise also mentioned "rackets in the U.S. government."

Auditions For Plays Will Be Held Today

Petite Dramatique will present a bill of three one-act plays as its first Spring production. Two of the plays, "The Sandbox" and "Zoo Story," were written by Edward Albee, well-known as the author of the current Broadway success, "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" The third, "Voices on the River," is an original script written by Harry Callahan, a graduate student at UNC.

Auditions will be held for these plays at Graham Memorial today at 8-10 p.m. Participation is open to the entire student body and the casts require several men and women.

This production will be directed by Richard King, a graduate student in Dramatic Arts. The three one-acts will be staged in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial on March 7-9.

All interested students are encouraged by Petite Dramatique to participate.

French Place Censorship On Comments

PARIS (UPI)—President Charles de Gaulle moved Wednesday to soft-pedal France's dispute with Britain in a possible prelude to a reconciliation with London following the bitter rift over the vote of Britain's Common Market membership bid.

French sources said De Gaulle may be preparing to offer Britain associate membership in the Common Market or propose some sort of "bridge" between the Common Market and the "outer seven" trade group led by Britain. Government sources said De Gaulle personally ordered a complete clampdown on statements by French officials on the Common Market issue.

A foreign affairs debate in the National Assembly was called off as was an expected statement by Foreign Minister Maurice Couve de Murville.

Interview Canceled

Information Minister Alain Peyrefitte canceled an interview on the Common Market crisis he was to have recorded for the Canadian Broadcasting Company. The usual detailed summary of the foreign affairs report given Couve de Murville to the cabinet Wednesday morning was omitted. Peyrefitte merely told newsmen Couve de Murville had mentioned the Common Market among a number of other issues. He refused to be drawn out further on this.

Officials said De Gaulle believes the furor touched off by his Jan. 14 news conference and his torpedoing of the Brussels Common Market talks already is beginning to cool down.

He was said to have been encouraged by indications elsewhere of a lowering of the political temperature.

An Associate

French government sources said De Gaulle has insisted ever since his news conference that, despite the breakdown of the Common Market talks, Britain still could join as an associate.

Officials have said it would be perfectly feasible to conclude almost at once a simple trade pact between Britain and the Common Market nations simply on the basis of the points already agreed on in 15 months of negotiations. French sources saw two possible forms of association:

—A direct association between Britain and the Common Market, similar to the agreement already concluded between "the six" and Greece.

—A more ambitious attempt to agree on some form of "bridge" between the Common Market and the "outer seven" European Free Trade Association.

Communications Satellite To Be Hung In Orbit Today

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) — Countdown was underway Wednesday for a planned U.S. attempt to rocket its "Syncom" communications satellite into a difficult "hanging" orbit above earth.

The feat scheduled for about midnight is unlike any other tried. If successful, the 150-pound Syncom will be placed in an orbit so high it will appear to hover over one area of earth instead of circling the globe in customary satellite fashion.

A three-stage Delta rocket, which already has run up a string of 14 space shot successes, will carry Syncom aloft.

The key to the ambitious mission is the programmed 22,300-mile high orbit. At this altitude, the forward speed of a satellite matches the rotation speed of earth.

The result is that, to an observer on earth, the "radio relay" satellite would seem to stay in one spot in the sky. Actually, Syncom's orbit would turn out more in a figure-8 pattern because of the launching at an angle to the equator. But it was to remain over one longitude.

Syncom represented the first "hardware" test by experts who envision a network of three satellites in the 22,300-mile "24-hour" orbits to handle instantaneous global radio, television and telephone communications in the future.

Previous communications satellites such as Telstar and Relay proved the feasibility of using "radio stations" in space to beam such signals between continents. But at their lower orbits, it would take from 30 to 50 Telstar-type satellites to make up a full network.

As a satellite, this first Syncom was comparatively simple. It carried only four moving parts and was equipped only to handle radio, telephone and teletype transmission. Because of weight limitations, it could not be rigged to relay television signals, as did Telstar.

Uses Delta Rocket

Scientists were more interested in the mechanics of the 24-hour orbit. The flight plan called for the Delta rocket to give the satellite its big push in the first few minutes. It was to take a little more than five hours for Syncom to coast up to its peak altitude. The satellite was to reach the 22,300-mile level over Madagascar, off the coast of Africa.

No Qualified Negroes? –Dolphus Knows Better

Champion Dolphus, a 32-year-old Charlotte bus driver, must be snickering today under his friendly-bus-driver smile.

In Tuesday's Charlotte Observer a headline, "They Found The Opening But No Negroes Qualified For It" introduced a feature on equal employment practices in Charlotte. The story said there were not enough "qualified" Negroes to fill jobs recently opened to them. "Are qualified Negroes available in Charlotte for jobs that are open and will be opening to them? Many people think not."

Under this front-page story was a picture of Dolphus, one of the first eight Negro bus drivers hired last year in Charlotte. Dolphus was said to be "well-received in his new job and likes his work"—as a side thought the story said Dolphus was a 1957 graduate of A&T College in Greensboro.

The Observer apparently saw nothing incongruous in its presentation of facts: (1) Not enough "qualified" Negroes for available jobs; (2) a Negro college graduate (from the best Negro school North Carolina provides) is given a job; and (3) the job is driving a bus.

Many people apparently see nothing incongruous in offering a graduate of a technical college a bus-driving job—if that graduate is a Negro. This leads into the part of the iceberg-size problem that is below the surface.

What kind of job? When and where? How much training and education needed? What salary? The problems of discriminatory employment cannot be solved by agreeing to the principle of non-discrimination—it is a question of time, which brings seniority in jobs, a question of money and motivation, which bring training and education, and a question of initiative on the parts of both employers and employees.

* * *

Discrimination in employment carries much less of the sensational overtones of school segregation, lunch counter sit-ins or "freedom rides." No one gets elected governor of a Southern state by advocating discrimination in jobs, although supporters of "fair employment" practices can expect to gain votes in Northern cities.

Nondiscriminatory employment only recently has been accepted as a major public question in the South, although the rest of the nation has struggled with the problem for some time. In a recent speech in Chapel Hill Gov. Terry Sanford advocated equal employment practices for North Carolina —his words received a fair hearing throughout the state.

The obstacles which Gov. Sanford, as well as any other public official, will have to surmount in dealing with employment are many: reluctance of private industry to go along with the government, legal restrictions on the government, and silent, unofficial discrimination by both industry and labor.

* * *

As of 1962, according to a Dept. of Labor report, more than a fourth of white males working were in professional or managerial occupations—this compares with only 8 per cent of the male Negro working force. In this statistic lies much of the Negro's working dilemma—even with the proper education and training, the overwhelming majority of the best jobs are in the hands of whites.

In contrast, 21.9 per cent of Negro males are unskilled laborers, in comparison with 5.9 per cent of whites. Sixty per cent of working Negro females are employed as service or household workers in 1962, as compared to only 20 per cent of white females.

Another aspect of the problem is salary level. In 1960 Negro men earned 60 per cent as much as white men, and Negro women 50 per cent as much as white women.

Negro leaders probably are most afraid of the specter of unemployment in all this talk about Negro jobs. Negroes are the first to be hit and the hardest hurt by unemployment, because (1) many Negroes are in unskilled and semi-skilled work divisions, where layoffs are more frequent than in skilled jobs; and (2) Negroes have entered the industrial work force more recently (generally) than whites and thus have lower seniority ratings. Whereas only 5.7 per cent of white men are unemployed and seeking work (as of 1961), 13 per cent of Negroes are without a job. The unemployment program for Negroes is particularly difficult with those below 20 years old.

These statistics, in the context of the present employment situation, seem obviously to point to needs for increased Negro education and, more important, increased Negro training in semi-skilled and skilled jobs.

Even if that education and training is forthcoming, however, increased industrial and commercial automation could keep Negro unemployment high—since the low-seniority Negroes would be the first to be fired, when automation hit. In any case, what is needed is an intelligent and rational decision, NOW, that fair employment practices are desirable (within and without government); that more money and energy must be spent, NOW, on education and training (of all the unskilled, Negro and white); and that the initiative for this must be taken, NOW, by leaders in business, labor, government and the community, in order for all the American people to have full and equal opportunity. Open Letter To Gopher Bend–!

Dear Gopher Benders,
(c/o The Editors

As you all know I left recently to go to Fuquay Springs and buy some good seed potatoes and a load of fertilizer which will be sent to Gopher Bend soon in time for an early planting and there was some who said while I was in the big city to find out about the ruckus up at the University but nobody in Fuquay Springs seemed to know much or care much either so I went up to Chapel Hill where you would be surprized how cosmopolitan everybody is and sophisticated too; and anyway it was a big hew and cry going on about a feller named Buckley on account of he can sure talk the ears off a jackass so he came down to Chapel Hill and did. Only they were supposed to pay him four hundred dollars which is a lot of money and too much for only one night's work and actually talking instead of working at that, only actually he was reading what was in this magazine where they have girls that don't go in for clothes much and they don't look exactly like the girls back in Gopher Bend either so everybody had already bought a copy of the magazine to look at anyway and it had this speech in it too, so it wasn't worth $400 and to my way of thinking that's too much to pay a man for only one night of not actual work anyway, much less when it was for free if a man got a copy of all those girls and they sure were worth it. So everybody was real mad and then the mayor of some place called Forum which was where the talk was actually at, well he said that he didn't reckon he would honor the contract because this Buckley didn't have any honor, so that was his excuse, and besides $400 is too much for one night of anything because I remember all one year once I didn't make that much when the rain washed out half of my seed corn in the north field and the one by the creek got flooded too and then to top it all off there was a drought in summer. It just goes to show.

Heck. A man could get a car for $400 and still have some to even go to Raleigh and stay awhile whats more if he wanted to, but I doubt if he would because an extra mule is more use and so is some fertilizer.

Well when they all did get in this hassle for sure and everybody who was a liberal and thought this Buckley was a crackpot all along wrote in to the paper and said they used to think a lot of Buckley but now they didn't anymore and everybody who was a conservative said they couldn't hold up their heads anymore because their school was a debt welsher, and then some society (I think their name was Diabolic Misanthropic or something real impressive like that) got together and they didn't like Buckley either on account of his toilet tongue which didn't use very nice words at all only my guess is they didn't like Buckley all along, but I don't know and then some fellow wrote in and said it wasn't what he said but where he scratched that was shameful because he said he was sitting down there where he could see an dmaybe that's why he went down there to sit in the first place is so he could see, so I guess he knew, and then Buckley wrote in his own self only he didn't say much either, only jokes mostly because he knew they would have to pay eevn if he didn't dserve it, and for only one night on top of it all.

And then it was beginning to quiet down a little only it didn't because of Buckley's letter and they all went at it again like the time back in Gopher Bend when Hank Golby's dog bit Seth Barlow's son Tom who was feeble-minded like all of Seth's litter and he died later but it wasn't from dog bite, only Seth wanted to shoot Hank's dog and some said he should and some said he shouldn't, and they were all taking sides when Hank's dog fell in the creek and drowned because that was the only dog I ever heard of that couldn't ever learn to swim and Hank had only just barely saved him several times before when he fell in the water, but he sure could tree a coon which was why he and Hank got to be such good friends, and then too, some allowed it was probably Tom bit first, since he was like that, but then everybody was friends again after Hank's dog got drowned. Only Hank was kind of low for a day or two.

You all probably recollect how there used to be this strange bunch back in Gopher Bend and they kept mostly to their own selves and their name was Christadelphians, well anyway, they thought the good Lord was fixing to come again any minute now almost, and when he did it would be them that took over and run things and they figured they would have heaven right here on earth, and I expect they would have, too, if it had panned out the way they hoped but it didn't and after a spell it got where they couldn't drum up much new business in the way of getting other people to believe it was true either, so after a while there weren't any people left who did believe it because they were all dead of old age, but anyway I expect they enjoyed it a whole lot while they was here, thinking how they would have the biggest house in Gopher Bend real soon, only their feelings probably got hurt when their own offspring didn't believe it either and of course they never did get the big house, either.

But the way it is about Buckley is sort of like that, everybody taking sides like about Hank's dog that couldn't swim only both sides think they are just about to have their own way, like the Christadelphians used to think, and then they will be set up just fine only I don't think they will, but they have a lot of fun thinking so anyway, so I haven't tried to tell anybody any different from what he thinks is true, and I don't think they would believe me if I did whats more.

But heck. You can't blame a man for that.

Your ambassador abroad,

—"John Dun"

Great Teachers Cited By Otelia

To the Editor:

What has been said about the great writer—that he wakes up the great words—may be said about the great teacher, of whom there are not a few at the University of North Carolina. I have in mind my most recent teachers—Dr. George V. Taylor and the late Dr. James E. King. Both had a delightful vocabulary, and command of language, though sometimes I used to remark that Dr. King used so many big words, in one sentence after another, that I would have difficulty following him. In addition to being masters in their fields, they never used notes, and they brought a freshness to each day's class that never gave the impression that they were getting worn out with their subject. Each put his whole self into his lecture as if it was the first time he had delivered it. I would say this called for a high degree of inspired teaching.

When asked which professor I considered the best, I would say I didn't know, both were alike, yet different. Dr. Taylor paused more often for your mind to catch up with him.

Even if I had not enjoyed Dr. Taylor's entire course, it would have been worth the whole semester to have heard his lecture on Napoleon Bonaparte just before final exams. I had the courses in ancient, medieval, and modern history, but they were too comprehensive to give much consideration to any one phase, so my knowledge was sketchy of Napoleon. He was quite a characater, even if not a very enviable one.

But I felt a closer relationship off class with Dr. King than with Dr. Taylor. I feel a kind of personal loss over the sudden and tragic death of Dr. King which severed his connection with the University. I told him once that he didn't do anything but work, implying that he didn't know how to enjoy himself. He answered that it wasn't work when you were doing the thing you loved. He really was in love with his work and I am glad I had the privilege of sitting in on his class during his last semester hours.

There are so many excellent teachers at the University, I feel I have been very derelict in not taking advantage of many of the opportunities oftered here. We persist in thinking there is plenty of time, forgetting that procrastination is the real thief of time. I never did sit in on R. D. W. Connor's class. It is too late now to find out for myself why he was so greatly beloved by his students.

There are many professors whose classes I would like to avail myself of, but I can only take one at a time, so it will be a good while before I get around. In the meantime, I am doing the thing I love, and am very grateful.

Split Not Prof's Fault

To the Editors,

A recent editorial commented on the social barriers between the professors and their students in Lenoir Hall.

A friend and I ate lunch there today and were surprised to see our teacher, Dr. C. O. Cathey, eating across from us all alone.

"Hey, let's go over and eat with Dr. Cathey," was my first comment.

After a few minutes of discussion we decided that it would be a little too forward and as we were already seated, we decided not to bother.

Dr. Cathey finished his lunch and came right over to talk to us for a few minutes.

Before we left, he had visited another table of his students.

As we went out the door, I remembered the editorial and was slightly ashamed.

It certainly isn't his fault if there is a split!

Sand Pebbles

McKenna Craft Earns Billing

THE SAND PEBBLES. By Richard McKenna. Harper & Row. 597 Pages. $5.95.

By W. H. SCARBOROUGH
The Chapel Hill Weekly

Few books in modern publishing history have received as much prepublication publicity as this, Richard McKenna's first novel. Now that it has made its first appearance in Chapel Hill's bookstores (prior to nationwide publication) the excitement that has attended the successive triumphs of both novel and author has a substantial foundation.

"The Sand Pebbles" is by several measures an impressive piece of work; in spite of its bulk it is one of those novels whose thread of narrative compels the reader to continue reading long after he should have returned to normal routine; no American will be able to read it without turning inward on himself for what may prove to be a first look at the assumptions on which his national identity is based; no one who has sought to perceive in others the humanity that he finds in his countrymen will fail to appreciate the tortuous groping Mcenna has portrayed. Those who take pleasure in good writing will not go unrewarded.

"Sand Pebbles" is a panorama of a microcosm, painted from life. The antiquated American gunboat San Pablo, for years the inefficient, ludicrous bearer of the U. S. flag n treaty China, plods the upper reaches and tributaries of the Yangtze river in China's Hunan province. In the U. S. Navy it has become a part of the legendary reaches it patrols, protecting American missionaries and providing one of the softest berts on the seas. It is almost quaint in its inefficiency, more relic than warship, having been built by the Spaniards and commandeered to enforce U. S. rights in the "treaty China" that had emerged from the collapse of the Manchu Dynasty and the revolution that had failed to win China status as a free nation. The San Pablo had become a birthday cake of indefensible and unwarlike superstructure devoted to the comfort of her crew, few of whom performed more than a passing semblance of seaman's duty. The dirty work had long before been delegated to the "slopeheads," coolies who had no official existence on board, but who ran things from the engine room to the galley, paid by "squeeze," or that portion of the ship's supplies they could permissibly smuggle ashore for their own use. Appearances were spotless even if the engine did suffer grave internal disorders; she ran; she wasn't much, but by God, she was a home and a feeder.

When Machinists Mate Jake Holman boarded her in the mid-twenties, it seemed this state of affairs could continue without change forever. Holman, however, was the sort of catalyst present in any discipline and had previously escaped it by tending the machinery in the hole: here there was no place for him below. To carve his niche was to buck the established order both Chinese and Americans seemed bent on preserving as an essential of life. Worse, he violated tradition and status by regarding Chinese as human, then by a stubborn insistence that he perform engine room duty as he would have on a fleet ship.

It was an order of things that was duplicated on shore, where businessmen and missionaries antagonized one another, each going to pains in their indictment of the other and their attempts to justify their presence and behavior. Work and death could be delegated to the Chinese, who were readily manageable so long as the warlords were propitiated or intimidated. A Chinese national consciousness or assertion of sovereignty inevitably threatened both, but gunboat diplomacy could handle such contingencies.

Through it all Holman moved cautiously, struggling to comprehend what few others had troubled to question, comprehending what he could and suffering for his troubles.

Painfully he managed to arrive at a viable compromise with the factions into which he could never quite enter nor wholly evade but by then the San Pablo was under assault from forces with which she'd never had to deal before.

China was in the midst of a revolution that had crept into Hunan from the north. The revolutionaries, led by Chaing Kai Chek, were daily subjugating more warlords and giving rise to a nationalism that turned the subservient Chinese into mobs that threatened to inundate the western enclaves and end once and for all the position of privilege any westerner took as his natural right in China.

As McKenna draws it, the landscape is one of turmoils and hatreds, of upheavals and humiliations that threaten the assumptions on which westerners have pervasively that the inner reaches of the individual are battered and bruised. It has the elements of an apocalypse or a Gotterdammerrung without Biblical or Wagnerian trappings.

The superficial attractions of the novel are enough that it could be read without the subtitles ever intruding fully upon the consciousness. A disquieting unease is nevertheless unavoidable. McKenna has not so much written a mottled tale of service life, by turns romantic and realistic, as he set down a moral and philosophical dilemma — a dilemma that is on one level that of a West in a world it can no longer dominate, and on another that of the failure of human perception.

"The Sand Pebbles" will be compared with any number of contemporary novels with varying degrees of justification, and these will most likely provide a basis for praise and condemnation, but those points it may have in common with "The Caine Mutiny," "From Here to Eternity," "The Ugly American," or any other would not explain its merits. McKenna is a craftsman-like something different. He may not have established himself in the front ranks of American novelists, but he has produced a work that guarantees it and any successors very respectful attention.

Initiation Planned By History Society

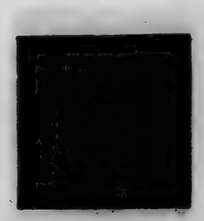
Initiation ceremonies for Phi Alpha Theta, the national honor Society in history, will be held early in March. Any undergraduate having a B average in at least 12 semester hours of history, including Modern Civilization, and a B average in two-thirds of the other courses taken is eligible for initiation. Graduate students who have completed one-third of the residence requirements for an M.A. with a P average are also eligible.

The cost of joining Phi Alpha Theta is $15, which includes a year subscription to "The Historian," and the opportunity to compete for yearly awards and scholarships. The initiation dinner will cost an additional $2.

Any students who consider themselves eligible for Phi Alpha Theta and have not been contacted should get in touch with Professor Bodman in the History department.

Group Tries Revival Of Economics Club

Securing speakers on economics will be the purpose of a proposed Undergraduate Economics Club that will hold an organizational meeting Tuesday at 4 p.m. in 107 Hanes.



Professor David Lapkin and students Reine Remsburg and John Barrows are attempting to revive the club which flourished here several years ago.

Barrow said the club as now planned will not hold seminars and discussions, but will focus on speakers and question sessions afterwards.

The club will attempt to supplement the regular curriculum, Barrow said, with information on current issues affecting the economy. Its topics, he said, will not infringe on those presented by professional business fraternities.

Barrow said all interested undergraduates are invited.

Unbeaten State Downs UNC Tankers By 53-42

Relay Event Gives Pack Final Margin

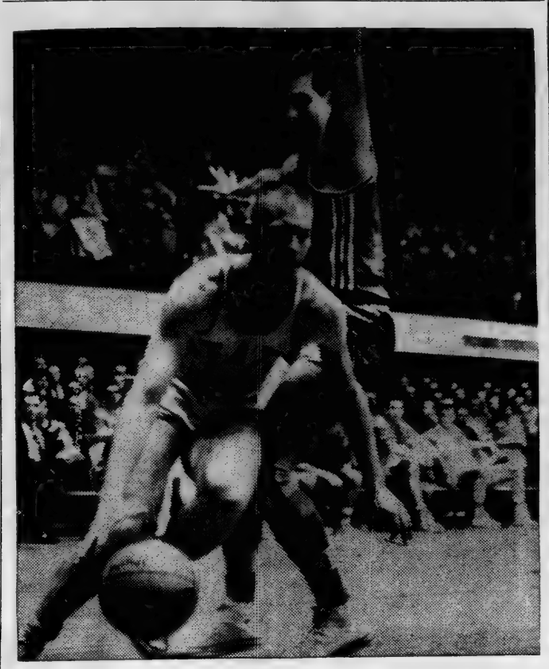
By ETADIN MOLODNU

RALEIGH — Three All-Americans and a sophomore speedster combined efforts here last night to nip Carolina's freestyle relay team in the final event of the meet and erase the hopes of an upset-minded UNC swimming team, 53-42.

All-Amerians Frank Spencer, Smokey Ellis, and Billy McGinty teamed with Harold Senter to give the Wolfpack their margin in the final thrilling race. Spencer finished six inches ahead of UNC's All-American Thompson Mann, at the wire. The time was 3:21.9.

Mann's failure to win an event was a major surprise in this battle of previously unbeaten teams. In his place, Carolina's sophomore star, Harrison Merrill, had to take up the slack. He did so admirably by winning three races—the 100, 200 and 500-yard freestyle events.

Pete Forgarasy, State's fourth All-American, contributed two first places to his team's ninth victory of the year. Fogarasy won the individual medley and the 200-yard breaststroke.



For Coach Pat Earey's UNC club (now 4-1 in ACC competition, 9-4 overall), diver Ernie Oare was the only other individual winner.

State got off to a quick lead when Carolina's medley relay team was disqualified in the first event. In addition to the two relay victories and Fogarasy's double, the Wolfpack received winning indivdual efforts from Spencer, McGinty and newcomer Dick Paoletti.

Spencer won his 200-yard butterfly specialty, McGinty won the 50-yard freestyle and Paoletti raced to a 200-yard backstroke win.

State's fifth ACC win was witnessed by 1,800 fans at the spacious pool in Raleigh.

Coaches Stage Schoolboy Clinic

CHARLOTTE—Everett Case of North Carolina State, Bobby Roberts of Clemson, Dean Smith of North Carolina and Chuck Noe of South Carolina have prepared special sermons for prep basketball players here Saturday afternoon.

Occasion is the annual North-South High School Clinic, which is expected to lure some 1,000 or more schoolboy players and coaches beginning at 2 p.m., at the Charlotte Coliseum.

Each of the Atlantic Coast Conference coaches will speak for 20 minutes on a technical phase of the sport. There will be an added-attraction talk, a discussion of officiating problems by one of the top ACC referees.

Brown Once A Gridder

Because Larry Brown had to give up "my favorite sport, football," he has found himself a leading candidate for the All-Atlantic Coast Conference basketball team this season.

"I was a Little League quarterback in the eighth grade when I hurt my knees in an all-star game in Philadelphia. It nearly killed me to change to basketball, but since everyone on the island (Long Island) was playing it, I figured it would do."

From the playing courts of Long Beach, L. I., to those at the University of North Carolina, the basketball played by Larry Brown has impressed, awed—and beaten—many people. His supporters are happy he traded cleats for sneakers.

IDC May Let Frat Members Join Council

By OWEN BISHOP

The Interdormitory Council will reconsider next week an amendment to its by-laws which would open IDC membership to members of social fraternities.

The amendment was considered last October and failed to get the two-thirds majority vote necessary for adoption.

It was reintroduced at the IDC meeting Wednesday night by IDC President Ralph Mosley. The Council will vote on the proposal next week.

In offering the amendment Mosley pointed out that the Rules Committee of the student legislature must review and approve the IDC by-laws.

"The committee," he said, "has reviewed them and has neither approved nor disapproved them. But they did say that perhaps we should consider this amendment."

"I think," he continued, "that the first time we considered it most of us missed the basic point. The question is not 'should we open the IDC to fraternity men', but rather 'do we have a right to exclude them?' After all, many of them live in the same dorms and pay the same dorm fees that non-fraternity men do."

The meeting was Mosley's first as president. He had been vice-president and moved up to fill the position vacated by Bruce Welch who graduated last semester.

The Council nominated Gordon Appell and Gerry Goode for the position of IDC Vice-President. The new officer will be elected next week and will serve until the end of the regular term.

In other business, the Council unanimously approved revisions in the IDC Court by-laws. Revisions dealt with procedures to remove negligent court members, a reduction in the size of the summer school court, exclusion of members from cases in which they may be prejudiced and other court procedures.

Moseley announced that John Morgan, IDC Representative from Old West and George Stretcher, President of Alexander, have been named IDC members-of-the-month for January and February. Morgan was recognized for his work with the Intramural program and Stretcher for his work on the IDC social committee.

Gerry Goode, chairman of the Dorm Contest committee, reviewed the dorm standings at present. The top five dorms are: Everett, Mangum, Joyner, Ruffin and Avery.

Lin Dearing, IDC Treasurer, announced that the Council will initiate a new system for paying bills. According to Dearing, each dorm president will be required to check all bills at the IDC office twice a month and initial those which are authentic. This is to help alleviate the problem of unauthorized people charging things to dorm accounts. Dearing said also that local merchants will be notified not to charge anything to a dorm unless the purchaser has a dorm charge card.

Clark Brewer, IDC Representative from Craige, was elected to fill a vacancy on the Court created by another member's graduation.

President Mosley urged all dorms to hold regular dorm council meetings. All dorm officers and advisers should discuss dorm problems and projects at these meetings. He said he wanted to see reports of such meetings from each dorm at the first IDC meeting in March.

Don't Go Near Water, Anatomy To Be Shown

The Graham Memorial Free Flicks for this weekend are "Don't Go Near The Water" and "Anatomy of a Murder." "Don't Go Near The Water," starring Glenn Ford, will be shown Friday at 7:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. "Anatomy of a Murder," starring James Stewart and Lee Remick, will be shown at 6:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. Saturday.

Admission to all GM Free Flicks is by student ID cards.

To Connect Public, Legislature

State Affairs Group Has Education Plan

"Educating the public" is the newest point of emphasis undertaken by the State Affairs Committee, the liaison group connecting UNC students with the N. C. Legislature.

"We will continue to encourage the legislators to appropriate the necessary funds for much needed capital improvements, but we think the public should be informed personally about proposals for higher education," Chairman Bill Hoyle said.

The new plans include the formation of a panel of 15 student speakers who will tour the state addressing adult civic organizations and answering questions which anyone might have.

Another objective of the Committee in "informing the public" is to publish "guest editorials" in many of the North Carolina newspapers.

These new functions were added because, according to President William Friday's belief, that "educating the public was the most mature and significant thing that student government could do this year."

Due to the added functions and responsibilities of the State Affairs Committee, Chairman Hoyle has decided to increase the size of the committee "to help us in achieving our goals."

Anyone interested in promoting education by writing letters, editorials, and contacting legislators or other civic leaders are urged to come by student government offices between 2 and 5 p.m. Friday and Monday, or between 9 and 12 noon Saturday.

Minneapolis Symphony Made Initial Tour 57 Years Ago

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, which will play in Memorial Hall at 2:30 p.m. and 8 p.m. Sunday, has a rich and varied history.

The first Minneapolis Symphony tour, made in 1906, covered only a relative small area around Minneapolis. Since then the Orchestra has covered the United States as well as Canada, Cuba, and the Middle East.

During its sixty-year history it has traveled thousands of miles and played in excess of 3,500 concerts in more than 500 cities.

Both performances Sunday will be free to students.

Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, a 39-year-old Polish conductor, was appointed musical director of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra in 1960. He is the former director of the National Philaharmonic of Poland and has conducted extensively throughout his native land and in fifteen foreign countries.

Born in Lwow, Poland, Mr. Skrowaczewski received his early musical training in the Conservatory of the Lwow Music Society as a student of piano and violin. He received his diplomas in 1945 and went on to study composition with Roman Palaster and conduction with Walerian Bierdiajew at the State Higher School of Music in Krakow. From Krakow he went to Paris, where he won international recognition as a composer with his "Prelude and Fungue" in 1947. That same year he won first prize in the Karol Szymanoski Competition with his "Concert Overture."

Other works include four symphonies, four quartets (one a winner at the International Concours of Compositions in Belgium), an opera, a ballet and several works for stage and screen.

After winning the International Competition for Conductors in Rome in 1956 he moved to Warsaw to conduct the Warsaw Philharmonic Orchestra.

It was in Warsaw in 1957 that Mr. Skrowaczeski was noticed by George Szell, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra. Szell invited Skrowaczwski to America, and the latter made his debut with the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra in 1958.

Plan Advanced For Handling Date Tickets

The Campus Affairs Committee of G.M. and the UNC Athletic Department announced yesterday an experimental plan whereby dates on campus may sit together at basketball games but pick up their tickets at separate times.

The plan will be used on a trial basis for the Virginia game and is for dates only.

The boys will be able to get his ticket with his I.D. card and request that another ticket next to his be set aside for his date, whose name he will give. His date must be a UNC student and must fall within the priority list for the game if there is one. She must also pick up her ticket with her own ID card on the same day that her date had requested that a ticket be set aside.

If the girl does not pick up the ticket set aside for her that same day, the seat will no longer be reserved for her.

Youth Corps Proposals Presented

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy sent Congress a special youth message Thursday that included his plans to set up a brother agency of the Peace Corps to work at home.

As one means of combatting the problems of youth in this country, Kennedy proposed a volunteer national service corps which would be similar to the Peace Corps.

While opening the new corps to all ages, Kennedy made plain his idea was to use the energies and abilities of youth in putting the organization to work in mental hospitals, Indian reservations and slum neighborhoods.

Kennedy also submitted a battery of proposals to attack the problem of a growing pool of unemployed youth. They would:

—Expand the present overseas Peace Corps by about one-third.

—Initiate a $100 million program for a paid youth conservation corps along lines of the Civilian Conservation (CCC) of depression days.

—Step up federal activities to work on juvenile delinquency, family welfare and child care. The President told Congress: "Chronic world tensions have tended to distract our attention from these problems which have long-range rather than immediate consequences. But each passing month makes it clearer that our past failures to identify, understand and meet the many problems relating to our nation's youth cannot be countenanced any longer."

The President was high in his praise of the overseas Peace Corps which he recommended should be expanded from 9,000 volunteers from the end of this summer to 13,000 by September, 1964.

"Nowhere is the profile of the best of American youth better drawn than in our Peace Corps volunteers," he said in the congressional message.

The only price tag specifically placed on the program was the $100 million for the CCC-type youth employment bill.

Kennedy's proposed youth conservation corps would allow for the training and employment of about 40,000 younger people—15,000 of them in forests and recreation areas; the others on such local projects as hospitals, schools, parks and settlement houses.

The national service corps would operate on the much more voluntary spirit that has marked the Peace Corps. It would provide low pay, and would be made only on community invitation and under local supervision.

VIRGINIA TICKETS

Tickets are now available to students and faculty members for the Virginia-UNC basketball game on Feb. 20, on a first-come, first-served basis at the Woollen Gym Ticket Office.

Only one ticket may be purchased per person and each person must present his own identification and athletic pass cards.

JFK Fears Recession If Taxes Aren't Cut

PLAYMAKER'S THEATER — While the Carolina Playmakers present the 'Rhinoceros" inside, their their theater itself, highlighted by spotlights, presents a striking picture outside. "Rhinoceros", termed "theater of the absurd", is being presented here through Sunday, before going on tour.

Consider The Alternative, He Suggests

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy said Thursday that the chances of a recession will be "substantially increased" if Congress fails to approve his proposals to reduce taxes.

Using his news conference as a forum to argue the merits of the tax cut-and-reform legislation, the President said those opposed to his program should "consider what the alternative is."

He asked: "What alternative does anyone have for increasing and maintaining economic growth in view of the large deficit of 1958 and in view of two recessions in 1958 and 1960?

"Our plan to prevent a recession this year and the years to come is our tax bill," he said. "And I think the Congress — I hope the Congress will adopt it — and I think the country, those who oppose it, should consider very carefully what they will have as far as economic growth for this country if it is defeated."

Kennedy's analysis of the U. S. economy was one of the highlights of a news conference that ranged in subject matter from Cuba to French President Charles de Gaulle.

In other highlights, the President said that the United States has withdrawn some support troops from Europe in the past few months but added there is no present plan to bring combat forces home.

On Cuba, he said that the Castro regime has been exporting "men and money" for subversive activities against other Latin American governments.

The President acknowledged that his tax proposals face a "hard fight" in Congress.

"The tax reform cuts across some of the most dearly held rights of any of our citizens," he said.

He added that if the administration was unable to get the tax reform it wanted, "there probably would be adjustments made in the overall reauctions."

In the Senate Thursday, liberals lost their fight to enlarge the Senate Finance Committee as one way of making certain the tax plan was not sidetracked. But it was understood that Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield gave assurances that the tax program would be brought to a Senate vote this year.

2 Professors Go On Tours As Speakers

Two UNC professors were "on tour" last week at conferences on both coasts.

Walter Spearman, UNC professor of journalism, spent last weekend at Florida State University in Tallahassee, Fla., as speaker and consultant for a conference of college newspaper and yearbook editors from Florida.

At the opening banquet session Friday evening Prof. Spearman was the principal speaker, discussing style in writing. His subject was "Tired Old Words."

Saturday the college editors held discussion groups and panel sessions for both newspaper and feature writing for the college newspaper editors and on feature writing for the yearbook editors. The conference was sponsored by the Florida Flambeau, student newspaper at Florida State University.

Professor John J. Honigmann of the UNC Department of Sociology and Anthropology attended a meeting of anthropologists called by The Cooperative Commission on the Study of Alcoholism at Stanford University in Palo Alto, California, February 9 and 10.

The purpose of the meeting was to examine what anthropologists have discovered through their research in other cultures about use of alcohol. Such information, it is believed, may aid this country at efforts to control and manage drinking problems.

Professor Honigmann is on leave of absence from UNC for the spring semester. He will leave Chapel Hill shortly for six months of research, sponsored by the Canadian Government, among Eskimos who have been relocated at Frobisher Bay, a joint U. S. and Canadian military base located in southern Baffin Island.

Last summer Professor Honigmann and his wife studied patterns of drinking in an Austrian village. Results of that work will be published later this year in "Ethnolorgy," a journal published by the University of Pittsburgh.

CAPITALIST TO GET AXE

MOSCOW (UPI) — Three Soviet men convicted of making too much money out of girls' hair ribbons have been sentenced to death, the newspaper Soviet Culture said Thursday.

The newspaper said a fourth defendant received 15 years in prison.

The newspaper said the men made 100,000 rubles ($110,000) by profiteering in the manufacture of hair ribbons.

CIRCULO HISPANICO

Circulo Hispanico will meet today at 7:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge in Dey Hall, 4th floor. The program will consist of Spanish songs with guitar accompaniment by Maria Elena Bravo and Miriam Almaguer. Refreshments will be served. All are invited.

4 Win Internships For Study At U. N.

Four UNC students have been awarded United Nations intern ships for the summer of 1963, it was announced today by Andrew M. Scott, UNC associate professor of political science.

The winners are Sidney R. Waldman of Highland Park, Ill., a graduate student in the Department of Political Science; Elmer R. Oettinger III of Chapel Hill, a junior; William Arthur Hays of Franklin, a junior; and Kellis Parker of Kinston, also a junior.

The UN internships include $600 each to cover travel and living expenses of each recipient. The internships are financed by the Institute for International Order, with headquarters in New York.

Recipients of the internships will be at UN headquarters in New York in July and August and will be assigned duties with the Secretariat.

This year is the second year UN internships have been awarded to UNC students. Selection of the recipients was based on ability, preparation, and interest in the field of international affairs and the U. N. The selection committee consisted of Professor Scott, and Professors of political science S. Shepard Jones and Keener C. Frazer.

Bridge Tournament Has Division Here

The National Association of College Unions is sponsoring a national intercollegiate bridge tournament, open to all students, graduates as well as undergraduates.

The local tournament will be held at Graham Memorial Sunday, February 24, at 2 p.m. All students are invited to play, and participants will play eighteen par hands. The results will be tallied nationally in order to determine national and regional winners.

Dormitory Spotlight: Old East

This is the fourth in a series of articles on UNC dorms. It is sponsored jointly by the dorm presidents and the Communications Committee.

Improvement is the byword in Old East this year, according to dorm president Steve Goldstein.

Plans for doubling the size of the social room, establishing a quiz file and improving the intramural standing should result in a better dorm.

The social room, already one of the most attractive on campus, will be doubled in size shortly and residents hope to get coed visiting privileges as a result.

Residents are working toward a good quiz file, and if they can maintain their present rate of progress, should have an excellent one in the near future.

The dorm stands ninth in intramurals, and it seems certain that a significant improvement will be made over last year's placing. Intramural manager is Walt Honour.

Always noted for its studious residents, Old East is a quiet dorm. There is a strong unity, and there has not been a disciplinary problem this year, according to IDC Representative Jim Lane.

Interviews For Yack Job Are March 5

Chairman Bill Townsend has announced that the Publications Board will hold interviews for the position of editor of the 1964 "Yackety Yack" on March 5.

All interested candidates are strongly urged to see the current Yack editor Louis Legum before this date to discuss details concerning the position. Applicants are expected to produce extensive plans for publication of next year's book as well as to give evidence attesting to their general competence and experience in being able to handle the position. These matters can best be clarified by seeing Legum at the Yack office or by reaching him at his home phone number, 967-3538.

The Pub Board more than welcomes anyone interested in applying for the job who believes himself to have sufficient ability and time; intensive work with the current edition is a preferred, but not mandatory prerequisite.

Eaton's Book Of Poetry Published

"Countermoves", a new volume of poetry by Charles Edward Eaton of Chapel Hill and Woodbury, Conn., has just been published by Abelard-Schuman Limited in the Abelard Series of Modern Poets, and is being released sumultaneously by their New York and London offices.

The new collection is Mr. Eaton's fourth volume, and contains a selection of poems he has written over the past four years. Such titles as "Flamenco" with its theme of the South will be of special interest to North Carolina readers, and there are other poems which reflect Mr. Eaton's dedication to his home state.

Nearly all of the poems have been published in magazines such as "The Nation," "The Reporter," "Modern Age," and "The Transatlantic Review," and have also been widely published in England. In addition to short lyrics, the volume contains two of the longest poems Mr. Eaton has so far written. One of them, entitled "Sea and Summer," was first published by "Fooch" at Cornell University, and the other, "Della Robbia In August," first appeared in "The Virginia Quarterly Review."

The latter poem was anthologized by G. P. Putnam in AMERICAN LITERATURE: READINGS AND CRITIQUES, edited by Robert W. Stallman and Arthur W. Waldhorn.

Mr. Eaton has also published a volume of short stories entitled WRITE ME FROM RIO, and is now completing a fifth volume of poetry entitled ALLEGIANCES.

Unbeaten State Downs UNC Tankers By 53-42

Relay Event Gives Pack Final Margin

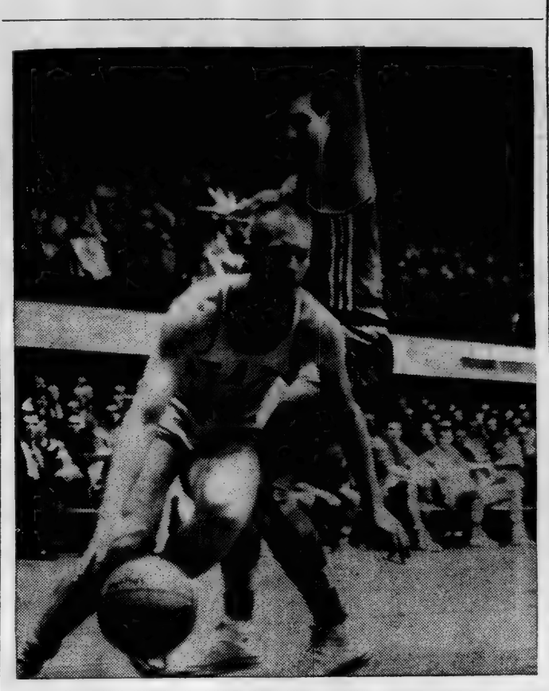
By ETADIN MOLODNU

RALEIGH — Three All-Americans and a sophomore speedster combined efforts here last night to nip Carolina's freestyle relay team in the final event of the meet and erase the hopes of an upset-minded UNC swimming team, 53-42.

All-Amerians Frank Spencer, Smokey Ellis, and Billy McGinty teamed with Harold Senter to give the Wolfpack their margin in the final thrilling race. Spencer finished six inches ahead of UNC's All-American Thompson Mann, at the wire. The time was 3:21.9.

Mann's failure to win an event was a major surprise in this battle of previously unbeaten teams. In his place, Carolina's sophomore star, Harrison Merrill, had to take up the slack. He did so admirably by winning three races—the 100, 200 and 500-yard freestyle events.

Pete Forgarasy, State's fourth All-American, contributed two first places to his team's ninth victory of the year. Fogarasy won the individual medley and the 200-yard breaststroke.



For Coach Pat Earey's UNC club (now 4-1 in ACC competition, 9-4 overall), diver Ernie Oare was the only other individual winner.

State got off to a quick lead when Carolina's medley relay team was disqualified in the first event. In addition to the two relay victories and Fogarasy's double, the Wolfpack received winning indivdual efforts from Spencer, McGinty and newcomer Dick Paoletti.

Spencer won his 200-yard butterfly specialty, McGinty won the 50-yard freestyle and Paoletti raced to a 200-yard backstroke win.

State's fifth ACC win was witnessed by 1,800 fans at the spacious pool in Raleigh.

Brown Once A Gridder

Because Larry Brown had to give up "my favorite sport, football," he has found himself a leading candidate for the All-Atlantic Coast Conference basketball team this season.

"I was a Little League quarterback in the eighth grade when I hurt my knees in an all-star game in Philadelphia. It nearly killed me to change to basketball, but since everyone on the island (Long Island) was playing it, I figured it would do."

From the playing courts of Long Beach, L. I., to those at the University of North Carolina, the basketball played by Larry Brown has impressed, awed—and beaten—many people. His supporters are happy he traded cleats for sneakers.

'Holy' Conspiracy Snares 'Average College Student'

New evidence has recently come to light confirming the existence of the International Conspiracy Against College Students. Although in the past this cabal has been identified with the International Business Machine, events of late indicate collaboration on the part of the machinists as well.

Operating with diabolic cunning, the machinists have erected an elaborate network of red tape and regulations which leave the impression that these people have holes in their heads as well as in their punch cards. Witness the plight of one average Carolina student.

Average Student is a dormie, a breed upon whom Providence is seldom inclined to smile. His dormitory rent for this semester was payable — in full — on January 22. However, Average Student is not only a dormie; he is a dormie with a scholarship. His scholarship check is generally available about the third week in the semester.

Fearing the wrath of his administrative elders, Average S. took his last fifty dollars to the Cashier's Office and offered to post that amount as evidence of his good faith and honorable intentions. The gesture was an empty one, however, for "in full" meant in full.

When Average Student appeared at Memorial Hall last Sunday to pick up his registration envelope, it was withheld pending the payment of that dorm rent. Being a resourceful chap, our hero laboriously roamed the halls of Bingham and Saunders and Caldwell ferreting out his classrooms. The rest of his registration goodies including his athletic pass, he concluded sadly, would just have to remain unclaimed until the arrival of his sorely needed financial aid.

The University being an on-going concern and a terribly efficient one at that, simply does not permit registration envelopes to gather dust in Hanes Hall. And so, eight days after the semester began, all unclaimed registrations were swept up and the registrants deemed unfit and incapable of continuing in residence and making satisfactory progress towad one of the many excellent degrees offered here.

Hence Average Student's professors were all informed that he had been dropped from school and was not to be admitted to classes. Should outsiders inquire of his whereabouts and activities, they will be told the same thing. He is, in a word, an academic vagrant, an intellectual gremlin, a student without a university, and probably without his comfortable, bilious green dorm room as well.

The College of Arts and Sciences cannot reinstate him until the Cashier is paid. The Cashier will not be paid until Average Student receives his scholarship money. And if Catch-22 applies, as it undoubtedly does, he may have trouble getting that check. After all, one doesn't give student aid funds to unregistered students.

Yes, Average Un-Student, you do live in that miraculous and most progressive of times, the twentieth century. Too bad the folks running the show have those gaping IBM holes in all sorts of unlikely and troublesome places.

—Henry Mayer

Why? Why? Why?

The University has announced plans to build a dormitory near Craige and Ehringhaus, in the general direction of Havana, Cuba. The dorm will house more than 900 unfortunate UNC men.

Seemingly, the University would have learned its lesson by this time. Craige and Ehringhaus have been anything but successes — there have been more and better and bigger drunks, destruction of property, and general and continuous noise and rowdiness (what else could happen with 1500 hale students cut off not only from the "outside" world, but from the rest of the campus as well).

At present the administration hopes to get funds to build the dorm from the state. If this fails completely, then the students will have to pay for the monstrosity — from higher dormitory fees. Less well-to-do students will be particularly hard-hit.

We would as soon see the University fail to get the money from the state and not build this dorm to incarcerate 900 men. Let any new dorms which are built, be smaller and closer to the center of campus, and thus more conducive to normal activities and studies.

Even better, let there be no new dorms at all — and, if necessary, let the University's enrollment be kept at present levels, or reduced. Bigness is not necessarily coexistent with quality, and enormous dormitories are coexistent only with noise, confusion and unhappy students. (JC)

Love For The Unloved

Commemorating the Day of Saint Valentine yesterday, we noted the following Valentines which probably weren't sent:

—To Harold MacMillan, best wishes and an invitation to "come on over and visit any time" from Charles DeGaulle.

—To Adlai Stevenson from John F. Kennedy, who dispatched two Cupid-like journalistic messengers to pierce Adlai's heart (preferably with a knife, from behind.)

—To the campus Student Party, "for old times' sake, be not forgotten," from Ford Rowan.

—To President Friday, Chancellor Aycock and the University, "It's not the money you spend, but the thought that counts," from the state Legislature.

—And to Nikita Khrushchev, "We'll bury you, my five-year-plan Natasha," from Mao Tse-Tung. (JC)

Lincoln Eulogy Still True

To the Editors,

In the Illionois State Legislature, where eulogies of Abraham Lincoln are especially numerous, the leader of the Dmocratic party was askd, in an early decade of this century, to speak in honor of Lincoln's birthday. C. E. Smith's comment was brief, but it seems worth reprinting today.

—Ken A. Bode

"THIS MAN LINCOLN"

"No man made great by death offers more hope to lowly pride than does Abraham Lincoln. For, while living, he was so simple as often to be dubbed a fool. Foolish he was, they said, for losing his youthful heart to a grave and living his life on married patience; foolish in pitting his homely ignorance against Douglas, brilliant, courtly and urbane; foolish in dreaming of freedom for a long-suffering folk whom the North is as anxious to keep out as the South was to keep down; foolish in choosing the silent Grant to lead to victory the hesitant armies of the North; foolish finally in believing that government for the people must be government of and by the people.

"Foolish many said; foolish many many more believed.

"This man Lincoln, who so many living friends and foes alike deemed foolish, hid his bitterness in laughter, fed his sympathy on solitude, and met recurring distaster with whimsicality to muffle the murmur of a bleeding heart. Out of the tragic sense of life, he pitied where others blamed, bowed his own shoulders with the woes of the weak, endured humanly his little day of power and won through death what life disdains to bestow on such simple souls, lasting peace and everlasting glory.

"How prudently we proud men compete for nameless graves while now and then some starvling of fate forgets himself into immortality."

Wants More Otelia, Wellman

To the Editors,

Has W. W. really retired from the literary scene? Of course everyone knows of the intellectual prowess of O. Connor, but this should not dscourage W. W. from meeting her head-on in literary cat fights. His well-known stinging satire would be more than a match for her precisely planned, meticulously meditated mental vollies.

Only a W.W. could so ingeniously indict Modern Germany by a satirical glorification of their handling of the capitalistic tendencies of a faction of the Bourgebisie middle class who were noto in complete favor of the price controls set on scarce things by the central government in Berlin. This fact was hinted subtly but clearly in the third from the last sentence of his next to the last letter, the style of which shows a mastery of the language which emulates and at times shows a striking although perhaps unconscious similarity to the most original stylist to appear on the Carolina scene in many years—Otelia Connor. Such a satirist should not deprive this notably liberal campus of his rare talents.

Of course O. Connor in adding to her intellect and stylistic perfection manifests in her writings a not unconsequential dexterity in this suave type of literary inauguarations. Although with tongue in cheek, she poses as a pearl casting herself among swine, few do not suspect that by criticizing the manners of Carolina ladies and gentlemen, her evasive humor is not having a field day with the most mannerly group of students to be found on any campus anywhere. She is truly a pearl. Carolina would not be the same without her. Only a mature, reserved, detached woman like herself could display such keen insight into the life of this university.

For the greater edification and entertainment of the campus it is hoped that these two gadflies will continue to enliven the pages of this newspaper and perhaps even on occasion sting the hide of their choice opponents.

Great Books Of Great Value

To the Editors,

"The great books are not useful in the world until they are widely known. They should be read early and late, and read everywhere," so wrote a noted author.

But this is not easy as it sounds, even in a university town. I have been to the library recently to get two of the great books, only to find that there was just one card in the index for these books, and both of them were on reserve. I could borrow one of them over the weeknd, but the great books can not be inwardly digested" over the weekend. So it looks like I will have to order the book. When I broke up house-keeping I gave my library away, and I don't wish to start accumulating another.

It would seem, if the great books are to be "widely known," the libraries will have to make them more accessible to the readers. There should be dozens, maybe hundreds of copies of some books on the library shelves. I don't know just how the staff would go about deciding which authors to get in large quantities, but there should be some way of determining an adequate number.

I have heard students in class tell the professor that they were unable to get hold of certain books in the library which were required reading and which would be included in the up-coming quize. I don't remember the exact answers given to the students, but I gathered that it was the student's hard luck, and that the exam would proceed as announced.

One thing is certain, students don't have the money to buy all the parallel reading books, many students can't afford to pay for the text books. It seems to me there is too much required reading any way. If the students took only one course they could manage all right, but multiply one course by five and you really have a load. They might be able to skim through the books, provided they could get hold of them. But the books that can be skimmed are not worth reading. I don't often waste my time on books that can be skimmed through. The required-reading books should be sufficient in number so that the students can have a try at them, whether they get much out of them, or not.

Oxford 'Rampage': Warning To U.S.

Last October while 25,000 U. S. troops patrolled the campus of Ole Miss, the causes of the sudden rioting and explosion of violence were strangely obscured. No one offered any precise reason for the flare-up against the Federal marshals, which had resulted directly in the second invasion of a Southern state since 1957. But the Mississippi State Junior Chamber of Commerce uncovered the purported reasons, which they have published in a pamphlet titled OXFORD: A Warning for Americans.

The pamphlet has been widely circulated. Before I quote from it, I would like to ask the simple question: What constitutes proof? Must a fully authenticated film be taken of every action charged against the Federals? Or is it proof when these perfectly credible stories appear in print without elicting, so far as I know, any slightest denial from the U. S. government? I do not pressure to answer but I surely fell that the pamphlet has a right to be heard. The events of September 30 are recounted as follows:

"Meredith, protected by over 400 Federal Marshals, arrived on the University campus. The marshals encircled the Lyceum Building — the main Administration Building — fully armed with night sticks, gas masks, tear gas guns, revolvers . . . A crowd of University students and outsiders, many from other states, gathered in the vicinity of the Marshals . . . Several articles were thrown in the direction of the Marshals. Without warning, on orders of James P. McShane, the chief Federal Marshal, the Marshals fired tear gas projectiles at close range directly into the crowd. This incensed the crowd and the riot began."

Troops arrived the following day—more than twice as many as the total number of NATO forces stationed in West Berlin. The pamphlet quotes President Kennedy, on the authority of columnists Paul Scott and Robert S. Allen, as having said: "The U. S. Marshals were inexperienced and blundered in their use of tear gas. It was a very sad day." The text of this Chamber of Commerce booklet now goes on to report the following events, true or false:

"After the battle began the night of September 30 the marshals went on a rampage, firing tear gas projectiles at close range into students and even into the back of the head of a Mississippi Highway Safety Patrolman, knocking him unconcious. The marshals actually invaded the dormitories, firing tear gas projectiles . . . The campus was thick with gas for several days . . .

"The treatment of prisoners, many of whom did not participate in the battle, was shocking. Many of the prisoners were fifteen- and sixteen-year-old boys . . . The marshals administered beatings with nightsticks, knocking a few almost into a state of unconsciousness. A storeroom with no windows, located in the Lyceum Building, was converted into a virtual dungeon. Ordinarily, about fifteen persons could have gotten into that room, and the marshals had packed it with almost one hundred prisoners . . . Many of the boys had dried blood on their clothes and faces . . .

"One student, testiying under oath before a legislative investigating committee, told of his capture about 9:00 a.m. on the campus while driving to his girl's house . . . the morning of October 1. He was ordered out of his automobile and it was searched. An unloaded shotgun kept in the trunk for a planned hunt . . . was seized. The shells were in his hunting jacket in his dormitory room. He was taken under guard to the Lyceum Building, where the marshals blurted: 'Make room for the shotgun boys,' and he was handcuffed to another boy . . . A marshal hit him in his ribs and back with a nightstick. He was not allowed to call his girl friend, his parents or an attorney; they held him incommunicado. He told of beatings by the marshals of other prisoners and their refusal to obtain medical aid for the injured. Finally, after being told to sign a release of his shotgun, and through the intervention of a faculty member, he was released."

I see nothing incredible in these charges, but the worst of it is that even if all this is true in detail, there seems to be nothing at all that can be done about it. The clamor for integration has become a national psychosis, based on the preposterous assertion that the whole issue boils down to regional prejudice against certain types of complexion. This is usually expressed with the rhetorical question: "What's the color of the skin?"—accompanied by an elaborate shrug of the shoulders. People must realize that they are talking nonsense when they reduce the problem to these terms; to pretend that they don't is scarcely even charitable. The fact that they have duped three fourths of the nation, and now have the U. S. Army at their service, doesn't speak well for the American press.

Otelia Supports Vacations . . .

To the Editors,

Henry Belk, in a recent Column, derides the custom of colleges giving two weeks holiday at Christmas and a week at Easter time as a waste of time. He is way off. The colleges realize that the families have some claim to their sons and daughters, and that two weeks is none too long a time for students, especially those who must travel a long distance, to relax from strenuous studying, (college students do have to work this day and time), and have some fun, and build up their reserve strength for the grueling mid-term exams ahead. I cite as an example an experiment at one school I attended. It was decided to eliminate the spring vacation, and close school one week earlier in June. The students were so worn out by commencement that they voted never to pass up the spring holiday again. It is so easy for all of us to go off the deepend before we have assertained the consequencs, but I happened to hav had experience with this matter of curtailing, or eliminating vacations, and I know where-of I speak. Let us not make that same mistake here.

Bull Pledges Form Group—

To the Editors,

Tentative plans are in the making for an all-campus dissafiliate (bull-pledge or inactive) party this coming Germans.

Only those persons, who, having been at one time affiliated with a fraternity and failed to maintain a "2.0" average will be admitted.

Any actives who attempt to enter will be turned over to the proper civil authorities for trespassing and will be dealt with accordingly. Let it be stated now that a fairly complete list of all actives has been compiled as of Feb. 4.

Anyone interested should drop a card to me at the ATO house; also, if you feel I shouldn't attend my party due to my being active, please don't hesitate in expressing such a belief.

VIEW FROM THE HILL

By Armistead Maupin, Jr.

The Bay of Pigs fiasco had smoldered out, we thought.

That is, until Bobby Kennedy poked the ashes once more last week and came up with a new, and wholly incredible version of the incident. In two "exclusive interviews" the Attorney-General made the remarkable statement that the United States never had "any plan" or made "any promise" to provide air-cover to the anti-Castro invaders. "I can say, unequivocally, he stated, "that President Kennedy never withdrew air coverage."

Washington jaws dropped. There was substantial evidence that Bobby's lastest ultimatum was nothing less than a blatant falsification of facts.

Former Ambassador Whiting Willauer, who was originally in on the Administration's plans testified on July 27, 1961, before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, that aircraft would "carry out the beachhead."

"The Saturday Evening Post" on June, 24 1961 carried an "inside-story" by New Frontier reporte. Stewart Alsop who said that if the original plan for full air-cover failed to provide adequate protection. "American aircraft would intervene openly and in force.

Speaking before Washington's National Press Club, a leading Cuban commander of the invasion said h "American military instructors" had assured him there would be "sufficient" air cover. And, according to three Florida newspaper publishers, the President told them at a May, 1961 White House meeting, that he, personally, had called off the air cover.

"Time" magazine carried the most shocking news of all. It reported that the Bay of Pigs prisoners who were ransomed were warned, even before they reached the United States, noto too say anything about the subject of air cover.

In the final analysis, however, Bobby Kennedy's conduct in the Cuban affair was not really surprising. The American people have grown almost numb to the wild-eyed stunts of their Attorney-General. Within the span of a fortnight we have watched the President's little brother try his first case in any court, authorized the Air Force to send reconnaissance planes over the University of Alabama, and treat history like his younger brother, Teddy, treated Harvard exams.

Image, after all, is the important thing. When Big Brother's Image is damaged you cannot stand by idly. You must act with swiftness and authority.

And with great vigah.

Women Trustees Are Guests Here Feb. 25

The female members of the Board of Trustees will be visiting Chapel Hill Feb. 25 and 26 as the guests of the women students of UNC.

The highlights of the trustees' stay on the campus will be a student program at President Friday's home, a visit to the Alpha Delta Pi sorority house, Cobb dormitory and Eringhaus, and discussions with the members of the Romance Language Dept., Julian Mason of the Student Aid Office, and Joe Galloway of the Placement Service.

The guests, who will be staying in dormitories and eating in Lenoir Hall, will also have an opportunity to visit with the administrative officers of the University.

Thai Man Learning About Planetarium

By Virginia Carnes

In October, 1962 A. F. Jenzano, director of the Morehead Planetarium received a letter.

It expressed the desire of Professor Singto Putahuta, future director of the Bangkok, Thailand, Planetarium, to visit Chapel Hill.

Pukahuta arrived here Sunday night and consultations with director Jenzano ended yesterday.

"Professor Pukahuta is a consultant for the planetarium now under construction in Bangkok," Jenzano explained.

"Usually in construction of a planetarium there are so many facets to be considered that it is impractical to discuss and consider all these facets in advance. It is wise to engage a consultant to go abroad and tour the most important planetariums in the world," Jenzano said. "Initially he knows nothing of planetarium operation. At the end of his tour he will be able to report many important details of planning."

Pukahuta has visited the planetarium at the Hague in the Netherlands. This is the first planetarium he has visited in the United States. "He was very impressed," reported Jenzano.

The new Bangkok Planetarium will be similar too those recently completed in New York, Philadelphia, and London.

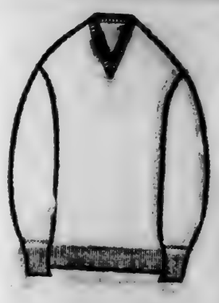
A Carl Zeiss projector will be installed in Bangkok. "There are about 27 Zeiss instruments in the world today," said Jenzano. "Prior to 1939, there were about 27 scattered in the larger cities. During WW II, 11 were destroyed. Since then the Zeiss Company in Oberkochen, Germany, has produced 5 or 6 post-war models. We think the Zeiss factory at Jena, East Germany, has also produced 5 or 6 to supply the Iron Curtain countries.

"The purpose of any planetarium is to generate greater interest in science and too promote better understanding by students and laymen of the universe and current scientific achievement," said Jenzano.

Pukahuta was especially interested in programs for school children. "He showed great interest in our astronaut program and in a "bird orientation" study by two Duke scientists, Dr. Peter Klodpher and Dr. Schmidt Koeneg. The latter is an effort to determine the possibility of birds and green turtles using the stars to orient their migrations."

Pukahuta left yesterday to continue his journey around the world visiting the most important planetariums and obtaining information about planetarium management.

4 Charities To Be Aided By Chest



The Campus Chest has named four charities as recipients of proceeds from this year's campaign.

The four charities selected were the American Friends Service Committee, the International Students' Board Exchange Program to Latin America, Mental Health, and the World University Service.

The Chest plans to give $700 to the Latin American Exchange, a program designed to send one Carolina student to school for a year in Latin America. An exchange student from the Latin American school will attend Carolina.

The rest of the money will be divided among the three remaining charities as the Chest decides most beneficial. The money donated to Mental health will go to research in mental retardation of children. The World University Service and the American Friends Service Committee will use donated money to aid students around the world with food, clothing, and books.

The Chest drive will begin in the second week of March. The auction will be held March 12; the carnival will take place on March 16, and the solicitations drive from the 11th to the 13th of March. This year the Campus Chest hopes to collect $6,000.

Playmakers To Test For 'Garden' Roles

Auditions for the Carolina Playmakers production of "The Chalk Garden," Enid Bagnold's highly-acclaimed comedy, will be held at the Playmakers Theatre Monday, Feb. 18, at 4 and 7:30 p.m.

Called a "sidelong, elegantly savage play" by Time Magazine, "The Chalk Garden" will be directed by Foster Fitz-Simons, staff director of The Carolina Playmakers. His latest show here was last year's tour production of "The Matchmaker."

A cast of seven women and two men is needed for "The Chalk Garden." The main characters are Laurel, a 16-year-old girl; Mrs. St. Maugham, the grandmother; Madrigal, the recently-imprisoned governess; Maitland, the manservant; and the Judge.

"The Chalk Garden" will be presented in the Playmakers Theatre March 13 through 17. Copies of the script are available for advance reading at 307 Bynum Hall and in the Reserve Reading Room of the UNC Library.

Alumni Trio Faces Kansas In TV Quiz

"Tar Heels versus Kansas University" will be the billing for a quiz contest between three UNC graduates and a trio of Kansas U. alumni Sunday, Feb. 17 at 4:30 p.m. on the ABC TV network (at 6 p.m. on Channel 5, WRAL-TV, Raleigh).

Kansas beat the University of Texas last Sunday on a nationwide television quiz show called "Alumni Fun."

The winners will meet a threesome who are graduates of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The Carolina team is composed of three prominent alumni, Vermont Royster, editor of the Wall Street Journal; Voit Gilmore, head of the U. S. Travel Service; and Richard Alder, Broadway playwright.

J. M. (Spike) Saunders, alumni secretary of the University, made arrangements for the participation by the graduates of UNC. He picked the team to represent Carolina.

The competition is a battle between picked alumni of leading universities. They reply to questions on economics, geography, literature ,current events, history and other subjects.

Thomas Opens Forum Series Monday Night

Socialist Norman Thomas will be the initial speaker of The Carolina Forum series this semester.

Thomas' lecture on international problems will take place at 8 p.m. Monday in Memorial Hall.

The Forum, Student Government agency responsible for bringing citizens of state, national and international importance to Chapel Hill, attracted nation-wide attention last semester following its altercation with William F. Buckley, Jr.

Other speakers scheduled for the semester include presidential pollster and UNC alumnus Louis Harris on April 2 and Chester Bowles on April 29.

Forum Chairman Henry Mayer indicated that there was a "strong possibility" that Soviet poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko would visit Chapel Hill in May. "Yevtushenko will be visiting American campuses for six weeks this spring, and we have been given reasonable indications that a UNC visit would be feasible."

Efforts to obtain several conservative speakers are in progress, according to Mayer, "although their fees are higher and schedules more crowded."

Coast Guard Officer To Recruit UNC Men

Rear Admiral Henry J. Wuensch, USCG, Commander of the Fifth Coast Guard District, announced recently that Lieutenant (j.g.) James G. Moore, USCGR, will be at the UNC YMCA from 9 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Feb. 27, to explain the Coast Guard Officer Candidate Program to interested June, 1963, graduates.

The Coast Guard Officer Candidate School, located in Yorktown, Va., prepares officer candidates, through a four-month course, for positions of leadership in the Coast Guard. Upon graduation from the school, students are commissioned with the rank of Ensign in the United States Coast Guard Reserve.

Hotelling To Head Faculty Club Here

Harold Hotelling, University professor of statistics, has been elected President of the Faculty Club for the coming year.

He and other new officers of the group were chosen at the annual elections meeting of the Club on Tuesday.

As elected upon presentation as a slate by the nominations committee, the other new officers are: Vice President Stephen B. Baxter, Secretary Dr. Dwight Rhyne, and Treasurer Prof. Roy Ingram.

Elected to the Board of Governors, also as endorsed by the nominations committee, were Messrs. Hotelling Rhyne, Ingram, and Ernest Q. Campbell. Holdover members of that Board are Stephen Baxter, Joseph Sloane, Dougald MacMillan, J. C. Ingram, Lucy S. Morgan, Hubert Patterson, Joseph W. Straley, and outgoing President John G. Kunstmann.

Washington Reporter Speaks Here Feb. 20

E. W. Kenworthy, member of the Washington Bureau of the New York Times, will give the third UNC Journalism lecture at 4 p.m. Wednesday, February 20, in 203 Howell Hall.

Kenworthy will discuss "The Reporter's Job." He has been with the Times since 1950.

An Oberlin College graduate, Kenworthy taught English for several years in Ohio, Indiana, and Rhode Island; served with the Office of War Information during World War II; wrote editorials for the Baltimore Evening Sun from 1945 to 1946 and was First Secretary of the Embassy in London from 1946 to 1947.

Kenworthy was with "The Reporter" magazine from 1948-1949 and with the Sunday Section of the Times from 1950 to 1956 when he moved to the Washington Bureau. At the Washington Bureau, he has done general assignments, covered the State Department for five years, the White House for a year, and is now covering Congress.

The lecture is open to the public.

Four different ways to make going more fun than getting there

You can see why one of America's favorite outdoor sports is driving Chevrolets, with four entirely different kinds of cars to choose from. There's the Jet-smooth Chevrolet, about as luxurious as you can go without going overboard in price; the low-cost Chevy II, a good-looking car that would send any family packing; another family favorite, the sporty Corvair, whose rear-engine traction will make you think that ice and snow are kid stuff; and for pure adventure, America's only sports car, Corvette—now in two all-new versions with looks that can stop traffic like a rush-hour blizzard. Picked your favorite already? The next thing is to take the wheel at your Chevrolet dealer's. If that doesn't have you thinking of places to go, maybe you'd rather just have a ball around town!

Carolina Meets Roosters Tonight

Pack Plays Tigers In Second Game

By ED DUPREE

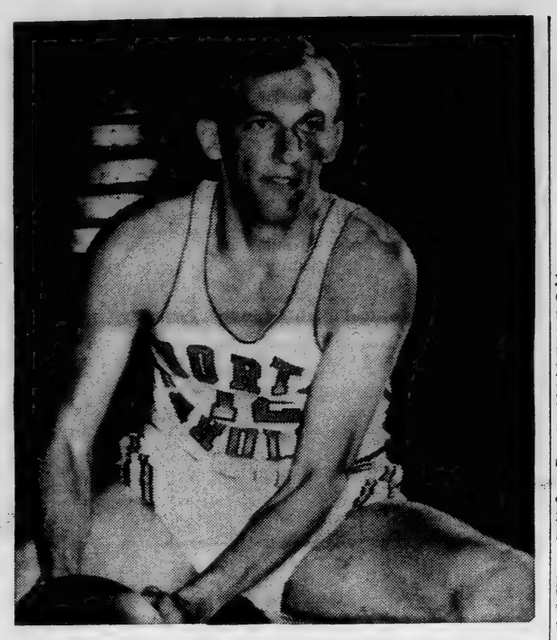
North Carolina's hopes for second-place in the Atlantic Coast Conference and N. C. State's now-dim hopes for a first-division finish may be fulfilled or shattered this weekend in Charlotte.

The occasion will be the Queen City's annual North-South doubleheaders. UNC meets South Carolina tonight at 7:30 and the Wolfpack faces fourth-place Clemson at 9:15. Tomorrow night the North Carolina schools switch opponents and game times.

The Tar Heels are 7-3, while second-place Wake Forest is 9-2. A pair of victories in Charlotte would strengthen Carolina's hold on third place and keep Dean Smith's men close to Wake Forest.

Tonight's foe, the Chuck Noe-coached Gamecocks, gave the Tar Heels a bundle of trouble in their first encounter in Columbia. UNC finally pulled away to win, 75-65.

In that meeting, Billy Cunningham had his first high-scoring night for the Chapel Hillians. Since then he has been the hottest thing in the conference. He leads the league in rebounding and has pulled his scoring average up to 22.4.



In their victory over N. C. State Tuesday night, the Tar Heels were missing two important men—Charlie Shaffer with an injured elbow and Mike Cooke, a flu victim. Shaffer's arm is out of the sling and Cooke has recovered, so both could see action this weekend.

Probable Tar Heel starters are Cunningham, guards Yogi Poteet and Larry Brown, Bryan McSweeney and Ray Respess or Cooke.

Joining high-scoring 6-3 guard Ronnie Collins for the Roosters should be Scotti Ward, Jim Collins, Bob Haney and Dave Prevoznik.

Everett Case's Wolfpack may have its hands full in the nightcap against Clemson. The Tigers have won four in a row after dropping their first five of the season—pulling them from the cellar to fourth spot. State is 4-7, so a loss would practically wrap up the first division berth for the Tigers.

State defeated Bob Roberts' men by one point in December, but Choppy Patterson's improvement has turned the Tigers into an ACC dark horse for the second straight year.

RAY RESPASS, a starter for the UNC basketball team early in the season, returned to the first five against State Tuesday and scored 13 points in the victory. With Charlie Shaffer and Mike Cooke ailing, the 6-4 sophomore ably illustrated the depth on the Tar Heel team.

Dolphins Point To Maryland

Coach Pat Earey commented yesterday that his team is "rather optimistic" about its chances of upsetting the Maryland Terps here next Friday night. Earey also said that, although the boys were "a little disappointed" that they didn't pick up a win at State Wednesday, they are intent upon giving Maryland a real battle.

State College gained its second narrow six-inch freestyle relay victory in as many years Wednesday and thus inflicted a 53-42 defeat upon the spirited Carolina swimmers Wednesday in Raleigh.

With the Wolfpack leading 46-42 going into the final event, Ed Spencer nipped Thompson Mann in the final 100 yards of the relay to give State its 10th straight win of the year. Carolina swimmers, Davis Roberts (51.7 seconds for his 100 yards), Thad Adams (49.8 seconds), Bill Bloom (51.7 seconds) and Mann's 48.5 efforts fell just short of State's record breaking time of 3:21.9 for the 400-yard event.

The results:

400 Medley Relay — (1) — State (Paoletti, Fogarasy, Spencer and Senter); Carolina (Mann, Swift, Bloom and Roberts) disqualified. T-4:00.8.

200 Freestyle — Merrill, Adams and Peer (S). T-1:57.9.

50 Freestyle — McGinty (S), Ellis (S) and Cone. T-22.6.

Individual Medley — Fogarasy (S), Paoletti (S) and King. T-2:12.5.

Diving — Oare, Morrow (S) and Senter (S). 140.9 points.

200 Butterfly — Spencer (S), Bloom and Schiffman. T-2:10.

100 Freestyle — Merrill, Mann and McGinty (S). T 49.6.

200 Backstroke — Paoletti (S), Smiley and Redding. T-2:12.7.

500 Freestyle — Merrill, Lea and Moore (S). T-5:37.8.

200 Breaststroke — Fogarasy (S), Swift and Derby (S). T-2:25.8.

400 Freestyle Relay — (1) State (Senter, McGinty, Ellis and Spencer); (2) — Carolina (Roberts, Adams, Bloom and Mann). T-3.21.9.

Rocky Mount's Three-Sport Star

UNC Signs Danny Talbott

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Danny Talbott, the most talked about and sought after North Carolina high school athlete since Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice, signed a grant-in-aid with the UNC Athletic Department Wednesday night.

The Rocky Mount three-sport star was awarded a full athletic scholarship and will probably play both football and baseball. Talbott said after the signing in Rocky Mount, "I am looking forward to attending North Carolina next year."

And if Talbott is glad, the men at Woollen Gym are delighted. Head football Coach Jim Hickey said, "Of course we are very pleased that Danny chose to come to Carolina. I know he will help us a lot."

Talbott received scholarship offers from 55 major colleges. He was reportedly offered a $100,000 bonus by one major league baseball team.

Known primarily for his quarterbacking brilliance which enabled the Rocky Mount Blackbirds to capture the state 4-A football championship last year, Talbott is also an outstanding basketball guard who averaged better than 20 points a game. He is a pitcher-outfielder with a .400-plus batting average which helped him place on the All-State baseball team last spring.

UNC sports publicist Bob Quincy said Talbott writes and eats left-handed, but throws righthanded. "He bats right, but can switch if he desires," added Quincy.

Talbott switched only once during last season. He hit a triple.

During last football season, Talbott completed 45 of 103 attempted passes and gained 986 yards. He averaged 5.7 yards in 72 carries. He also doubled as a punter, averaging 42 yards per kick, and was the Blackbirds' field-goal specialist.

Talbott's major love appears to be baseball, and he has indicated he would like to play professional ball when he graduates.

If he decides to play basketball too, he could become the first three-sport star at Carolina since Albert Long, now of Durham, lettered in three sports in 1955.

Talbott, who told Coach Hickey a year ago that he would like to come to UNC is a 6-0, 180-pound "natural athlete" who plans to major in Business Administration.

As one of the pretty secretaries day, "Danny's signing was certainday, "Danny's singing was certainly a nice Valentine present."

MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra will perform here Sunday afternoon and night in Memorial Hall, at 2:30 and 8 p.m. Students will be admitted free.

Frosh Win, Swim Today

By BILLY HATFIELD

UNC's freshman swimmers went back to their winning ways Wednesday afternoon by beating Page High School of Greensboro, 64-32. In moving their over-all record to 7-1, they took firsts in all but two events.

This afternoon at 4 in the Bowman Gray Pool they have a tri-meet with Westminster Schools of Atlanta and Staunton Military Academy.

Rick Forum won the 50-yard freestyle and the 100-yard breaststroke as did Fred Lipp in the 100-yard butterfly and 400-yard freestyle. Bob Engler took the 200-yard freestyle while Dick Boardman won the 200-yard individual medley and Guy Smith chopped diving honors. John Sheldon brought home a first in the 100-yard freestyle and Sandy McNairy, swimming against his old teammates, won the 100-yard backstroke.

Man's Council Tries Five; 1 Suspended, 4 Not Guilty

The Men's Council delivered one guilty and four not guilty verdicts in proceedings during the past eight days. A sixth case was sent back to the IDC Court and a final trial was postponed on technical grounds.

A freshman was suspended from school until June 1st for plagiarism upon two assigned themes, one of which was an almost verbatim transcript of a magazine article. The normal suspension penalty of one full academic semester, which would mean dismissal until February 1, 1964, was waived because the violations occurred during the past semester. In addition, the Council stated that it felt that the student should be allowed to return to summer school; normally the term "a full academic semester" may not be construed to include summer sessions.

Three Archaeology 85 cases resulted in not guilty verdicts. Two students were tried together for remarkable similarities upon the objective portion of the final examination, but evidence tended to substantiate their claim that intensive study of old quizzes led to the same results. Both students stated that upon a first glance at the test they thought that they had uncovered a rhyme scheme which had been used by the teacher in other years.

Their papers evidenced a definite pattern of answers — with one exception—upon which both made exactly the same mistake. Otherwise the results did not appear to be similar.

The third student completed his examination in a dormitory room in which two others were present. The two admitted collaboration but stated that the defendant did not participate. Examination of the papers revealed somewhat similar answers on a portion of the quiz, but the results were inconclusive. The defendant was absolved of an honor code violation and the other two students were dismissed from school during the semester break.

"Not guilty" was the judgment of the Council concerning an alleged theft of a coat from Lenoir Hall. The defendant was able to prove that he owned a coat almost identical to that of his accuser, and although there was a size diferential, it did not appear to be unusual.

The Council referred a charge of fighting back to the IDC Court which had previously declined to rule upon it. The alleged Code violation occurred in a dormitory room, and the Council, while not denying that punishment might be merited, decided that this case fell most appropriately within the jurisdiction of the other court.

The failure of the accuser to appear at the trial caused the postponement of an Honor Code proceeding. The right of the defendant to face his accuser is an enumerated right in the Constitution and is grounds for and appeal and retrial.

'Junior College Bowl' Initiated

The Junior Class will sponsor a "Junior College Bowl" on the UNC campus during the spring semester. Woody Harrison, adviser to the Junior Class Scholarship Committee, announced yesterday that the series of academic contests should start in about three weeks.

The competition will be based on the concept of the "GE College Bowl," seen on CBS-TV.

Each week, two teams of four individuals will compete for points by answering questions stressing a quick recall of specific facts on virtually every subject. Any campus organization, such as a dorm, fraternity, or club may sponsor a team in the competition. The class is hopeful for enough entries to allow for a single elimination tournament. Awards will be given to the winning teams.

Present plans call for the contests to be held on Sunday afternoons in Gerrard Hall. A member of the faculty will act as master of ceremonies.

Each contest will last approximately one hour, with a ten-minute halftime break. Questions based on those used on the television show will be used. The team that first answers a ten-point "toss up" question will have the opportunity to answer a bonus question worth a stated number of points.

Any organization interested in sponsoring a team in the contests should contact Woody Harrison at 407 E. Rosemary St., or call 968-9215. Entries should include the names of the individual team members, as well as the sponsoring organization.

Mock Assembly Starts Wednesday With 63 Nations

UNC will host the United Nations Model General Assembly Feb. 21-23. Sponsored by the UN Educational Committee of the YM-YWCA, the purpose of the Assembly is "to enable the delegates to better understand the operations of the UN and the problems it faces."

Secretary-General for this session is Hugo Spechar of UNC.

Sixty-one nations will be represented by 43 colleges ranging from Maryland to Florida and as far west as Colorado, including the ACC's Big Four, the University of Florida, the Naval and Air Force Academies, and a number of girl's schools and small colleges.

The Assembly will consist of five permanent committees: the Ad Hoc Committee, which will consider such matters as the reorganization of the Secretariat, and means of insuring the payment of dues and assessments; the Economic Committee, which will consider the effect of the regional economic groupings of the industrial nations on the developing ones, and study the recommendation of a land reform program for the benefit of nations desiring it; the Legal Committee, which will attempt to settle claims disputes in Antarctica, and decide the question of national claims in outer space. Also the Political Committee, which will discuss Portuguese colonial policies in Angola and Mozambique, on the basis of whether they should be colonies and on the basis of the racial discrimination revealed by UN investigation, and will also discuss the settlement of the border dispute between Red China and India; and the Social Committee, which will discuss the settlement of refugees in Hong Kong, Angola, the Republic of South Africa, the Gaza Strip, and Algeria, and study the excess population problem with the view towards setting up a UN agency to combat it.

All these committees are set up (as is the entire Assembly) as realistically as possible, and the delegates are encouraged to be as much like the nationals they are representing as they wish.

In addition to participating in committee meetings and plenary sessions, the delegates will have a banquet luncheon Thursday, where they will be addressed by William M. Jordan, the UN Director of Political Affairs. Thursday night, Edward P. Morgan of ABC will speak to them in Memorial Hall at eight and Friday they will hear Dr. Taylor of the UNC History Dept. in Hill Hall, also at eight. The general public is invited to attend the last two speeches.

HANDBOOK INTERVIEWS

Interviews will be held for the selection of the Editor and Business Manager of the Carolina Handbook on Tuesday, Feb. 19, from 3:30-5:30 at Graham Memorial.

First printed in 1891 by the YMCA in an edition of 16 pages, The Carolina Handbook is one of the oldest publications on the University campus. Today, as an official publication of the Student Government, it contains some 150 pages and involves a budget of $3,500. The purpose of the handbook is to give the prospective student a close survey of the life at Carolina.

The Business Manager is in control of the finances, solicits advertising and enter reports to the Publications Board concerning the expenses of the handbook. The Editor is responsible for planning the publication and overseeing its development. Both positions receive paid salaries.

Student Legislature OKs Pearsall Education Plan

Six Places Available On Europe Tour

Seminars Abroad, a European tour for Carolina students, will be making its final organizational plans within the next two weeks. Six places for men students remain open.

"This tour is not simply a sightseeing tour," Claude Shotts, head of Seminars Abroad, said yesterday. "It is primarily an effort to give our students a chance to talk with students, political leaders, and European people in the countries we visit."

Upon arriving in each country or city, the tour is met by native students who act as hosts and hostesses for the duration of the stay in that city.

The tour, which includes 12 countries and 17 major cities, is focused on the political, social, and cultural aspects of Europe. A highlight of the tour is a visit to East Berlin. Last summer Carolina students discussed and debated political issues with Communist officials in Berlin.

In Ireland, the Lord Mayor of Dublin will hold a reception for the students on tour. French students meet with the tour in the Four Winds Club in Paris and a banquet with Italian students is held in Rome.

Seminars Abroad is limited to 30 students and a balance is maintained between men and women.

All transportation to and from Europe and between countries is by plane. "This gives us more time in each country," Judy Bryant, chairman of Seminars Abroad and a member of last summer's tour, said.

"This tour is geared to the desires of the independent person. There is ample free time for individual excursions, free days in every week, and a very flexible schedule," she said. "Last year on the free day, some of the group rented motor cycles and toured the country-side."

Application blanks are available in the YMCA office. Interested students may contact Judy Bryant at the Kappa Delta house.

Friday Opposes Dorm Rent Hike

Consolidated University President, William C. Friday yesterday appealed to the Joint Appropriations Committee of the State Legislature in Raleigh, stating that requiring students to pay the complete cost of constructing new dormitories at higher educational institutions could put college beyond the reach of students from low-income families.

Friday, Leo Jenkins of East Carolina and William Plemmans of Appalachian requested that the state continue to pay half the cost of the new dormitory construction.

The three asked the committee to add approximately $14 million to the construction fund outlined in the capital outlay budget for the institutions.

The governor and the Advisory Budget Commission had recommended dormitories be constructed on a 100 per cent self-liquidating basis in the new budget.

Friday said such a proposal would increase dorm rents $30 per year to all resident students at the University.

"I doubt that anyone can say what share ought to be borne by the parent and the student, but we should not ever get into a situation where entrance to the University is based on financial capability," Friday said.

He said by unduly increasing costs, "we are working against ourselves" since an educational institution, to perform its function, must keep its doors open to all students.

He said he is afraid some students already look at the fees and decide the state university is a "privileged affair."

No Action Taken On Bill To Pay DTH Reporters

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature Thursday night overwhelmingly endorsed an amended version of a resolution supporting the recommendations of the Pearsall Committee for North Carolina higher education.

Legislature failed to act on a bill to appropriate $360 for the Publications Board to pay three DTH reporters ten dollars a week for twelve weeks when a quorum of the legislators was not present.

The resolution, introduced by Bob Spearman (UP-SP), strongly supports the Pearsall Committee's recommendations in the definition of the University purpose, co-education on all campuses, a broader undergraduate education, a plan for future expansion of the University, and one name for the University.

Included in the resolution was an amendment, drawn up by Arthur Hays, which stated that SL "feels that if new branches are admitted into the Greater University, efforts should be made to continue and stimulate the tradition of a strong, independent, self-governing, student community as it exists at the University at Chapel Hill."

Copies of the resolution are to be sent to Governor Terry Sanford, both houses of the N. C. Legislature, university officials and the editors of the Greensboro Daily News, the Raleigh News and Observer and the Charlotte Observer.

Also receiving Legislative approval was a resolution, introduced by Ford Rowan, which requested that major athletic events with Big Four opponents not be scheduled during student vacations. SL also went on record as supporting UNC's athletic teams in their efforts.

A bill to establish a physical development committee was withdrawn and the penalties, which the Women's Honor Council can impose, were approved in other business.

Student Body President, Inman Allen will address SL next week on the "State of the Campus."

Africans Claim Bulgarian Insults Caused Fighting

VIENNA (UPI) — Angry African students involved in recent street fighting with armed Bulgarian militiamen charged Friday the Bulgarian people called them "black monkeys," spit at them and told them to "go back to the trees."

"It was a common occurance that they spit at us as we walked by, taunting us to 'Go back to the trees, black monkeys'," said one of 17 Ghanian students who arrived here by plane from Sofia.

They charged that racial prejudice was widespread in Bulgaria and actively encouraged by the Communist government there.

The students were accompanied by J. L. Appah-Sampong, Ghana's ambassador to Bulgaria, who also complained of the numerous indignations suffered by Africans studying in Bulgaria.

"Unless the whole atmosphere changes," Appah-Sampong said, "there will be no African students returning to Bulgaria to resume their studies.

Appah-Sampong, the only African ambassador in Bulgaria, said 300 African students still in the country all have decided to leave as a demonstration of "African solidarity."

Kofi Buckle, a 32-year-old Ghanian student, said he was brutally knocked down by a Bulgarian policeman in last Tuesday's rioting in Sofia and lost two teeth.

"We were marching peacefully along and had no fight in mind," he said, "when suddenly the Bulgarian police turned up. Completely without warning they started using their clubs."

"One of them hit me smack in the mouth with his fist," he said displaying a gap in his upper teeth.

A 23-year-old girl, Betsy Adde, said she was slapped repeatedly in the face by Bulgarian policemen. She said they stopped only after she started screaming from pain.

She said then they twisted her arms and pushed her roughly into a police truck where she was taken to police headquarters and interrogated for several hours.

The demonstrations were triggered by the pre-dawn arrest of two leaders of the all-African students' union. The government had banned the formation of the student group and this action resulted in a series of disputes.

WUNC FM SCHEDULE

Schedule for Saturday:

6:00—Masterwork

7:25—Basketball: UNC vs. Clemson
State vs. South Carolina
Between games: Basil Jones Special

Dormitory Spotlight: Ruffin

(This is the fifth in a series of articles on UNC dorms. It is sponsored jointly by the dorm presidents and the Communications Committee.)

A program of speakers and a lively social schedule highlight the activities of Ruffin this year.

The dorm had Chancellor House and Dr. Sam Hill as speakers during the fall in a program that was initiated last year by Dr. Ransom Taylor.

Under Social Chairman Charles Coble, Ruffin held a party with the nurses dorm this fall, and a pizza party for the dorm at La Pizza.

A party is being planned with a dorm at Women's College for the spring, Coble said.

The football and basketball teams have been particularly successful in intramurals this year. Ruffin has entered teams in almost every sport.

A dorm newspaper, the Ram-Page, has been appearing regularly, edited by Arthur Hays.

Ruffin plans to continue and increase its activities in the spring.

Seat Belt Sale At Eastgate

Merchants in the Eastgate Shopping Center have undertaken a seat-belt sale project. Member merchants have purchased more than a thousand belts which will be sold and installed at cost.

The seat belts cost $2.85 and will be sold to the general public at that price, according to Billy Arthur, president of the merchant group. "Actually," said Arthur, "the freight and handling charges make the belts cost us more than $2.85, but if we can get the belts in use we'll gladly absorb the cost."

Sale of the belts will probably continue for a few weeks, or until "satisfactory saturation of the belts through the area" can be achieved.

"Let me point out also that these belts are first quality in every respect," Arthur continued. "They are 6,000 pound belts (the National Safety Council recommends at least 5,000 pounds) and are made of nylon with the metal-on-metal buckle everybody wants."

2 Coeds Campused For Late Return

Two co-eds were tried and convicted by the Women's Council in Open Trials Thursday night for violation of the Campus Code. They were accused of having improperly signed out for their return to Chapel Hill from the semester break. Both were campused, one for three days, the other for eight.

In the first case the defendant pleaded "indefinitely", arguing that extenuating circumstances had caused her to forget the time at which she was supposed to return. The defendant presented evidence to the effect that she had had two teeth removed a couple of days before her return and was at home in bed under sedation at the time she was scheduled to return.

When she was notified by a phone call on Saturday evening from her graduate counselor that she was late, she testified that she asked to be rescheduled for return the next day.

The defendant stated that she had originally planned to return on Saturday in order to pick up her class tickets, but that when she found it unnecessary, she had forgotten about it under the pressure of circumstances.

The Council found the defendant guilty and sentenced her to be campused for eight days, beginning Feb. 15. The Council said that it was the responsibility of the student to get her sign-out slip changed if necessary.

In the second trial, the defendant was accused of having signed out to return on Sunday, Feb. 3, but did not return until the following Tuesday. The defendant pleaded guilty as charged. Evidence was presented by the defendant in which she stated that she had called her parents and her roommate to the effect that she would not return from her term break until Tuesday, Feb. 5. The defendant was spending her vacation in Florida. She stated that she expected her roommate to notify her housemother of the change in plans.

The Council sentenced the defendant to be campused for a period of three days, beginning Feb. 15. The Council charged that it is the responsibility of the student to notify the dormitory administration explicitly in order to change a sign-out slip.

A Review By Neill Clark

'Rhino' O.K.—Relatively

By NEIL CLARK

REVIEW: RHINOCEROS, by Eugene Lonesco; designed and directed by Tommy Rezzuto; costumes by Irene Smart Rains; lighting by Ralph Swanson. The last performance is Sunday at 8:30 p.m. at the Playmaker Theatre.

* * *

The boards sagged under the weight of the Rhinoceros presently galumping in the Playmaker Theatre, and except for a few light-footed moments, what should have been as exciting as a circus was little more amusing than a trip to the zoo. It is understandable, however, that the Playmakers were unable to achieve a highly polished performance in a brief three-week rehearsal period, and after all, they are only students, not professionals, and somebody ought to tell that snotty critic that Chapel Hill is not Broadway. These factors being duly noted, it is also understandable that the production is a failure, unless relative standards are observed. Very well, let relative standards be observed.

Relative Standards

The first relative standard is the difficulty of the play. Considering that "Rhinoceros" is the most difficult play attempted thus far by The Playmakers, it is the outstanding production of the year. The first scene of the second act had more life, more polish, more downright stageworthiness than anything seen here for quite a while. Performances such as those of Anne West as Mrs. Beouf and Harry Callahan as Botard crackled with vitality and lifted the pace of the whole show which had comparatively dawdled through the first act.

It was disappointing that the dual conversation between Berenger (the hero) and Jean (his priggish pal) and the one between The Logician, played by Wesley Van Tassel and The Old Man, played by Arnold Wengrow, did not synchronize, for it is one of the most brilliantly written sequences in recent drama. As Jean is urging Berenger to improve his mind. The Logician is instructing the old man in the intricacies of the syllogism. The dialogues play off and against each other creating a bitter counterpoint of hilarity and absurdity.

John Crockett turned in the best performance I have seen him give, playing a difficult role with polish and poise (if one can be said to maintain pois whil changing ntom mantain poise while changing into a rhinoceros). Berenger Larry Wanuer presented a characterization that was promising in outline tail. Rather than developing the part he seemed to rely too heavily on the momentum his natural ability gave him, leaving Berenger stranded somewhere between the quixotic idealism of a schoolboy liberal and the apathy of a rather pathetic alcoholic.

One of the most effective moments of the play belongs to Juanese Hatten, who, as Daisy, addresses the audience directly as rhinoceroses thick-skinned, brutish, stupid animals and then proceeds to turn into one herself. This speech was given with an almost quivering edge to her voice that made the speech quite credible.

Others worthy of mention were Mary Watson as the grocer's hardened wife and especially Robert Malone whose transfiguration from rationalist to rhinoceros was as subtle (and also as funny) as only a rationalist could make it.

The settings sacrificed originality to functionality but the exigencies of touring make this understandable.

Tommy Rezzuto has handled a difficult play admirably, neither making it too burlesque nor too artsy-craftsy. The outlines are drawn and by the end of the tour the picture should be well shaded and toned.

And now that I have completed my relative criticism I shall return to the cool, muddy river in the jungle to bathe.

The Women's Honor Council; Let's Hide The Dirty Linen

When student government and the student body in general was debating the issue of open Honor Council trials, the most vehement and emotional opposition to the proposed opening came, quite often, from individuals either just concerned with or actually connected to the Women's Honor Council.

We did not, at the time, understand exactly why such was the case, although we had our suspicions.

As of late, our suspicions have been solidified and confirmed. We no longer wonder why the Women's Honor Council apparently fears and loathes open trials.

* * *

It seems that the greater percentage of the cases brought before the Women's Honor Council are cases involving violation of that ever-so-sacred Campus Code. The ambiguity, uncertainty, and often the plain and simple ridiculousness of that Code, and the decisions which come out of attempts to enforce it, make open trials a real pain in that (let's pretend) proverbial neck.

We would offer a case in point: As reported in today's Tar Heel, two co-eds were tried by the Women's Honor Council, last Thursday night, for violations of that aforementioned Campus Code. We do not, indeed does anyone, know all the facts. And we do not, indeed may anyone, pretend to a fathoming of the female mind. But on the basis of that which we do know, we note a disparity between sentences which should cause more than a little embarrassment to those who argue on behalf of a student-administered honor system, or at any rate, to those of us who argued for open trials.

As previously indicated, we may but infer what we think we understand about each case; but, we submit, the following inferences are likely to be drawn by anyone who attempts to comprehend the relevant facts of each case.

One girl (let's call her "co-ed A") was sentenced to a campusing of eight days for returning one day later than she had originally signed out to return.

The second girl ("co-ed B") was sentenced to be campused for three days for returning two days later than she had pledged herself to.

Co-ed A was home in bed, under sedation, recovering from the extraction of two teeth. She neglected to call her residence hall and secure permission to extend her stay at home.

Co-ed B was in Florida, she wanted to stay longer than originally intended, so she called her roommate and her mother. She, just as co-ed A, did not notify her residence hall of her changed plans.

In ruling on the first case, the Council said that it was the responsibility of the student to get her sign-out slip changed if necessary. In ruling on the second case the Council said that it is the responsibility of the student to notify the dormitory administration explicitly when changing a sign-out slip.

If there is a difference in the meaning of the two statements, it eludes us. The only difference we note in the matter is the variation of sentence.

* * *

It has been noted by a member of the Women's Honor Council that these, perhaps, are picayune instances with which to level criticism.

Yes, that may be true. But it would seem that the administration of justice (even "student justice") should be just that — justice. And when matters become so inconsequential that variations or abominations are readily dismissed as trivial, well then, it is high time that somebody changed something, somewhere.

If we can do nothing else, let's at least give the girls their closed trials and keep the dirty linen out of sight. (CW)

They Should Know

A while back (February 2) we read a short, clever paragraphic in the Greensboro Daily News which went something like this:

"Carolina Forum at Chapel Hill agrees to pay William F. Buckley's $450 fee for a speaking engagement. In the meantime they've given him $450,000 worth of publicity."

That's an interesting observation, and one, no doubt, that must have occurred to Billy boy himself during the drawn out squabble.

But what we find most interesting about the Daily News' comment is the position from which they make it. They are, certainly, hands down, the most qualified newspaper in the State of North Carolina to put forth such an observation.

We have had our attention drawn to the Charlotte Observer, and many other papers, on numerous occasions, because of various "comments" extended in the editorial page of the Daily News.

And if this type of attention-giving is "publicity," well the Greensboro Daily News should know. (CW)

Art, Man

During the furor over Chairman Khrushchev's comments about modern abstract painting, we read with interest of a Baltimore zoo director who sold a painting done by the tail of a jackass for a smart $50.

We would like merely to observe that, man, we've seen some of those $50 masterpieces in these parts. (CW)

Thomas: Bravest Realist Of All

By EDWARD P. MORGAN
ABC Radio

(Eds. Note: the following column is taken from a broadcast by Edward P. Morgan about Socialist leader Norman Thomas, who will speak here Monday night at 8 in Memorial Hall. Morgan himself will address the UN Assembly here Thursday night.)

A man who narrowly escaped being jailed during World War I as a Pacifist, Socialist and dangerous radical has been widely feted this week by some of the country's most prominent and well-heeled citizens, including members of that well-known minority group, the Republican Party, and the reason is hardly because he was born in Warren G. Harding's home town of Marion, Ohio. The man is Norman Thomas and the occasion his seventy-fifth birthday which happens to be today.

In terms of practical politics, a hardened professional would call Thomas' career an idealistic joke. Between 1928 and 1948 he ran six times for the presidency of the United States on the Socialist ticket and got nowhere.. He tired twice unsuccessfully for the governorship of New York and twice, with the same results, for the mayoralty of New York City, "In those days," he recalled to me in a telephone visit this afternoon, "I ran for anything that was loose."

In terms of his philosophy, Thomas still believes in socialism, though, judging by his dogged and forthright record, socialism of the climbing rather than the creeping variety. He still is a militant opponent of militarism and he still is one of capitalism's sharpest critics. How does such a radical who should be even more suspect by failing to be elected to anything and thus failing in that category by which Americans most sharply judge their fellows—the tangible trappings of success—how does he rate a $10-a-plate dinner at the Waldorf, salutes from people of undenied status around the world and an editorial in this morning's New York Times?

I think the principal answer to that question is that through an age that has seen the American Dream become a frothy nightmare of flapdoodle and downright fraud, Norman Thomas has remained a stubborn monument of incorruptibility. And such a monument is, encouragingly enough, in this millennium of materialism, an attraction, even an inspiration. Especially when his posture is not coated with the unction of self-righteousness.

I remember in the late Twenties the somewhat sinful thrill (my father was a small-town banker at the time) of listening to this tall, silver-haired, blue-eyed ex-Presbyterian preacher in a blue serge suit, stiff white collar and blazing red tie denounce Wall Street and stand off a couple of sour Communist hecklers at the same time. Even on the carnival midway of the Ontario, Oregon rodeo, which was where he happened to be speaking, his gladiator's thrust nudged a youngster's vague idealism.

What has he got to say to the fresher generations today? If they are bewildered he would remind them that he too, was bewildered. If they are cocksure and content he would warn them of the awful dangers of complacency. And, he says, "I would get quite moral too. The welfare state is an improvement over what we had but we have no right to be satisfied with it. The diminution of poverty, as we have seen, does not bring honesty."

Like other thoughtful citizens, Thomas is deeply troubled by the crushing reality of bigness—big business, big labor, big government. If the world somehow escapes the incineration of nuclear war, how does the individual escape suffocation in the thickness of regimentation that is pervading 20th century life? From his cockpit he sees the great powers of the Soviet Union and the United States moving closer together toward a kind a state capitalism. He does not welcome this because, while it may involve some relaxation in the rigidity of Communist society, it is just as likely to inhibit the freedoms we are used to —even take for granted.

Norman Thomas' passion remains disarmament and peace. With implacable purpose despite the frustrations of a lifetime, he is still trying to make men see that the beginning of wisdom must be the end of war. At the moment he is doing what he can to encourage the efforts of North Africans to organize a march into the Sahara Desert to protest the impending French explosion of an atomic bomb. Many citizens would scoff at this as an empty gesture, a waste of time or worse yet, a dangerous distraction from the world's harsh realities. Maybe so. And yet who can say that a man like Norman Thomas may not turn out to be the bravest realist of them all?

McKenna Novel

'Pebbles' Is Great — For A Western

(Eds. Note: the following review of Richard McKenna's book, the SAND PEBBLES, is excerpted from the Feb. issue of SHOW magazine.)

By KENNETH LAMOTT

People who care about such things have agreed for as long as I can remember that the novel is in a bad way. This chronic complaint seems recently to have taken on a plaintive new tone that was evident in a headline over a symposium in the New York Times Book Review: "Who's to Take the Place of Hemingway and Faulkner?" The answer, naturally, was that nobody is really going to take their places, but in the course of saying this, several critics in good standing—Malcolm Crowley, W. M. Frohock, Irving Howe, Stanley Edgar Hyman and Arthur Mizener—mentioned prominently such novelists as John Updike, Philip Roth, Norman Mailer, Saul Bellow, William Styron and J. D. Salinger. Even Alfred Kazin, who led off his contribution with the warning that "This symposium cannot serve the needs of American literature now, and it can only arouse unreal hopes and hurt feelings, overcame his reluctance sufficiently to list the names of 20-odd novelists.

IN THE FACE of this widespread longing to discover and anoint some New Masters, it seems almost unsporting to point out that, on their performances so far, none of the novelists mentioned by the symposium belongs in the very top drawer. They all write like whizzes, but, somehow, when they step onto the scales, they turn out to be a little lighter than they looked. Mr. Updike is too talented and too clever for his own good, if such a thing is possible, and I think it is. Mr. Mailer's energies have, unhappily, been diverted from the writing of novels. Mr. Roth and Mr. Styron both enjoy reputations that strike me as being rather inflated by their admirers. For my money, Mr. Bellow has come as close an anybody has, but he has still not come quite close enough. Finally, it is surely one of the best-kept secrets of the decade that Mr. Salinger's love affair with the fragile Glasses is turning into a dreadful bore. In any case, just reciting the names of these writers is in itself a convincing demonstration that none of them has the peculiar quality of excitement we sense when we say 'Hemingway" or "Faulkner."

* * *

And so, when a new writer appears with a 597-page novel that is not only guaranteed a whopping commercial success (Book-of-the-Month, serialization in the "Saturday Evening Post," a prepublication movie contract for $200,000), but that has also been given the imprimatur of the Harper's Prize Novel jury (Louis Auchincloss, Elizabeth Janeway and Philip Roth), there is not much doubt that we are meeting a novelist of whom we are going to hear a great deal more. Furthermore, when we learn that this new writer is a former chief petty officer who turned from the Navy to literature after his eyes had been opened by Thoreau's "Walden," we may be forgiven if, in spite of our disappointments in the past, we allow ourselves to hope that here at last is a man of the sort we have been looking for.

The writer is Richard McKenna and his book is THE SAND PEBBLES (Harper & Row, $5.95), the story of an enlisted man serving aboard a gunboat of the Yangtze Patrol during the yeasty years of the mid-1920's when Chiang Kai-shek's Kuomintang armies fought their way to power over the warlords and the left wing of their own party. This revolution has already been the subject of one memorable novel, Andre Malraux's classic "Man's Fate." In "The Sand Pebbles" we see these years of political and social turmoil from a radically different point of view.

Mr. McKenna's hero is an engine-room petty officer named Jake Holman, who comes aboard the USS CAN PABLO the Sand Pebble to her crew—in June 1925 as she lies quietly at her mooring on the Siang River, a tributary of the Yangtze. For Holman, transfer to the oldest and queerest-looking gunboat in China is a chance to make himself a secure home among the engines that are his chief interest in life. For the reader, Holman's transfer is an introdcution to a world that is as irretrievably a part of the past as the France of Marie Antoinette.

THE CHINA GUNBOATS supported a style of naval life that the world had never seen before and will certainly never see again. Abroad SAN PABLO, the ship's work was done by three crews of Chinese—the deck coolies, the bilge coolies and the house coolies — who, though they had no official existence, wore regulation whites as they tended the engines, cooked the food, did the laundry, chipped paint, swept the decks and performed every dirty or tedious job that normally makes up a major part of a sailor's life. The Sand Pebbles did not even shave themselves, but offered their faces daily to Clip Clip, the ship's barber. Released from menial tasks, they devoted their energies to quarterdeck routine, inspections and drills organized by a captain who was rumored to wear gold braid on his pajamas and who cherished a lofty conception of his duty.

As Lieutenant Collins once declared to his embarrassed crew, who had just been shaved, dressed and fed by their Chinese servants: "We serve the flag. The trade we all follow is the give and take of death. It is for that purpose that the American people maintain us. Any one of us who believes he has a job like any other, for which he draws a money wage, is a thief of the food he eats and a trespasser in the bunk in which he lies down to sleep."

In contrast to this elevated vision of the gunboater' presence in China, the Sand Pebbles themselves know only that their inscrutable personal destinies have led them into a world made up of walled cities, native quarters and foreign concessions patrolled by Sikh policemen; of junks and river steamers and British and Japanese gunboats; of Chinese whores, White Russian girls and missionaries; of anti-foreign riots and head-choppings; of good Scotch and plenty of it. With the rest of the crew, Holman takes his pleasure at the Green Front or the Red Candle Happiness Garden, or, away from the cities of Hankow and Chansha, aboard the joy-junk that ies up alongside with its cargo of Chinese girls who have been inspected and numbered in iodine by the pharmacist's mate.

JAKE HOLMAN is the Silent Cowboy; Lieutenant Collins is the Sheriff who is stern in his devotion to the Law; the ship's yeoman, Red Dog Bite-'em-on-the-ass Shanahan, is the Comic Sidekick; Frenchy Burgoyne is the Squaw Man; Maily is the Virtuous Whore; the pretty young missionary, Shirley Eckert, is the Good Woman, whom the Silent Cowboy loves with a pure love; Pohan, the engine-room coolie, is the Friendly Indian, and his blood-curdling torture-murder is in the best tradition of the Plains Indians; Chiang Kai-shek is the young Sitting Bull and the Kuomintang soldiers are the Sioux; the riverside bandits are the Apaches; and the SAN PABLO is an isolated troop of cavalry that disgraces and then redeems itself.

Now, I rather enjoy superior Westerns, and I have no objection in principle to what Mr. McKenna has done, except when it interferes with what I conceive of to be the proper business of the novelist, which is not merely to entertain and instruct us but to reveal a vision of what it means to be a human being. And it is here, just as it is in the Western, that "The Sand Pebbles" shows its limitations. It is all on the surface, and so long as we try to go no deeper we remain quite satisfied, but when Mr. McKenna attempts to show us a human being at a time of emotional crisis, he is disappointing, and if the human being is a woman, he can be embarrassing.

An example of what I mean is provided by the missionary Shirley Eckert as she realizes that she is in love with one of her colleagues at China Light: "She saw with sudden clarity that Walter Gillespie was already the man Jake Holman might have become, under a more kindly star. In the first period at China Light she had seen little of Gillespie and she had thought of him as conventionally sexless, the way women felt toward preachers. But now, thrown with him as a fellow teacher, living with him like brother and sister in the Craddock household, sharing the grief for Tai-tai and the love for Cho-jen, she knew that Walter Gillespie was a very good man indeed. She had been leaning on him more than she realized."

IT SEEMS to me that what we see here is not just a failure of Mr. McKenna's prose, which tends to be rather pedestrian, but a somewhat more serious limitation. His novel actually IS a Western in its emotional tone, with the Western's conventionalized and sentimental set of emotional attitudes, which are strongest in the innocent love of man for man and weakest in the love of men and women. In the friendship of Jake and Po-han we are surely being treated to one more example of what Leslie Fiedler has identified as the archetypal myth of American literature, the picture of a dark-skinned man and a white man fleeing from civilization in each other's arms.

Having said this, let me repeat that Mr. McKenna's accomplishment is a considerable one and an honorable one. He is plainly not working the same side of the street as Messrs. Updike, Roth, Salinger and the rest, and he is not really a writer in the same sense they are. In spite of all the fanfare with which his first book is being launched, he is neither a new Hemingway nor a new Faulkner, nor does "The Sand Pebbles" belong on the same shelf as "Man's Fate." Mr. McKenna is a splendid storyteller nevertheless, and that is enough to deserve our gratitude.

Earth's Last Days

The sun will dim, and light will pass away.
The stars will gleam on continents of snow,
And dogs will cry aloud their desperate woe
Beside ther masters' bodies; cold and gray,
The plains will crack beneath the sheets that stray
Upon them from the north, as long ago
The great Antarctic sank and dropped below
The sheets of ice that hold it yet today.
So earth will lie deserted. Men will flee
In terror of the void to neighbor stars,
And raise new homes on planets newly made.
The sun will writhe its gasses, and the sea
Of flame will reach from Mercury to Mars,
And these will die beneath the searing blade.

Prayer Day Set

Miss Barbara Hall, graduate of Bucknell University and Yale Divinity School, will be the speaker for the Universal Day of Prayer for Students service Sunday at seven o'clock at the Chapel of the Cross on East Franklin Street.

Miss Hall has recently been traveling for the New England Student Christian Movement and the Episcopal Church.

She has also worked several years in Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Student leaders for the service will be Gray Temple and Bob Perry. Prayers will be offered by the following students for the particular needs of their respective countries: Marquerite Bou-Raad of Lebanon, Wise Joseph of India, Seung Kew Choi of Korea, and Monty Willson of the U. S.

Knoxville Artists Exhibit Work At Ackland For Month

By ALICE WELSH

A group exhibit by seven artists of Knoxville, Tennessee is currently on view in the North and South Carolina Galleries at the Ackland Art Center of the University through March 14.

The show has 34 oil paintings, a watercolor, a serigraph, four polymer tempera on canvas, one mixed media, and five sculptures. The artists include Robert Birdwell, Richard Clarke, Kermit Ewing, Joanna Higgs, Philip Nichols, Walter Stevens, and Carl Sublett. Four are teaching artists on the faculty of the University of Tennessee; the others are practising artists in Knoxville.

The six painters have been exhibiting together for more than ten years; recently a sculptor joined the group, which formed spontaneously. They did not organize to protest any particular art trend or spearhead any movement but rather came together on a geographic basis as well as through a common enthusiasm for painting.

While the style of the exhibit as a whole is non-objective, there is, nevertheless, some representationalism discernible. Almost all the canvases show the artists' awareness of nature; and a few of the paintings even make social or scientific comments as, for example, a flying saucer barely visible through a deceptively abstract composition "Earth Space" by Richard Clarke; and one is actually a modern version of the famous Avignon "Pieta."

Professor Joseph Sloane, director of the Ackland Art Center, says, "There is something here for nearly everyone who enjoys the modern idiom since the show ranges from the colorful city-space of Robert Birdwell to Kermit Ewing's imaginative evocation of a 'Noonday Beach' by using oil, color, sand, and plaster for his design."

The paintings range from vigorous hues and contrasting forms to somber tones and vague anomalies. In fact the real sound and fury of the show is the bold and unrestrained use of color which frequently suggests an explosion.

The general level of excellence among all artists of the group is exceptionally high, and may well represent, according to one museum in the Southeast, some of the best contemporary painting being done.

Companies To Recruit Here

The following companies will recruit on campus next week:

Monday, Feb. 18: Texaco, Inc.; IBM Corporation; Dan River Mills, Inc.; UARCO Incorporated; American Viscose Corporation; Camp Pinecliffe (women only).

Tuesday, Feb. 19: U. S. Navy Mine Defense Laboratory; Deering Milliken, Inc.; Camp Graham (women only); Burlington Industries, Inc.; Vick Chemical Company.

Wednesday, Feb. 20: Burlington Industries, Inc.; Vick Chemical Company; Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith, Inc.; Great American Insurance Company; Brunswick Corporation; General Electric Company.

Thursday, Feb. 21: REA Express; Pepsi-Cola Company; Vulcan Materials Company; Walker Manufacturing Company.

Friday, Feb. 21: First National Bank of Atlanta; Aluminum Company of America; Ross Laboratories; U. S. Atomic Energy Commission.

Students desiring interviews should sign up at the Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall.

Pianist Here Friday For GM Concert

Piano-humorist Henry L. Scott will be in Memorial Hall Friday, Feb. 22 at 8 p.m. in his one-man show, "Concerto for Fun," sponsored by Graham Memorial.

"Scott can, and does, adapt his show to his circumstances, using any oddity, human or inanimate, available," according to Bob Rearden, president of G.M. "His audiences are never reprimanded for walking out during the encores, for long after Scott's last appearance for the evening the spectators are still clamoring for more."

The piano-humorist developed an aim to losely imitate the styles at an early age. His first piano teacher, Philip Dedrick, played for the movies on Saturday evenings and the pipe organ at church on Sundays.

However, his musical training was almost entirely classical, while much of his ability and gift for swing interpretation has developed through a keen ear which enables him to ilosely imitate the styles of top flight pianists in the popular field.

The program will be free to UNC students, I.D. cards are required.

U. N. HOUSING

The YM-YWCA asks the faculty to help provide in housing the girls who will attend the U. N. Model General Assembly here Feb. 20-23. Please contact Ann Queen at the Y or call Jubee Mullis at 942-1767.

Professor Higham, who has just returned from a leave of absence in England, will speak on "Some Lessons of British Air Power."

EDUCATION MEETING

John B. Chase and Roy Sommerfield, associate professors in the School of Education, are attending the meeting of the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education now being held in Chicago.

Prof. Chase, who is director of the UNC School of Education's fifth year teacher training program, will observe the fifth year programs at the University of Chicago and at Northwestern University while in Chicago.

The fifth year teacher training program is aimed at producing superior teachers and equips teachers in the training program with a master's degree.

While in Chicago, Prof. Sommerfeld will also participate in the meeting of the American Education Research Administration.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE

Miss Lydia Holley, School of Public Health, is now attending a special planning conference in Chicago, to help set up a national congress on Strokes to be held later in the year.

The meeting, "Stroke Conference — Rehabilitation, Management, Prevention," is sponsored by the American Medical Association, the American Heart Association, the Heart Diseases Control Program of the U. S. Public Health Service and the Vocational Rehabilitation Administration.

Miss Holley, assistant professor of Public Health Administration and co-director of the new Program in Public Health for Physical Therapists, will participate in a discussion group on professional education at the Chicago meeting.

GEOLOGIST TO SPEAK HERE

Dr. L. U. de Sitter, professor of structural and applied geology at the University of Leiden, Holland, will give two addresses at UNC Feb. 18 and 23.

Prof. de Sitter will be visiting here under the auspices of the National Science Foundation and the American Geological Institute on its Visiting International Scientist Program.

On Monday, Feb. 18, at 4 p.m., Prof. de Sitter will speak on the geologic structure of the Pyrenees in room 112 New East building.

On Thursday, Feb. 21, Prof. de Sitter will give a two part lecture at the Faculty Lounge of the Morehead Planetarium. His overall title is "Variations in Tectonic Style." He will give part of his lecture at 3:30 p.m. and part two of the address at 8 p.m. The lectures are open to the public.

YAF

Young Americans for Freedom will hold an important business meeting Monday, at 7:30 p.m. in 306 Law School.

Study in Guadalajara, Mexico

The Guadalajara Summer School, a fully accredited University of Arizona program, conducted in cooperation with professors from Stanford University, University of California, and Guadalajara, will offer July 1 to August 11, art, folklore, geography, history, language and literature courses. Tuition, board and room is $240. Write Prof. Juan B. Rael, P. O. Box 7227, Stanford, Calif.

Tar Heels Hold Off Pesky Gamecocks, 78-74

Billy Buckets 28 To Pace Victory

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

CHARLOTTE — North Carolina had to survive a severe case of foul fever here last night before Billy Cunningham and Charlie Shaffer could rally the Tar Heels to a 78-74 victory over South Carolina.

Cunningham again was the big man with his 28 points and 21 rebounds, but it was Shaffer, returning to the lineup for the first ime in two weeks, who pulled this one out for UNC.

Charlie, his left elbow bound tightly in a bulging taped brace, scored 14 crucial points and was a bulwark of the boards throughout the second half.

But Carolina, despite the shining performances of these two, was almost a loser due to 27 fouls committed and other numerous errors.

Up by 76-66 with two and a half minutes left, the Tar Heels thought they were safe. They weren t.

First Yogi Poteet, then Bryan McSweeney fouled out trying to stop two Ronnie Collins' drives. Collins converted one of the lay-ups and added two free throws to cut the margin to six. USC's Terry Lucansky stole the ball from Larry Brown, made his fast break lay-up, and the lead was only four.

But Carolina called time, organized and came out with a stall which consumed the final minute and a half. Cunning and Scottie Ward trade buckets in the final moments.

The first half began the foul circus. South Carolina got off to a quick 15-8 lead, largely due to Ward's nine points in the first seven points—five of them free throws.

The Gamecocks maintained their margin through the next seven minutes, using a 3-2 offensive stall which considerably slowed the play.

They led 21-15 with 7:12 to go when UNC, in the person of Cunningham, finally made its move.

Billy, who had failed to shoot for seven minutes, hit a corner jumper, after which he stole the ball and raced for a dunk lay-up. The Kid then grabbed a defensive rebound and fed Ray Respess for the tying goal.

The team went even from there to the buzzer when Cunningham threw in a 45-foot jumper for a 31-31 half-time score. Shaffer inserted for the first time with four minutes left, helped UNC tremendously with some fine rebounding and a clutch jump shot.

Scoring: UNC — McSweeney 8, Respess 10, Cunning 28, Poteet 8, Brown 8, Cooke 2, Callahan 0, Shaffer 14.

USC—R. Collins 22, Yarborough 5, Haney 8, Ward 23, Lucansky 4, J. Collins 12, Corsage 0, Grich 0.

Second game score at Charlotte: NC State 66, Clemson 50.

★ ★ ★ Trackmen Battle ★ ★ ★ In Big Five Meet

By LASZLO BIRINYI JR.

Over 150 athletes representing the "Big 5" — UNC, Duke, State College, Wake Forest, and Davidson—will compete this afternoon in the Carolina Invitational Indoor Track Meet.

The meet, which will be held in the Tin Can, will officially start at 2 p.m., but the pole vault and broad jump will be held at 11 a.m., because these events must be held when the track is not in use.

UNC- Duke Duel

The meet is expected to be primairly a duel between Carolina and Duke. Duke's strength is more balanced than Carolina's, but Coach Dale Ranson has tremendous depth in the distance races and in the relays.

In the field events, Carolina's only successes have been in the pole vault and high jump. Heath Whittle is a consistant 14-footer in the pole vault, while Tom Clark should have no trouble winning the high jump. Reinard Harkema should also help for the Tar Heels in the high jump.

In the sprints and hurdles, John McNinch, Jim Brown, and Dana Wellman have been doing better than expected but Milton Baugguess' injury hurts the Tarheels chances for victory.

Carolina's real strength lies in the longer races. Bob Hart is being counted on to score needed points in the 440, while Jerry Stuver, who tied for first against Clemson, and Bob Bennett, who tied for first in the 880 and mile, will compete in the 880.

In the mile, Charlie Little, who scored two firsts against Clemson, will meet ACC cross-country runner-up Louis Van Dyck of Duke. Little, who has run a 4:17 indoor mile, and Van Dyck should provide one of the meet's highlights in this race.

In the two-mile, Carmine Lunetta and Art Maillet, who finished one-two against Clemson, will give the Tar Heels a formidable duo.

Duke's main hopes, in addition to Van Dyck, include Dick Gesswein, who has thrown the shot 57' 3", Bob Fogle, in the hurdles and Gil Kirk in the 440.

Bob Cordle, in the broad jump and 60 yard dash, is Davidson's outstanding entry. Other Davidson point producers should be Keith Fraser in the high jump and Chester Davis in the 2 mile.

State's Corn

State College's standouts will be Stuart Corn and John Hamrick. Corn, who has beaten Whittle earlier this year, will compete in the high jump and broad jump in addition to his specialty, the pole vault. Hamrick will run the 440.

The Demon Deacons of Wake Forest will be counting on Dave Turner in the mile and the 880, Gene Merryman in both hurdles events, Ernie Williams in the 60 and Jeff Mitchner in the high jump.

Coach Ranson commenting on the meet said, "The tempo of competition is increasing,; we look for excellent times and heights. The performances should be better than up to this time."

Assistant Coach Joe Hilton felt it would be very close meet between the host Tar Heels and the Blue Devils. He believed that Carolina is capable of victory because "the boys have been working hard. But we are somewhat below full strength because of several injuries."

Fencers Host Meet Today

The UNC Fencing Club will be host to teams from Duke, Virginia Military Institute and The Citadel in an invitational fencing meet today at Woollen Gym.

Fencing fans are in for a full day of activity, starting at 10 a.m. and winding up late in the afternoon.

VMI and The Citadel will open the action with the 10 o'clock contest on the main floor of the gym.

The UNC team will fence VMI, The Citadel and Duke, respectively, beginning at 1 p.m. Competition will be held in the foil, epee and sabre events.

Sports Feature Military Week

Athletic competition will mark the beginning of the first UNC "Military Week" next Monday.

The joint Air Force and Naval ROTC week of activities will include contests between the two units in handball, volleyball, basketball, and physical fitness tests. A volleyball game between the staffs of the Air Force and Navy units will highlight the five days of athletic activities.

A trophy will be presented to the unit compiling the most points in the contests. The award will be made Saurday night at the annual Mitary Ball, which will officially end Military Week The trophy will be presented by the Society of Scabbard and Blade, an honor organization composed of Air Force Cadets and Navy Midshipmen. Scabbard and Blade sponsors both Military Week and the Military Ball.

Teams for the athletic competition have already been organized in both the Air Force and Naval units. All members of the units may participate, regardless of varsity or intramural affiliation.

Handball will lead off the competition on Monday at 8:15 p.m. Five teams of two men each will compete for each unit.

Basketball will follow on Tuesday at 4:00 and 5:00 with each unit expected to court two teams.

Physical fitness tests will be held on a competitive basis on Wednesday afternoon at 4:00. Five to seven men from each unit will be tested on pull-ups, squat-thrusts in one minute, push-ups, sit-ups in two minutes, and a 300-yard shuttle-run.

Volleyball will be played between the cadets and midshipmen on Thursday, and between the Air Force and Navy staffs on Friday. Game will begin at 4:00 and 5:00 on Thursday, and the staff game starts at 4:00 on Friday.

Archery Winners Announced

The results of the Carolina Open Archery tournament are as follows: Men's Instinctive—Sie C. Graham Jr. of Salisbury (first), Charles D. Minter of Kernersville (second), and Floyd Harpe of Statesville (third).

Men's Free-style—Jerry Byrd of Charlotte (first), Roger Williams of Monroe (second) and Jack Tucker of Concord (third).

Women's Instinctive—Ollie Moody of Greensboro (first), Belle White of High Point (second) and Faye Bullis of Sanford (third).

Women's Free-style — Aliceteen Haltom of High Point (first), Jo Ann Jordan of High Point (second), and Anna Backlund of Sanford (third).

Professional (only one trophy given)—Ray Backlund of Sanford (first).

In total over 150 people attend the tournament with about 100 registering to shoot. According to Bob Perry, President of the Outing Club (host to the tournament), attendance was much better than expected. Entrants came from as far away as Richmond, Yorktown and Lynchburg, Virginia.

Joey Archer Fight On TV

NEW YORK (UPI) — Joey Archer of New York, angling for a shot at the middleweight title later this year, faces one of the toughest tests of his career Saturday night when he takes on Canadian knockout specialist Blair Richardson in a 10-round nationally televised bout at Madison Square Garden.

The 31-year-old Archer, ranked eighth among the world's middleweights, hopes to use a victory over Richardson as a talking point for a title bout with either Dick Tiger or Gene Fullmer, who meet for the championship in a return bout at Las Vagas, Nev., next Saturday.

And Broadway oddsmakers feel Archer can beat Richardson, who has knocked out 31 of the 36 men he has beaten. They have installed Archer as a 2 to 1 favorite mostly because of his won-lost record, best in the middle-weight division.

Joey has lost only one of his 35 professional fights and that reversal came after he had taken a one-year layoff. Among his 34 victims is Denny Meyer, the World Boxing Association's junior middleweight champion.

Richardson, a 22-year-old Bible student from Sydney, Nova Scotia, will be making his Garden debut in the fight, which will be televised by ABC beginning at 10 p.m. (EST).

His overall record is 36 victories, three losses and one draw. Blair, who is a freshman at Eatern Nazerene College in Sydney, gained prominence when he knocked out Wilfie Greaves to win the Canadian middleweight title.

Richardson, too, is hopeful of gaining a crack at the world title. His backers feel the crewcut Canadian is just the man who can beat either Tiger or Fullmer. First, though, he'll have to get by Archer, who feels that his No. 8 ranking does not justify either his ability or his record.

Rated ahead of Archer in the middleweight division are former champion Terry Downes, George Benton, Joey Giardello, Luis Felede, Meyer and Laszle Papp Richardson is unrated.

STATE AFFAIRS

The State Affairs Committee will hold interviews for prospective members Friday and Monday between 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. and from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. Saturday. All interested persons should inquire at the Student Government offices at those times.

Wrestlers Seek First Win In ACC Against Duke

North Carolina's wrestling team gets back into action today for the first time in two weeks—and Sam Barnes' men will be out to prove that their January 30 encounter was a fluke.

This afternoon they play at Duke, following a preliminary freshman contest.

Two weeks ago the Tar Heels traveled to Charleston, W. Va., where West Virginia's Mountaineers trampled the Barnesmen, 28-0.

It marked the first time since 1955 the Tar Heels had failed to score in a meet. Said Barnes: "They did everything very good, and we did everything very bad." It was the first time WVU sports fans had seen collegiate wrestling and they were treated to a real show.

Last year the Tar Heels defeated Duke and finished second only to Maryland in the ACC tournament. But this season has been a disappointing one for the sophomore-studded team.

The Tar Heels have a 3-6 record, holding victories over Pfeiffer, East Carolina and St. Andrews. Virginia and N. C. defeated UNC in ACC competition.

Carolina's victory hopes will be riding on lettermen Jerry Cabe, Gene Record, Willis Johnson, Jack Jones, Tom Grant and Louis Arthur.

Gridders Dot Baseball Lineup

There may be more footballers playing baseball than football on the first day of spring gridiron practice at UNC March 1. Not really, but there will be five, an unusual number of two-sport men.

Quarterback (pitcher) Junior Edge, end (first baseman) Frank Gallagher, quarterback (outfielder) Gary Black, fullback (outfielder) Ken Willard and halfback (catcher) Dave Braine, all are top prospects. Gallagher and Willard led freshman slugging last spring.

Walt Rabb, coach of the Tar Heels, predicts his club could cause real trouble if a couple of his pitching "darkhorses" come through. One of them will be Edge, one of the nation's leading passers on the gridiron.

The baseballers started drills this week. The first games on the 29-game schedule are March 22 and 23 against Southern Illinois here.

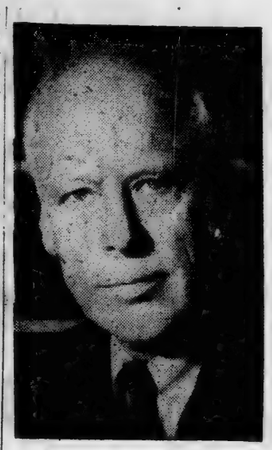
Socialist Thomas Delivers Address Tomorrow Evening

Norman Thomas, long-time socialist leader and civil libertarian, will speak at eight o'clock tomorrow night in Memorial Hall under the sponsorship of the Carolina Forum.



Although no specific topic for the speech has been announced, Mr. Thomas is expected to discuss disarmament and other international problems. A general question period will follow the talk.

A forceful and eloquent speaker, Mr. Thomas has raised his voice in behalf of a wide variety of causes during the fifty-odd years that he has been a part of the American political scene.

One of the founders of the American Civil Liberties Union, he has participated in many free speech cases (notably the Passaic textile strike of 1926) and in many other struggles in support of the rights of free speech, free assemblage, and picketing.

He has run for many offices on the Socialist Party ticket, including six presidential campaigns. Many of the reforms advocated by Thomas' party during the 1920's were subquently implemented during the New Deal.

Thomas was one of the first men to call America's attention to the plight of the Southern sharecropper and helped to organize the Southern Tenant Farmer's Union.

NORMAN THOMAS

During World War II, he fought "for a peace based on the cooperation of free peoples and rejection of both vengeance and imperialism." Since then he has campaigned for world disarmament, with international control and inspection, and against both "get-tough" imperialism and appeasement of the Soviet Union.

He is a member of the National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy, a sponsor of the Student Peace Union, chairman of the Post War World Council and of the Labor Research Institute. He is also a member of the League for Industrial Democracy and the Workers Defence League.

Thomas, in accepting the Forum's invitation to address the student body, noted that some of his "happiest experiences" have been addressing The Carolina Forum down through the years." His last Chapel Hill visit was in 1954.

Anti-Castro Pirates Capture Two Vessels

Hijacked Ship Is Seen At Surinam

CARACAS, Venezuela (UPI)—A U.S. Navy patrol plane Saturday sighted the Communist-hi-jacked Venezuelan freighter Anzoategui north of Surinam formerly Dutch Guiana cruising toward the northeast shoulder of Brazil.

Three Venezuelan destroyers were ordered in pursuit at full steam. A Venezuelan government spokesman predicted interception by noon Sunday. U. S. aircraft were granted permission by the Surinam government to land and refuel at Surinam to keep track of the elusive vessel, formally declared a "pirate" by Venezuela.

An authorized spokesman for the terrorist armed forces of national liberation FALN said here the pirate crew has offered to dock the ship if the Venezuelan government promises them amnesty and dispatches independent Senator Arthur Uslar Pietri to an undisclosed port of disembarkation to assure protection of the hijackers.

But Interior Minister Carlos Andres Perez has declared that the ship must be surrendered and the hijackers face trials which could net them 15 to 30 years.

Anonymous Caller

The anonymous woman telephone caller who has been the FALN contact with press organizations here for several weeks said earlier the hijackers have mined the hold of the freighter with dynamite and will blow it up, with the crew, if "warships of any nation" attempt to detain it.

The ship was captured at gunpoint Wednesday, apparently by stowaways in collusion with a segment of the crew headed by second mate Wisner Medina Rojas. It was en route to Houston, Tex.

The soft-voiced woman telephone spokesman who reported the hijacking hours before the government confirmed it, said the action was to "call the world's attention to our struggle against our executioners," meaning the anti-Communist government of President Romulo Betancourt.

A Communist terrorist campaign has sought to force cancellation of the President's Feb. 18 trip to the United States.

It was earlier believed the ship was heading toward Cuba, where the government of Premier Fidel Castro has offered the pirates asylum and promised to deliver the original crew safe to the United Nations secretariat.

The Navy patrol plane, out of Jacksonville, Fla., located the Anzoategui at 6 a.m. EST Saturday about 130 miles off Surinam proceeding in a south-southeasterly direction.

Toward Brazil

This would take it toward the northeastern hump of Brazil, which is dotted by small ports which could accommodate the 3,136-ton craft. The Portuguese luxury liner Santa Maria, which was hijacked in the same area by anti-Salazar Portuguese exile Capt. Henrique Galvao in 1961, put into Recife in northeast Brazil, and his hijack crew was granted political asylum.

Adm. Robert L. Dennison, commander of the U. S. Atlantic Fleet whose sea and air units had scanned 750,000 square miles of ocean in the search, broadcast repeatedly to the Anzoategui: "Set course for San Juan, Puerto Rico. Report your course and speed. Further instructions will follow."

But the Communist crew ignored the mandate.

In a message radioed to a news agency in Puerto Rico and monitored by the U. S. Defense Department, the pirates said: "Captain, officers, crew are as usual stop garble will the U. S. offer asylum to members of the national liberation armed forces the same as Cuba stop we are awaiting answer."

Dutch government sources in the Hague reported that the Surinam government has agreed to grant landing permission and refueling privileges for "a large number" of U. S. planes at Paramaribe. The request was made to Surinam's Premier Per Emanuels by U. S. Consul General W. Garland Richardson.

Two Americans Among Crew Of Marauder Ship

HAVANA (UPI) — The Armed Forces Ministry said Saturday an armed pirate launch with two Americans among its counter-revolutionary crew shot up and captured two Cuban fishing craft, wounding two fishermen.

The communique said the crew of the launch first machinegunned the two fishing boats, then forced the crews to jump overboard, commandeered the boats and "fled northward.

The fishermen, including two who were wounded, were plucked from the water by a third fishing boat. The boats belonged to the government fishing cooperative of Cardenas, Matanzas Province.

The raid apparently took place off the northern coast of Matanzas Province. The time was not specified.

None of the Cuban exile activist groups immediately claimed credit for the raid, contrary to past excursions. Both the Alpha 66 and the Second Front of Escambray have promised action during the month of February.

"The attack was made by a group of mercenaries at the orders of American imperialism using a pirate craft which came from the United States," the Armed Forces Ministry said.

It was the fifth confirmed attack by exile raiders on Cuban fishing boats or the Cuban shoreline since last March.

British Ambassador Sir Stanley Marchant summoned Western reporters to a press conference Saturday to announce that the Cuban government has agreed to release four British nationals serving sentences in Cuban prisons.

The four were Alfred Louis, a British Guiana Negro and alleged henchman of former Dictator Fulgencio Batista, who was sentenced to death, the sentence later commuted to 25 years; James Holder, from Barbados, sentenced to 9 years for conspiracy and released after vowing loyalty to the Cuban government; Peter John Lambton, sentenced to 25 years for "crimes against the sovereignty of the state;" and Robert Morton Geddes, arrested at the time of the abortive Pigs Bay invasion and sentenced to 30 years for "crimes against the state." Geddes, former Caribbean manager for Pepsi Cola, probably will leave Monday via Mexico to rejoin his American wife in Miami, Marchant said.

Without Soviet Concession

N-Test Ban 'Impossible'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Key legislative leaders have informed the administration that a nuclear test ban treaty is impossible unless Russia moves away from its take-it-or-leave-it attitude.

The Russian stand was voiced at the 17-nation disarmament talks in Geneva Friday.

Soviet Deputy Prime Minister Vassili V. Kuznetsov told the conference that Russia will not budge beyond acceptance of three on-site inspections, coupled with a "black box" detection network, to police a test ban treaty.

It was learned Saturday that legislators had informed chief U. S. disarmament negotiator William C. Foster, even before he left for the conference last Wednesday, that such a proposal was unacceptable.

The told him that a treaty based on the current Russian stand might not get even a majority vote in the Senate, much less the two-thirds vote needed for ratification.

Foster Informed

Informed sources also said they told Foster about this when he tolched base with them before leaving for Geneva.

The Russian attitude, coupled with the stand of the legislators, threw cold water on hopes for a new treaty. These hopes had zoomed after last fall's Cuban missile crisis.

After Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev removed his offensive bombers and missiles from Cuba last fall, it was felt an East-West agreement on a test ban might be easier to accomplish.

Negotiations were started in New York and Washington and hopes began to soar. But the Russians broke off those talks Jan. 31. They said the talks were ended because the United States and Britain insist on at least 10 on site inspections to insure against clandestine underground testing.

There was some hope that the Soviet might change this position at Geneva. But the legislators told Foster in advance that it was Moscow's turn to move and any agreement would have to be based on some compromise on the Kremlin's part.

Withdrew Offer

They noted that the current Russian position indicated he would accept in 1959, although they later withdrew the offer.

In the meantime, the lawmakers say, the United States has pulled back from its insistence on at least 20 on site inspections of suspicious tremers in Russia.

Some of these solons concede that some improvement has been made in devices to detect nuclear explosions against a background of natural seismic tremors. But they contend these do not justify compromise on the part of the United States alone.

No New Talks Set

GENEVA (UPI)—U.S. disarmament negotiator William C. Foster Saturday failed to get the Soviets to agree to resume the nuclear test ban talks they broke off earlier this month, reliable sources said.

Many diplomats here said it would take action by President Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev to get the dead-locked 17-nation disarmament conference here moving again.

Foster met with Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Vassili V. Kuznetson Saturday to set precedure for next week's session of the disarmament talks, of which they are co-chairmen. A spokesman said they agreed the talks should continue, with all 17 nations taking part.

But the sources said Kuznetsov again blocked Foster's attempt to get the smaller meetings going again among the three nuclear powers here—the United States, Britain and Russia.

The West, with the backing of the neutral nations at the conference, has been pressing for resumption of the nuclear talks, but the Soviets have been busy side-tracking the test issue since the conference resumed Tuesday. Instead, they want to discuss the larger field of general disarmament.

Flu Closes Schools In Wilkes Co.

WILKESBORO (UPI)—Schools in Wilkes County were ordered closed Monday because of influenza.

County Schools Supt. C. B. Eller said Saturday that classes might be resumed Tuesday, depending on the weather and a survey of school teachers throughout the county.

Officials said that 10 per cent of pupils and teachers were out with flu Friday but that doctors reported that the number of cases was on a decline this weekend.

Doctors warned, however, that close personal contact of young persons in classrooms and school buses could contribute to continued infection among Wilkes County youngsters.

One school, Mulberry Elementary School five miles north of North Wilkesboro with a total enrollment of 555, Friday reported more than 200 absentees, including two teachers and the janitor.

Principal Kenneth Greene said "a number of the other 18 teachers were present out of sheer will power, not good health."

ORIENTATION COMMITTEE

The Orientation Committee, responsible for setting up the orientation program for Fall of 1963, will be chosen this week. Chairman Archie Davis announced yesterday that interviews will be held on Tuesday from 2:00 until 5:00 p.m., on Thursday from 3:00 until 5:00 p.m., and on Friday from 2:00 until 5:00 p.m., February 19, 21, and 22 respectively. Interviews will be held in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial, and interested persons are requested to sign up for an interview at the GM information desk. Applicants should also pick up an application form, fill it out, and bring it with them to the interview.

Davis stressed the need for qualified persons and urged all interested persons to apply for the Committee. The Committee is to be composed of nine women and 13 men.

SENIOR CABINET

The Senior Class Cabinet will meet this afternoon at two o'clock in the Grail Room of GM.

FELLOWSHIP

A $2200 fellowship at the School of Government of George Washington University is now being offered to a 1963 graduate by the North Carolina Scottish Rite Masons.

The purpose of the fellowship is to educate students for leadership in federal, state, or local government.

Prospective 1963 graduates who wish to be considered applicants for this award should confer with the associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences before March 1.

BATTLE FOR TROPHY — Officers of the University of North Carolina chapter of Scabbard and Blade Society check the trophy which will be awarded to the winning ROTC unit in "Military Week" competition beginning Monday at Chapel Hill. They are Lt. Ronald H. Stonaker of Glenridge, N. J. (L) and Capt. Charles R. Brown, Jr. of Goldsboro. Scabbard and Blade, a joint Air Force-Navy ROTC honor organization, will sponsor the event.

Two Concerts Set For Today

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, will give two concerts today in Memorial Hall.

The concerts are sponsored jointly by the Chapel Hill Concert Series and GM.

The afternoon concert, which begins at 2:30, will admit only UNC students and students' wives. Students will be admitted free of charge.

The evening concert, which begins at 8, will be open to the public. Seats on the first floor of Memorial Hall will be sold on a reserved seat basis at $3.00 each. The balcony will be available to students who will be admitted free of charge.

At the afternoon concert, the orchestra will perform four selections: Mozart's Symphony No. 33 in D major "Prague" K. 504; two nocturnes for orchestra by Debusy; variations for orchestra, opus 30, by Webern; and Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor, opus 120.

The selections for the evening performance are: Richard Strauss Tone Poem, "Don Juan" Opus 20, Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3 in one movement); and Robert Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B-Flat Major, Opus 38.

Skowaczewski has been conductor of the orchestra since 1959. He had formerly been conductor of Poland's Warsaw Philharmonic Orchestra, of the Krakow Philharmonic, the National Philharmonic at Katowice, and the Breslau Philharmonic.

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra is celebrating its 50th anniversary this year. The orchestra is noted as one of the most widely travelled in the United States. While on tour, the orchestra presents some 70 concerts in over 50 cities. It has been called the "Orchestra on Wheels."

Individual tickets, as available, may be purchased at the box office.

Old Rebel's Warning: Peace–Here And Now

White hair rumpled, the distinguished-looking pastor-turned-rebel, Norman Thomas will speak here tomorrow night at in Memorial Hall. The man who can boast the longest, most energetic, completely unsuccessful political life will be speaking as one of the most respected voices in the American political spectrum—ironic in a nation which respects sheer success as much as our does.

As he has done for more than 30 years the Socialist Party leader will be urging disarmament and peace. And thus, he will be talking about something that vitally interests everyone—life.

From the time of his first unsuccessful venture into Presidential elections in 1928, Thomas has been spokesman for the Socialists and other pacifists, referred to by Prof. Gabriel Almond, as "the largest and most influential secular pacifist group" in the United States. From the moment of realization of agonizing and ultimate power, over Hiroshima in 1945, the words of Thomas and others like him have taken new meaning and greater urgency. The "cold war" following World War II and the development of the H-bomb and other more complex, destructive weapons has accelerated what Thomas calls the "race to death" and made general and complete disarmament not just desirable, but absolutely necessary.

Commentator Edward P. Morgan asks if Thomas may not be "the bravest realist of them all?" Thomas himself accepts this role as more realistic-than-thou-in-this age-of-nuclear-destruction — as when he said, in Prerequisites for Peace (1959), "It is the fashion to regard talk of the abolition of war as utopian. At the least it is less utopian than proposals for the limitations of war, in view of the weapons at men's disposals and their attitude toward their use."

The mental "prerequisites" which which Thomas feels are necessary, include abdication of the feeling that the Russians absolutely and without reservation cannot be trusted; a re-evaluation of the United States role in disarmament negotiations and regarding the United Nations; and a general over-hauling of American sentiment toward war itself. Thomas condemns the prevelant U. S. military view that the peace can be kept permanently by a "balance of terror," equal nuclear forces with the Soviet Union, and by a simultaneous strong conventional force able and willing to fight "small," non-nuclear wars (which Thomas contends cannot be kept "small" or non-nuclear.) Into these and other areas of the "peace" controversy (ironic that there should be today a controversy over peace), Thomas will shake his accusing finger and repeat his ever-growing-more-urgent warnings. Big Mamma For Little Women

The Women's Council, that awe-inspiring assemblage of virtuous women who maintain law and order among Carolina's worthy female students, has recently been criticized for its unfairness and inconsistancy regarding the trial and conviction of two coeds who failed to comply with the school's sign-out slip policy for women.

But it would appear that the fault does not lie with the Council as much as it does with the Women's Residence Council, a noble body of esteemed womanhood that makes the rules that the Council must enforce. This group of elite dorm presidents and sorority house managers is theoretically an organ of our beautiful and bureaucratic Student Government, but somehow, they have never been brought under the wing of that noble and autonomous institution. Instead, it has remained a puppet rubber stamp for the Dean of Women's office, which is able to impress upon the coeds an astonishing number of complex and ridiculous rules under the guise of "student self-government."

Of course we must all understand that those sweet young thoughtless things that bless our campus are not capable of taking care of themselves, and that they need stringent rules to protect them from lusty and lecherous males, but why should their rule-makers pretend to be a student government organization?

We have been told, or course, that the Dean of Women merely aids them in drawing up rules and approving action taken by the council. But if this is true, then why is it necessary to give the Dean a virtual veto power in the WRC's Constitution and By-Laws? (The words, "Cooperation with the Dean of Women," "Approval of the Dean of Women," "In conjunction with the Dean of Women," and various other similar phrases appear no less than seven times in these documents.) And just to emphasize the WRC's tete a tete relationship with the Dean of Women's Office, a former WRC Chairman stated in her Woman's Handbook address to incoming coeds that one of the responsibilities of the council was to instill "among all coeds a respect . . . for the kindness and insight of . . . the University administration." Is there not one reasonable intelligent coed on this campus who considers herself capable of making her own decisions? If this sort of hypocrisy and puppetry can be allowed to continue unnoticed, then we must conclude that there is not.

SP And ISP Members Liberal

By MARTIN KRUMING

The open withdrawal from the Student Party (SP) and formation of the Independent Student Party (ISP) by eight legislature members was an event which has stirred up much controversy in UNC political circles.

Since the establishment of the SP in 1938 there has always existed a quality of open forum. Any member, whether he be a liberal or a conservative, a dormitory resident or a fraternity resident, has not only had the opportunity to stand up and say what he felt on an issue, but when he sat down he knew that his opinions had been carefully weighed.

Now the eight ISP members (Bill Bowerman, Charlie Cooper, chairman Dick Ellis, Ann Lupton, Margaret Ann Rhymes, George Rosenthal, Ford Rowan and Bob Smith) never stated that they had been denied the opportunity to voice an opinion. They merely claimed that a tone existed in the SP meetings which seemed to say, "Alright you've said what you wanted to."

But at the SP meeting on February 12 in Carroll Hall the trademark which had typified the party for 25 years reared its head once again. Open forum does exist in the SP.

During the year the eight legislature members have been slowly drifting away from SP activities and as a result a lack of communication gradually evolved between the two groups.

In the Student Legislature (SL) sessions on Thursday night the ISP members noted a great deal of discussion over petty issues by the other SP representatives. But since party chairman Robin Britt is not in the SL he has been unable to co-ordinate the SP activities in legislature.

The SP has been criticized for not living up to its tradition of active programs this year but in order to evaluate this statement one must turn to the records.

Under the direction of Gil Stallings, the SP has undertaken the task of organization a writer in residence program which would bring distinguished literary figures to the campus. During the fall the party sponsored an open house combo party at WC.

Certainly two issues which have been of direct concern to the SP were the election of freshman class president and the Ehringhaus bus report. Both these issues stirred up much political interest on the campus.

To attack both the SP and the recently formed ISP and define it in terms of black and white would be a physical impossibility. Ideologically the two parties favor three similiar aims of a campus party: 1. a party existing for the liberal tradition; 2. a party seeking to defend any encroachment upon the rights of the student; 3. a party that represents the students on campus.

What will be the status of the ISP in the future remains to be seen. But the eight legislators, in a meeting with Britt, promised to cutail any activities for two or three weeks. Reconcilation is a definite possibility but this decision will be left up to each ISP member.

New Republic

Congressional Education Stalemate Worse

The New Republic

White House messages on education grow annually better as their legislative prospects grow worse. At the present rate one may look forward to some radical innovations by 1964, coupled with a Congressional refusal even to discuss, much less enact them.

For the most part the 1963 message reflects a judicious appraisal by the Administration of the needs of the educational system combined with a deliberate refusal to suggest any thorough-going changes, however necessary. For the first time federal aid is all to be used selectively, rather than for general support of state and local educational work. The President has also accepted the notion that teachers' salaries are more inadequate at the top of the scale than at the bottom. He sticks to the principle, opposed by the National Education Association, that it is important to improve secular instruction in church colleges as well as in non-demoninational ones—though unfortunately this principle is not extended to elementary and secondary education.

All of this is to the good. The education-minded will approve helping young people pay their college and graduate school bills, building extra classrooms, improving libraries, expanding educational research and teacher retraining institutes, subsidizing vocational and scientific training, and raising teacher salaries. These things could, perhaps, be done with local and state funds; but since in fact they won't be, it is hard to oppose federal action.

If one were to criticize Mr. Kennedy's presentation to Congress, it would be primarily on political not educational grounds. Congress is today convinced that education bills haven't a chance. When the President submits a group of proposals most of which died in Committee only last year Congressional apathy inevitably grows even greater. Perhaps nothing can be done to invigorate the education spokesmen. But it might have been worth trying a completely new approach, at once simple and dramatic. Suppose the President had focused his attention on a few vital points instead of spreading it over dozens of problems. He might, for instance, have asked for temporary but substantial federal aid to poor school districts, until their tax base grows sufficiently to provide adequate local support; higher top salaries for teachers who have shown distinctive abilities; and a federal guarantee that every high school graduate admitted to college will be guaranteed sufficient loans to graduate.

Such a bill would not have solved all the nation's educational problems, or even most of them. But by pointing to a few easily perceived problems, which anyone with a sense of social justice can see need remedying, might have shifted the grounds of debate and perhaps persuaded vacillating Congressmen that aid to education was more than a process of pouring money into a bottomless pit. Of course it might not have worked; but will the present approach?

Meet 2 Deans, Full Professor

From a new book, "The All-Star College Primer", full of jolly illustrations and notes on the various personages who inhabit the college campus:

Meet the Dean of Students.

He is posting some more regulations.

His job is to help mold students into mature adults who are ready to assume responsibility and leadership in modern society. That line is from his annual orientation speech on "College: A Preparation for Life."

Here's how the dean helps prepare students to fit the modern mold:

By providing advice to the student publications committee in order to save the editors from themselves.

By dropping in on political rallies to give students the benefit of his views.

By joining in student council meetings to guard the council from conflicting with college policies.

Garland the dean's bulletin board with moldy ivy.

* * *

THIS LADY is talking to some of the coeds. Can you guess who the lady is? Or what she is talking to the coeds about?

She is warning them against IT. IT is her big problem. Now do you know who she is?

She is the Dean of Women. IT is her two-letter word for other words used in books that are banned from the college library. She knows the boys have IT on their minds much of the time. That is why IT is on her mind most of the time.

IT is everywhere she looks. Late hours and beer parties can lead to IT. Long weekends and spring vacations in Fort Lauderdale can lead to IT. But if there were no IT for her to contend with she would be out of a job. For job security, IT beats tenure every time.

But you can't color IT because IT is off-color.

* * *

HERE is a Full Professor. He knows everything.

He has accumulated so many lecture notes that they make a textbook. That is his textbook on the table. Stick an expensive price tag on it.

The book is assigned reading at other colleges where the professor has placed his former graduate assistants on the faculty. He prepares a revised edition when the publisher reports that three out of ten students are buying used copies instead of new ones.

A professor spends most of his time at interdepartmental committee meetings and in writing proposals for research grants. These activities are hygienic because they help immunize him from underclassmen. He views too close a contact with them as a threat to his mental health.

If a professor obtains a grant he takes a leave of absense. This is one reason some of the college's courses exist only in the college bulletin. Another reason is that if he doesn't get a grant he goes away anyhow to be a consultant on something somewhere.

When full professors are on be campus they sit up halp the night talking with other full professors about the harebrained malcontents in their departments.

Harebrained malcontents is academese for assistant professors.

Letters To The Editors

On Knowledge And Otelia

Own Ideas– Or Another's?

To The Editors:

Have you fallen prey to this vicious fallacy:

You, of course, realize that none of the ideas you call your own are yours. You have no thoughts which are yours for any of the ideas or thoughts you call your own are based on someone else's ideas. You have been exposed to these ideas you call your own so much that you begin to think they are all yours. You may rearrange the ideas of others, but all of the ideas you call your own are based on someone else's thoughts or ideas. Macroscopicly, you might say you have your own ideas, but, microscopicly, you have no ideas of your own. All of "your" knowledge, therefore, belongs to society which gave it to you.

Anyone who would spread this filth is either the stupid stooge of a vicious destroyer or a vicious destroyer himself. The person who so carefully evaded facts in formulating this monstrosity is not stupid.

At the Founder's Day exercise last spring, Mr. John Fitzgerald Kennedy informed those gathered in Kenan Satdium of his ideas about knowledge —rather than a foreign policy statement, which was expected by newsmen. His ideas were expressed as follows: "And it is my hope, in a changing world, when untold possibilities lie before N. Carolina and, indeed, the entire South and country, that this university will hue to the old line of the responsibility that its graduates owe to the community at large, that in your time, too, you will be willing to give to the state and country a portion of your lives and all of your knowledge and all of your loyalty." And "I ask you to give to the service of our country the critical faculties which society has helped develop in you here."

Is Mr. Kennedy a stooge or a destroyer?

If that which is yours is that which you earn by your own effort, then it is not true that you have no thoughts which are your own if knowledge is something more than photographic or phonographic memorization — even anything more than photographic or phonographic memorization which you gain from someone else's expressions-printed, spoken, or otherwise—or your own experiences is certainly your own. Is understanding merely memorizing? Is thinking nothing but reciting?

If knowledge is something more than photographic or phonographic memorization, no other person or persons can give you knowledge. Even though someone may express his ideas in the simple clarity of a first grader reader, your own thought is still necessary for understanding. Your knowledge belongs to you unless you agree to trade it for a value you choose.

If someone—say, Mr. Kennedy—claims that you owe something he calls society—or "the state and country"—your knowledge in exchange for the other persons thoughts to which you have been exposed, the trade is a fraud and you would be cheated out of the price of your effort which made knowledge out of someone's expressions. Of course, you would not be cheated out of much if you had nothing but memorized data to offer in trade. Do you trade when you will be cheated?

What kind of person would advocate as right an obligation which is a swindle?

If you accept as right this—Mr. Kennedy's—obligation to society but strive to live as an honest trader, what will be the results of your accepting the obligation as the right?

The rotting feeling of guilt—guilt resulting from striving to be honest.

—Kenneth Counts

'Star Of The West!'

To The Editors:

Reflections on Otelia:

Mystic of the Supernatural! Ageless student of history! Seer of all things, real and actual! Self-appointed authority on books and ethics, politics, war, students anld teachers, manners, and more. Scholar of light, your astuteness amazes, so much do you know of people and places. Troubled heart! Such a burden you bear for our salvation, or were you there?

If I knew but one-tenth of what you know, I couldn't move from weight of the load. But somehow you manage to cackle on, O roosterless hen, that you may help to awaken unmarried men, for example, to the evil that is bachelorhood (instead of keeping-up women, as all men should).

Star of the West! Don't cease to expound—in what other places does your wisdom abound? And of course, your doctor is involved psychiatrically, for your letters are probably wonderful therepy. Safer than knitting, I suspect; those metal needles have long sharp tips, like your tongue, albeit dull wit. But that your writing becomes not compulsive, I'm sure there are hobbies less repulsive. And just as much fun, by the way, why not try coloring, or modelclay?

REFLECTIONS

Caesar was lolling in his chair at a table and smoking his pipe . . . K-123 was sitting across from him. He was a scrawny old man who'd done twenty years. He was eating mush. "You're wrong, pal," Caesar was saying . . ." One must say in all objectivity that Eisenstein is a genius. Now isn't 'Ivan the Terrible' a work of genius? The 'orprichniki' dancing in masks! The scene in the Cathedral!" "All show-off!" K-123 snapped. "Too much art is no art at all . . ." "But what other treatment of the subject would have been let through . . .?" "Ha! Let through, you say? Then don't call him a genius! Call him a toady, say he carried out orders like a dog. A genius doesn't adapt his treatment to the taste of tyrants!" . . . "But listen! It's not what but how that matters in art." K-123 jumped up and banged his fist on the table. "No! Your how can go to hell if it doesn't raise the right feelings in me!"

Journalism Alum To Publish Book

Gene Roberts Jr., a 1954 UNC journalism graduate and present Sunday editor of the Raleigh News and Observer is co-author of a book to be published Feb. 25th by Little, Brown and Co. of Boston.

The book, which is the first comprehensive discussion of schoolbook censorship in the United States, was written by Roberts and Jack Nelson, a Pulitzer-Prize-winning reporter for the Atlanta Constitution, while the two were at Harvard University in 1961-62 as Nieman Fellows in Journalism.

After a study of schoolbook censorship which took them to New York, Connecticut, Washington, D. C., Texas and other parts of the United States, the authors conclude that American textbook publishers are "under heavy pressure to make their texts conform to the dictates of pressure groups."

"Under pressure from censorship groups in Texas and California, some textbook publisher deleted passages from their texts in order to win state permission to sell their books there," say Nelson and Roberts. "And the altered and censored texts are now being used by school children in most of the nation's states."

Issue in the current censorship campaigns, Roberts and Nelson say, "is whether textbooks are to be shaped by pressure groups or by scholars seeking to supply the most accurate information available."

The Roberts-Nelson books says that "organized attacks by pressure groups on the textbooks and library books in our schools have lifted from the shelves such authors as Thomas Mann, Thomas Wolfe, Henry Steele Commager, McKinlay Kantor, Shakespeare, Theodore White and Margaret Mead."

AED RUSH

Alpha Epsilon Delta, national honor society for pre-medical and predental students, will hold rush meetings on Thursday, Feb. 21 and Thursday, Mar. 7 at 7:30 p.m. in Room 226 of the UNC Medical School.

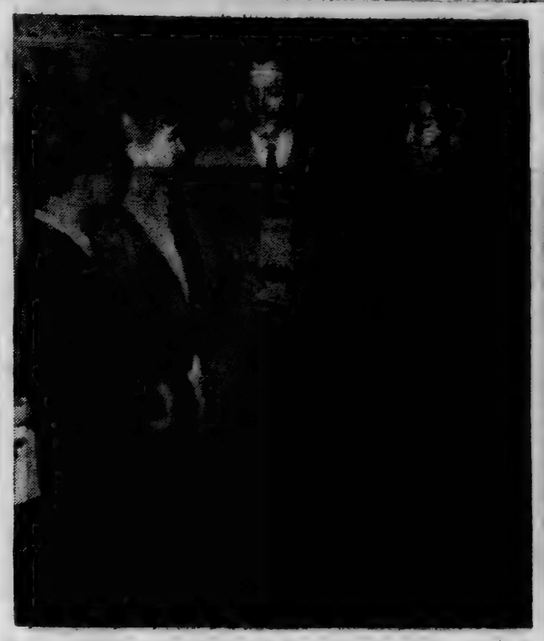
Cadets Hear Col. Greene Give Talk



LeRoy V. Green, a retired U.S. Army Colonel and father of two UNC AFROTC cadet officers addressed the UNC Cadet Corps Thursday on the idea that challenge is an integral part of leadership.

Col. Greene, is the father of Cadet Lt. Col. Bruce Greene and Cadet Duff Greene. Bruce is the Cadet Group Commander, while Duff is the Operations Officer of the Group.

Col. Greene told the group that officers, managers, and all other leaders are responsible for "upholding the diginity of man through the fulfillment of the challenges which they face." The same basic rules apply to both military and civilian leadership, he said.

He challenged the cadets to decide "how bad you desire a goal." He concluded, "Keep goals before you, but keep within you the aspect of attainability of those goals."

Col. Greene is the author of three books, the latest of which is SHELTER OF HIS EXCELLENCY, a history of 100 governors of Pennsylvania. He was nominated for a Pulitzer Prize for Journalism in 1936 while writing for the Philadelphia PUBLIC LEDGER. He is currently Senior Field Service Officer for Post Offices in North Carolina on duty in Greensboro.

Athletics Open Military Week

Daily athletic contests between campus ROTC units will begin tomorrow as the first "UNC Military Week" gets under way. The joint Air Force and Naval ROTC week, which is sponsored by the UNC chapter of the honorary organization, the National Society of Scabbard and Blade, will include five days of athletic competition and skill-testing.

The highlight of the week will be the crowning of a queen at the annual Military Ball Saturday night in a "black tie" affair at the Durham Elks Club.

A trophy will be presented at the ball to the ROTC unit compiling the most points in the athletic contests of the week. Teams have been organized in both units for each of the sports events with point totals of all five of the contests will determine the trophy winning unit.

Handball will lead off the competition Monday night at 8:15 in Woollen Gym with basketball being Tuesday's event. Physical fitness tests will be held on a competitive basis Wednesday. Five-to-seven men from each unit will be tested on pull-ups, push-ups, sit-ups, squat-thrusts, and a 300-yard shuttle run.

Two days of volleyball will conclude the athletic events. The Cadets and Midshipmen will compete Thursday, with a featured battle between the Air Force and Naval staffs scheduled for Friday afternoon.

Mrs. Hansen Urges Bigger Women Role

The challenges which face women of America are not peculiarly women's problems but problems of all humanity, according to Congresswoman Julia Butler Hansen (D-Wash.) who spoke yesterday afternoon at the eight annual "Spotlight on Women" conference meeting here.

Mrs. Hansen said that women must contribute to the health of the American economy through their labor and their consumption.

Women must help meet social problems created by the rapidly increasing population and the automation of industries, according to Mrs. Hansen. She said that women must meet the problems of an economy devoted to large arms production and a defense posture committed to use of nuclear weapons in war.

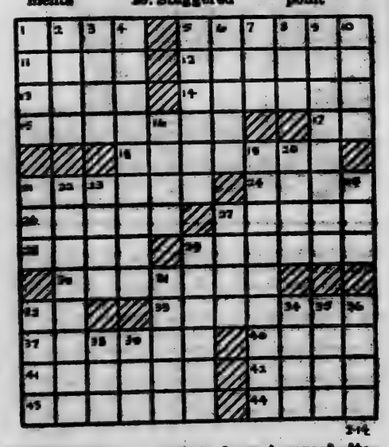
Women must join in shaping American foreign policy and carrying it to people of other nations, according to Mrs. Hansen.

"It has been proven by scores of individual women that no field of activity is, of itself, foreign to women," said Mrs. Hansen. She said that women have entered every profession and have taken their place in government at all levels, proving their competence and helping sweep away prejudice and discrimination.

Mrs. Hansen said that the rapidity of women's achievement to independence, which has taken place largely since 1920, has not given society a chance to adjust.

"There has not yet been time for appropriate roles to be developed for women, and appropriate attitudes shaped," said Mrs. Hansen. She said that many women themselves feel inadequate to take responsibilities in fields traditionally considered male domains.

Citing the prediction that there will be 30 million women in the work force in 1970, Mrs. Hansen said that much has been achieved thus far in labor legislation to set minimum wages, maximum hours, and to eliminate dangerous and exhausting conditions.



The achievement of equal pay for equal work still must be accomplished at the national level as well as in over half the states, according to Mrs. Hansen.

Education is the keystone to meeting today's challenges, according to Mrs. Hansen. She said that women must avail themselves of opportunities for higher education, vocational training, retraining to replace outmoded skills and learn the new technology.

1. I'll tell you what you have to look for in a job. You have to look for fringe benefits. That's the big thing today.

Yes—the big thing.

2. You have to consider your needs. You're going to get married some day, aren't you? Then you need life and accident insurance.

3. You're going to have kids—so you'll want maternity benefits.

I'd like lots of children.

4. And what about medical bills? That's something every big family has to think about. You need a good major medical plan that covers almost everything.

5. And you're not going to want to work all your life, are you? You're going to want to take it easy—you know, travel around, live it up. So you need a retirement plan that guarantees you plenty of dough.

I can see it now.

6. That's why I say you have to look at the fringe benefits when you look for a job.

But don't you also have to look for interesting work, good income, the chance for advancement?

7. You sure do. That's why I'm going to work for Equitable. You get all those job advantages—and all the fringe benefits, too.

I admire your thinking.

THE CURSE OF THE CAMPUS: NO. 1

Hate me if you will, but I must speak. We college types are far too complacent. Sure, we've got plenty to be proud of. We've got atom smashers, we've got graduate schools, we've got new peaks in scholarship, new highs in academic honors. And yet, in the midst of these triumphs, we have failed dismally to make any progress in solving the oldest and most horrendous of all campus problems: we're still got roommates.

To be sure, all roommates are not bad. There is the well-documented case of Hilquit Glebe, a student at the Manhattan College of Agriculture, majoring in curds and whey, who admitted publicly that he actually liked his roommate—an odd admission when you consider that this roommate, Mervis Trunz by name, was frankly not too winsome a fellow. He practiced his tympani in his room, he kept an alligator, and he collected airplane tires.

But, on the other hand, Mervis bought two packs of Marlboro Cigarettes every day and gave one of them to Hilquit and—I ask you—who can stay mad at a man who gives you Marlboro Cigarettes? Who, upon tasting that flavorful blend of Marlboro tobaccos, upon drawing through that pure white Marlboro filter, upon exulting in this best of all possible cigarettes, Marlboro—who, I say, can harden his heart against his neighbor? Certainly not Hilquit. Certainly not I. Certainly not you, as you will find when you scurry to your nearest tobacconist and buy a supply. Marlboros come in soft pack or Flip-Top Box. Tobacconists come in small, medium, and large.

Today Molly is Perkins off her debt...

But I digress. Roommates, I say, are still with us and I fear they always will be, so we better learn how to get along with them. It can be done, you know. Take, for instance, the classic case of Dolly Pitcher and Molly Madison.

Dolly and Molly, roommates at a prominent Midwestern girls' school (Vassar) had a problem that seemed insoluble. Dolly could only study late at night, and Molly could not stay awake past nine o'clock. If Dolly kept the lights on, the room was too bright for Molly to sleep. If Molly turned the lights off, the room was too dark for Dolly to study. What to do?

Well sir, those two intelligent American kids found an answer. They got a miner's cap for Dolly! Thus, she had enough light to study by, and still the room was dark enough for Molly to sleep.

It must be admitted, however, that this solution, ingenious as it was, had some unexpected sequelae. Dolly got so enchanted with her miner's cap that she switched her major from 18th Century poetry to mining and metallurgy. Shortly after graduation she had what appeared to be a great stroke of luck: while out prospecting, she discovered what is without question the world's largest feldspar mine. This might have made Dolly very rich except that nobody, alas, has yet discovered a use for feldspar. Today Dolly, a broken woman, squeezes out a meager living making echoes for tourists in Mammoth Cave.

Now has Molly fared conspicuously better. Once Dolly got the miner's hat, Molly was able to catch up on her long-lost sleep. She woke after eight days, refreshed and vigorous—more vigorous, alas, than she realized. It was the afternoon of the annual Dean's tea. Molly stood in line with her classmates, waiting to shake the Dean's hand. At last her turn came, and Molly, full of strength and health, gave the Dean a firm handshake—so firm, indeed, that all five of the Dean's knuckles were permanently fused.

The Dean sued for a million dollars, and, of course, won. Today Molly, a broken woman, is paying off her debt by washing the Dean's cat every afternoon for ten cents an hour.

• • •

We, the makers of Marlboro and the sponsors of this column, will not attempt to expertize about roommates. But we will tell you about a great pocket or purse mate—Marlboro Cigarettes. They believe, they delve, they compound always.

Tar Heels Beat Clemson 79-63 In Late Game

Lead All The Way

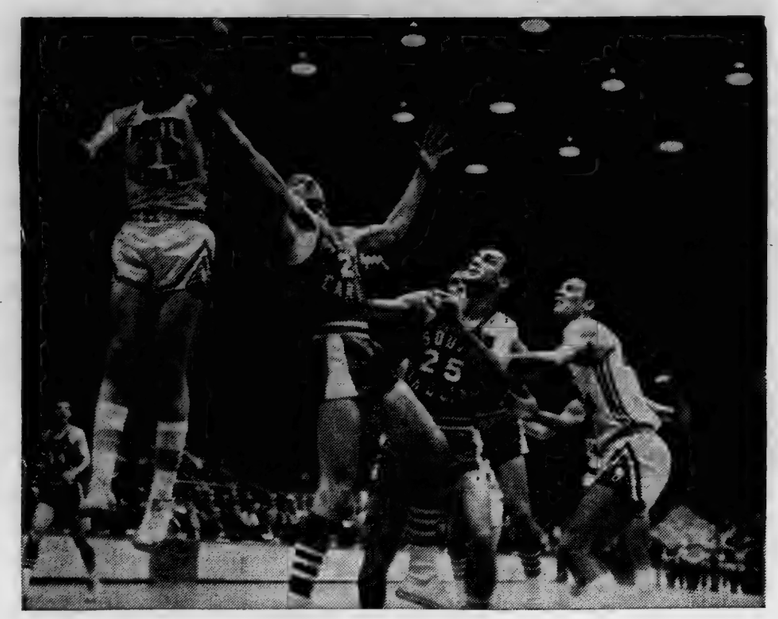
By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina led Clemson at the half of last night's game in Charlotte, 38-20. The late starting time of the second game meant that the UNC contest was too late for the DTH deadline. Tuesday's issue will carry full details of the game.

CHARLOTTE

South Carolina blew a nine point lead with less than five minutes to go, but came back in the second overtime here Saturday night to upset N. C. State, 70-68, in the first game of the North-South doubleheader.

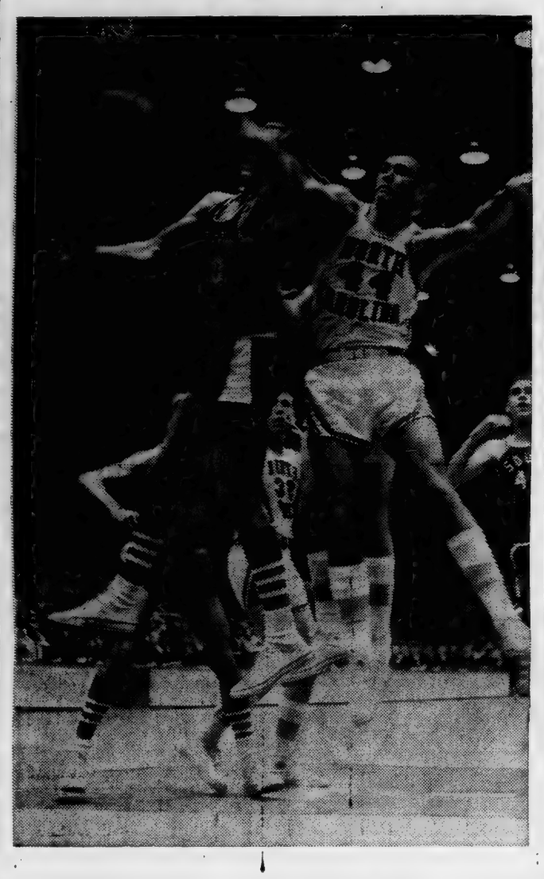
The gamecocks of Coach Chuck Noe, who carried only a 2-9 conference record into the contest, led by one point at halftime and through most of the second period.



Jim Whitfield had two chances from the foul line with four seconds on the clock and his team behind by one point. He missed the first but made the second to throw the game into overtime. The score at the end of regulation play was 56-56.

After both teams had scored four points in the first of two overtimes, South Carolina held the ball for one shot. But star guard Scotti Ward missed a jump shot from the key and the game had to go another extra period.

After the team had matched baskets, the Gamecocks scored eight points while State was scoring two.



With the score tied at 62-62, Jimmy Collins hit on a field goal and Bill Yarbrough sank two free throws. Tim Sinnock pulled State within two, but Yarborough then hit four straight times from the foul line. Ken Rohloff and Sinnock's baskets were too late for State to catch up again.

Ron Collins, the sharp shooting forward hit on thirteen of nineteen field goals and scored 27 points. Yarborough had twenty and Jim Collins scored two. Rohloff was high for State with 22 and Sinnock had 16.

Hearn Leads Baseballers' Golf Tourney

MIAMI (UPI) — Former Giant pitcher Jim Hearn, the 1960 winner, shot a three-over-par 38-35-73 Saturday for a 223 total and a four-stroke lead going into the final round of the 23rd annual Baseball Players Golf Tournament.

Hearn, driving straight and long, took a four-shot lead over Giant Manager Alvin Dark, the defending champion; Los Angeles Angel outfielder Albie Pearson and Red Sox Coach Billy Herman.

Dark, four-time champion, shot a 78 as rain pelted the par 35-35-70 Miami Springs Golf Club course. Herman had a 75 and Pearson a 76 for their three-way tie at 227.

Augie Bergame, former Cardinal infield, shot a 75 for a 220 total which was the best in the tourney but, having been out of the major leagues more than five years, was not eligible for the ballplayers title.

Birdie Tebbetts of the Cleveland Indians, who started the third round at 161, quit after nine holes and Ernie Logan of the Pittsburgh Pirates finished his round rather ruefully.

Logan fell into a creek crossing the fairway while trying to play a shot on the 17th hole.

Jim Piersall of the Washington Senators, one of baseball's eccentrics, contributed to the dampened hilarity by remarking to Tebbetts:

"You should hope that the Cleveland newspaper strike had continued all season because it is the only chance you had to manager the club all by yourself."

Piersall, the laughing boy of baseball, wound up with an 83 for 36.

Yankees Sign Whitey Ford For $47,000

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (UPI) —Whitey Ford, who won 17 games for the New York Yankees last year but had trouble finishing what he's started, signed Saturday for 1963 for a "token" $2,000 raise.

Ford's slight boost put him at the $47,000 salary mark as he prepares for his 12th season with the Yankees.

The veteran southpaw, 34, boasts the best won-lost percentage, .711, and the best lifetime earned run average, 2.78, among veteran pitchers now active in the major leagues. And his 1962 was 17 wins and 8 loses.

But Ford was able to finish only seven of the 38 games he started, and lacked his customary World Series brilliance in the classic against San Francisco.

Yankee General Manager Ray Hamey, who announced Ford's signing, Saturday listed pitchers Ralph Terry and Bill Stafford and sluggers Mickey Mantle and Roger Maris as the leading players still unsigned. However, Hamey said, "I expect no trouble whatsoever in getting any of them signed."

Girls Lose, 72-0

LEXINGTON (UPI)—The girls' basketball team of Pilot School has wound up its 1962-63 basketball schedule.

Winless all season, Pilot was shut out 72-0 Friday night by the Davis-Townsend girls' team. Earlier in the year the girls from Davis-Townsend defeated Pilot 70-2.

Fighting Irish Defeat Navy

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (UPI)—Co-Captain John Andreoli pumped in 24 points Saturday to lead Notre Dame to a 68-56 victory over Navy.

The tall Irish commanded the backboards throughout and took the lead early in the first half. Notr Dame steadily pulled away, leading 33-24 at the intermission.

Notre Dame's other co-captain, John Matthews, had 13 points. Ron Terwilliger, the Navy captain, paced the Middies with 15 points.

Notre Dame made only 38 per cent of its 76 field goal attempts but the cold-shooting midshipmen could hit only 31 per cent of 70 tries.

Big Walt Sahm paced the Irish rebounders with 19. Larry Jesewitz and Jay Miller each grabbed 16 rebounds for Notre Dame, which out-rebounded Navy 75-43.

Trackmen Romp To Victory

By LASZLO BIRINYI JR.

Carolina's track and field team completely dominated yesterday's Carolina Invitational Track Meet by scoring 64 points as compared to runner-up Duke's total of 31. State College finished third with 24, Davidson was fourth with 14 points, and Wake Forest was fifth with 8 points.

The Tar Heels scored a total of 9 firsts and four seconds. Duke had only one first, Dick Gesswin in the shot who heaved the iron ball 56'1".

Stuart Corn of State got his team off to a good start by winning the pole vault and the broad jump. Carolina's vaulting entry, Heath Whittle, was unable to participate because of a conflicting exam.

But Carolina soon made up its deficit and went ahead on its showing in the shot, hurdles and high jump. William Graham and William Hunter finished second and third in the shot and Jim Brown scored victories in both the hurdling events.

Brown, who was not on the preseason roster, turned in an excellent time in the 70 yard high hurdles when he covered the distance in 7.9 seconds.

In the high jump, Tom Clark continued his winning ways by soaring to 6'4".

Dave Turner of Davidson won the 60-yard dash while Carolina's John McNinch finished a strong third.

But once again, as in the past, Carolina's heaviest point contributors were the middle and long distance runners. They scored their first victory in the 2-mile relay when Obie Whichard, Lloyd Roghelia, Art Maillet, and Jerry Stuver combined to beat runner-up Duke by 20 yards.

In the mile run, Charlie Little completely dominated Duke's Louis Van Dyck. This race, which was to be the highlight of the meet, was no contest as Little opened a three yard lead on the first lap which gradually widened to 10, the margin by which Little won.

Van Dyck, the ACC cross-country runner-up, tried valiantly to close the gap, but Little, running in his silk smooth stride, proved too strong for the Blue Devil ace.

Bob Hart and Maurice McDonald finished one-two in the next race, the 440. Hart opened a small lead at the beginning of the race but slowed down to wait for his teammate. This race was the clincher and Duke was eliminated from any chance of winning the meet.

In the 880, Jerry Stuver captured first for the Tar Heels. Stuver was never in serious trouble and won going away with the good time of 1:58.7.

Carmine Lunetta won the day's last individual race, the two mile, in the excellent time of 9 minutes 24 seconds. Art Maillet finished a distant second to the senior distance ace for the second week in a row.

The last race, the 8-lap relay was the high point of the meet. Larry Henry, UNC's lead off man, stumbled at the first turn and was unable to make up the ten yards he had lost. But Jerry Stuver put on a tremendous performance as he not only recaptured the last yardage but handed the baton to Hart with a ten yard lead. Hart then put on a tremendous burst of speed and gave anchor man Maurice McDonald a lead of 50 yards. McDonald held the lead to give the Tar Heels their last victory of the day.

Assistant Coach Joe Hilton said, "Over-all it was a real good meet and the performances were very good. The times are being lowered and distances lengthened every meet and we are looking forward to new records in many events."

Barbara Jean Parks of Lexington, Carolyn Marie Pinion of Arlington, Va., Shelby Delaine Purser of Davidson, Kathryn Moore Taylor of Roanoke Rapids and Susan Holly Woodward of Fredericksburg, Va.

Limited to two per cent of the coed student body, Valkyries corresponds to the Order of the Golden Fleece, the highest men's honorary. It was founded in 1941 when it replaced Alpha Kappa Gamma, national women's honorary society. Members are recognized for character, leadership, scholarship and service.

Current active members are Judy Clark, Susan Crow, Brooks Garnett, Bev Haynes, Julia Latane, Ann Lupton, Jan McColsky, Meredith Patton, Margaret Ann Rhymes, Beth Walker and Jean Yoder.

Citations read as follows:

MRS. DARITY . . . "one whose life is lived beyond our modern mental barriers, whose vitality will not be curbed. Mrs. Darity's work has been motivated by the ideals of human rights and world peace, and to this work she has brought her personal warmth and patient understanding. For two years, Mrs. Darity has been a valuable addition to the community as a teacher, as a board member of the Chapel Hill Pre-School, as a participant in the adult-education program and in other University and community organizations. Her life and work express her tolerant perserverence against those customs and beliefs which stifle human potential."

* * *

MISS BAILEY . . . "one who has superbly fulfilled her responsibilities as a student by maintaining a high caliber of academic achievement and by service to the University as President of the YWCA. Miss Bailey approaches each task with enthusiasm, organizational ability and dedication, which make her a respected and constructive influence upon the campus and her associates."

* * *

MISS DAVIS . . . "one who as dormitory president has risen above the expected. By bringing a contagious enthusiasm, strength and understanding to her administrative positions, she has created a new unity in her dormitory. At the same time, she has maintained a superior scholastic average.

* * *

MISS FARR . . . "one who is recognized for her tireless work on the orientation committee and for her dedication and service as Attorney General, feeling both loyalty and understanding for the student and the University. Her qualities of character, loyalty and willingness to help make her an outstanding leader and a sincere friend."

* * *

MISS PARKS . . . "one who has been undaunted by adverse situations in her tireless and unselfish efforts to enter the profession of medicine. Miss Parks has exhibited par-excellence in her acadamic endeavor and was chosen recipient of a National Institute of Health fellowship."

* * *

MISS PINION . . . one whose dedication to her profession of nursing and whose performance as a member of the Women's Council reflect the fearless strength of her personal convictions blended with a sense of compassion and perceptive insight. She has exerted leadership and determined initiative in developing a program to unify the enforcement of social regulations for dormitory and sorority women."

* * *

MISS PURSER . . . "one who has exerted creative leadership in molding an effective and enthusiastic Carolina Women's Council that has gained campus-wide respect for its accomplishments. Her consciencious service as a dormitory officer, her active participation in Wesley Foundation, as well as Miss Purser's individual qualities of integrity, courage and concern have made her a vital personality in campus life.

* * *

MISS TAYLOR . . . "one who has carried out the responsibilities given her by the Women's Council, the Women's Orientation Committee and her sorority with consciencousness and sound judgment, gaining the respect of all who have worked with her."

* * *

MISS WOODWARD . . . "One whose concern for intellectual growth has gained her the respect of both members of the faculty and fellow students. In organizing activities for students from other countries at this University and in promoting opportunities for American students to attend universities of other countries, she has demonstrated the qualities of creative leadership and initiative.

Brazil Ships Set To Meet Pirate Craft

By United Press International

Brazilian warships steamed toward a rendezvous with the pirate ship Anzeategui Monday night at an isolated anchorage off Brazil's lonely north coast.

The Venezuelan Communists who hijacked the freighter in the Caribbean last Wednesday agreed to surrender her to Brazil in exchange for political asylum.

The ship was reported "dead in the water" off Maraca Island, about a mile and a half off the Brazilian mainland, halfway between French Guiana and the mouth of the Amazon.

U. S. Navy patrol planes which first located the fleeing freighter over the weekend, and have kept it under constant observation since, ended their aerial vigilance after confirming it was in Brazilian territorial waters.

Two Venezuelan destroyers chasing the Anzeategui for the past four days appeared to have little chance of reaching her anchorage prior to the arrival of Brazilian warships.

The navy ministry said the Venezuelan destroyer Nueva Sparta had asked authority to enter Bolem to await the expected arrival of the Anzeategue. The request was granted as the Nueva Sparta pledged to observe Brazilian neutrality.

Hijackers Apparently Safe

The Brazilian anchorage and that country's offer of political asylum appeared to make the ship safe from capture.

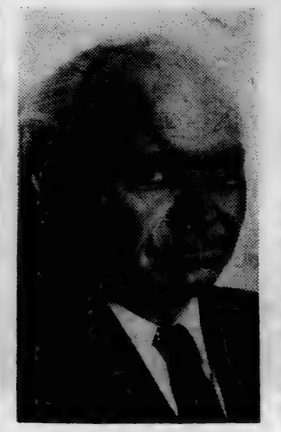
A Pentagon spokesman disclosed that the U. S. Navy used about a dozen ships and two dozen planes in the long search for the hijacked vessel.

Enrollment Down 409 From Fall

A spring enrollment of 9,295 students, a decrease of 409 students from the fall semester figure of 9,604, was announced yesterday by the UNC Office of Records and Registration.

The spring figure includes 6,726 undergraduates, 1,802 graduate students and 767 post bacculareate professors.

Undergraduate enrollment decreased by 209 students with the sophomore class showing the biggest drop, 230, and the junior class the biggest increase, 161. The freshman class dropped by 24 students while the senior class decreased by 102 students.



Broken down into classes the spring figures show that there now are 1,702 freshman; 1,486 sophomores; 2.047 juniors; 1,353 seniors; 138 special students, for a total of 5,219 males and 1,507 females. Also on the undergraduate level there are 2,961 students in the General College; 2,095 in the College of Arts and Sciences; 526 in Business Administration; 485 in Education; 61 in Journalism; and 11 in Library Science.

On the graduate level there are 1,205 in the College of Arts and Sciences; 76 in Business Administration; 127 in Education; 5 in Journalism; 60 in Library Science; 324 in Law School; 68 in Social Work. Also there now are 587 undergraduate students in the Division of Health Affairs along with 231 in the graduate school.

News Correspondent Is Featured Speaker For Model Assembly

EDWARD P. MORGAN

WILLIAM JORDAN

Morgan Talks Thursday PM In Memorial

Edward P. Morgan, award winning ABC news correspondent, and William M. Jordan, U. N. Director of the Political Affairs Division, will be the principal speakers when the model United Nations General Assembly for the Middle South meets here this Wednesday thru Saturday.

Morgan will speak in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. on Thursday to an open assembly of delegates, students and towaspeople. Jordan will be the principal speaker at a luncheon banquet on the same day.

Morgan has been reporting news throughout the world for more than 20 years. He has won many awards for his outstanding news coverage, amoung them a citation from the Overseas Press Club for his coverage of the Geneva Summit Conference.

His radio program, "Edward P. Morgan and the News", has received the Peabody Award for the outstanding radio program in 1956 and was cited by the National Education Association for Better Radio and TV as the outstanding radio program of 1961.

Jordan has been a member of the U. N. Secretarial since the establishment of the United Nations in 1946. A citizen of the United Kingdom, he has received distinction as a historian of twentieth century diplomacy.

Appointed to attend the San Francisco Conference which formulated the UN, Jordan was actively involved making arrangements for the first meetings of the Security Council. He served for ten years as Chief of the Pacific Settlements Section before assuming his present duties.

Other speakers in the program include Dr. George Taylor, associate professor of history at UNC. He will speak to an open assembly on Friday at 8 p.m. on "Moral and Psychological Aspects of the World Peace Problems."

Three-hundred students from 50 colleges and universities are expected to attend the three-day assembly, which is sponsored by the Collegiate Council for the United Nations (CCUN) and the UNC YMCA.

"We hope to make the workings of the UN known to college students and to awaken more international conscienceness," said Hugo Spechar, secretary-general of the assembly. Spechar, born in Santa Cruz, Bolivia, is in the honors program in economics at UNC.

In addition to Morgan's address, the majority of the Mock UN meetings will be open to the general public.

Indonesia Fears 'Americanization' Of Its Students

JAKARTA, Indonesia (UPI)—A high school student exchange program between Indonesia and the United States has been suspended, presumably because Indonesian youngsters were becoming "too Americanized," it was learned Monday.

The Indonesian government has advised the American Field Service there will be no program in 1963. The service is a private people-to-people program in which foreign nationals spend a year in the United States going to school and living with American families.

Currently, there are 82 Indonesian students finishing studies in the United States under the field service program.

Phi Mu Alpha Begins Rush This Week

By R. LEE FERRELL

"You don't have to be an expert musician to be in Phi Mu Alpha," said President Ron Friedman.

"We simply want men interested in music and willing to work."

Alpha Rho chapter of Phi Mu Alpha, "number one in the nation," will hold rush February 18, 19 and 20, at 7:30 p.m. in Hill Hall.

Alpha Rho was named "most outstanding chapter in the nation" by the National Executive Board. This award is given to one of more than 200 chapters.

It is the highest honor a chapter can receive.

"We don't want to miss anyone intersted in music," said Bob Smith, rush chairman.

Purposes of the fraternity are to advance the cause of music in America; to foster the mutual welfare and brotherhood of students of music; to develop the truest fraternal spirit among its members; to encourage loyalty to the Alma Mater.

Outstanding alumni include Van Cliburn, Stan Kenton, Andy Griffith, Roger Williams, Mitch Miller, and Thomas E. Dewey.

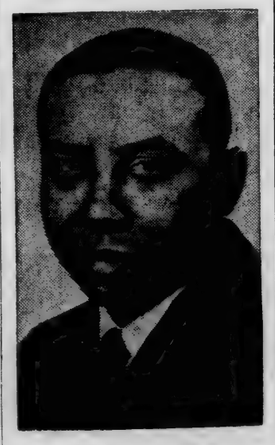
The National Executive Board cited Alpha Rho for its outstanding activities, especially the establishment of the James Michael Barham Scholarship last year.

Alpha Rho sponsored the United States Navy Band Concert last spring, and "Navy Band Day" was proclaimed by Gov. Terry Sanford.

Josh White will be presented March 29 in the fraternity's '63 spring concert.

McKissick To Talk Before SP Meeting

Floyd McKissick, the first Negro to gain entrance into UNC and the first Negro lawyer in Durham, will speak to the Student Party tonight at 8 on "Civil Rights in North Carolina." Non-party members are invited.



McKissick is a leader in Civil Rights who spoke last spring at the Carolina Symposium.

McKissick's philosophies on civil rights are that: "The Negro has received only a token integration in the South. If we wait for integration to come to the South it will never come. Southerners don't usually do things voluntarily."

He advocates stronger effort on part of the Negro, not only for more rights, but in preparing himself through education and self improvement.

"The Negro has the right to vote. Whether he takes a bath or not has nothing to do with his right to vote. He can be blind, crippled and carry a switch blade but he still has the right to vote," McKissick says.

Proposed amendments to the SP bylaws and the oncoming membership drive will also be discussed during the regular party meeting.

Frats In IDC —Debate Topic

The Di-Phi Literary society tonight will debate a resolution advocating the right of all dormitory residents to hold an office in the IDC.

The Di-Phi, in selecting this resolution, felt that any dormitory resident who pays both board and social fees should have access to positions of leadership in the system of dormitory government.

Although dormitory residents with fraternity affiliation have been excluded from such opportunities in the past, the Di-Phi members who propose the resolution note that many have still participated actively in dorm affairs.

The debate will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Di Hall on the third floor of New West. Nominations for the officers of the spring session will also be held.

FLU SHOTS

Flu shots are being given at the Infirmary from 9-11:30 and 2-5 p.m. Monday-Friday.

Sneed Resigns As Assistant UP Chairman

Vice Chairman of the University Party Al Sneed has resigned his position because of "a very heavy academic load."

Sneed, a physics major, is a Morehead scholar and a member of the NROTC program.

Party Chairman Mike Chanin said, "Sneed's resignation is a great disappointment to me. We had worked well together during the fall elections and I was counting on his experience to help us this spring."

A new Vice-Chairman will be elected at the next scheduled party meeting, Tuesday, Feb. 26, to be held in Carroll Hall beginning at 8 p.m. Anyone interested in seeking the Vice-Chairmanship should see Chanin sometime during the week.

First Southern Human Relations Meet To Be Held In Chapel Hill During May

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, chief consul for the NAACP and lawyer for James Meredith and Harvey Gantt, will be one of four key-note speakers at the first All South Relations Youth Conference to be held in Chapel Hill May 2-5.

The meeting, which is the first of its kind in the south, will be sponsored by the United States Young Adult Council, co-ordinator for 28 youth groups in the U. S. such as the YM-YWCA, NSA, and the 4-H.

The conference, built on the theme of "The South into the Mainstream," is expected to draw 150 delegates from schools, unions and religious organizations below the Mason-Dixon Line.

Judd Johnson, president of the Young Adults Council, said recently that "North Carolina was selected as the meeting place for the delegates because it has made outstanding progress in the field of human relations. Our hope is to expose those delegates from the segregated areas of the south to the advances made in North Carolina."

Mrs. Motley will speak on "The Constitution and Human Rights." Other addresses will be:

Dr. J. Clayton Feaver (Prof. of Philosophy at Oklahoma University) on "A Philosophical Analysis of the Term Human Relations";

Dr. Richard Bardolph, chairman of the Dept. of History at Women's College, on "The History of Human Relations in the South; and

Rev. Will Campbell, associated with the National Council of Churches, on the "Role of the Church in the Changing South."

The conference will be organized into werkshops which will deal with the economic, political, international, educational and religious aspects of human relations in the south.

UNC hosts for the conference will be the YMCA Human Relations Committee and the NSA.

THE MUSIC MAKERS—The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra went through their repertoire before a 3/4 capacity audience in Memorial Hall Sunday afternoon. Shown above are two scenes from the Orchestra's rendition of Richard Strauss' "Don Juan." The appearance of the orchestra was sponsored jointly by the Chapel Hill Concert Series and Graham Memorial.

Toronto Exchange

Canadians Bernice Eden and Jo Ann Noyes smile the Toronto equivalent of "Hi Ya'll" as they welcome the 28 Tar Heel vistors to the University of Toronto. The UNC group journeyed north over the semester break, returning the visit the Canadians made in November to Chapel Hill. Sponsored by the student governments of both schools, the program was the fourth annual exchange between the schools. Taveling by chartered bus, the Carolinians spent four days in Toronto.

O'Keefe Center: Canadian 'Beer Hall' Extraordinaire

The O'Keefe Center for the Performing Arts is Toronto's exemplary answer to the Lincoln Center and Washington's proposed National Cultural Center. Built by the O'Keefe Brewing Co., one of Canada's most respected and flourishing industries, the 12½ million dollar structure served as a somewhat ironic setting for our discussion of "Capitalism vs. Socialism."

As the central building of a planned cultural complex patterned after New York's Rockefeller Center, the O'Keefe Center is an excellent example of contemporary architecture at its best and worst. The hopelessly modern and basically bland concrete exterior belies a magnificent interior, tastefully executed in every detail.

The spacious entrance lobby, lined with panels of Italian marble, is carpeted from wall to wall in pale green wool as is the entire building. The elegant staircases, also of marble, are set-off by bronze railings and fittings. A large mural over the entrance doors serves as the focal point of the lobby. Its subject is culture and its widely ranging motifs deal with the performing arts, painting, sculpture, architecture, and literature. Its massive scope, unique symbolic expression, and pleasing colors render it an aesthetic masterpiece.

The auditorium, while of a highly functional nature, is tastefully designed. The walls are composed of panels of mellowed wood which may be moved for acoustical tuning. The stage is enormous, allowing for a great deal of flexibility in its use and facilitating backstage operations.

Following our discussion and a tour of the Center, we were entertained by the O'Keefe Company in a large reception room-art gallery which reflected the elegance and carefully executed detail which characterized the entire building. Sitting in such tasteful surroundings, in comfortable proximity to a bountiful sampling of our patron's favorite product, one could not help but reflect upon what responsible private enterprise is capable of achieving. While publicity was undoubtedly an underlying motive, the O'Keefe Center must be praised as a notable contribution to the Canadian public. Certainly the fact that the Company recognized that the Toronto students were among their best customers and fully cooperated in extending a warm reception to their Southern guests stood in sharp contrast to the totally mercenary attitude of most of our own local entrepreneurs.

Nuclear Arms And Canada

The lead editorial in the February 2 Toronto Telegram urged against a "Hate America" election campaign. On the other side of the page a cartoon depicted an angry Royal Canadian Mountie pointing his finger across that longest undefended border at a cigar-puffing U. S. Customs inspector and shouting, "Remember 1812?"

"It would be a sad mistake," The Toronto Daily Star counseled that same day, "to make anti-Americanism a prime issue in the next federal election campaign." Its cartoonist, the highly regarded Macpherson, had drawn a cigar-puffing U. S. Pentagon official pushing a bomb detonator. A missile with maple leaf insignia and a bird's nest in its cone remained stationary, while next to it a caricature of Prime Minister John Diefenbaker was blasting off.

The contrast between the more thoughtful editorial reflections and the instinctive emotional appeal of the cartoons is an excellent illustration of the ambivalence and confusion in Canada on both the arms controversy in particular and the entire problem of Canadian nationalism in general. The combination of domestic political concern, diplomatic uneasiness, a difficult strategic problem, and brooding nationalistic feelings makes it difficult for anyone (Canadian or American) to obtain a clear picture of what is going on. Sharp differences of opinion among our co-Canadians and lively campus discussion in general make our impressions even more disjointed; however, certain elements in the controversy seem clear.

Although many Canadians may not yet have reached a personal decision on the advisability of accepting nuclear arms, few admire Mr. Diefenbaker's vacillation and lack of leadership on this complex issue. "Thiefenfaker" is a popular student epithet, and the PM was ridiculed considerably in UT's Winter Carnival ice displays. Some of the criticism, however, like the displays, melted away with Diefenbaker's declaration that Canada was not part of the American New Frontier.

Despite the agitation of the Combined Universities Committee for Nuclear Disarmament ("the Bomarcs are obsolete") and the newly formed opposition of the Student Committee for Nuclear Arms ("national security and national pride demands that Canada have a voice in nuclear control"), most students appear to have adopted a middle position which leans toward acceptance of the nuclear devices — largely because of undefined feelings of personal security.

This vague idea that perhaps the country might be safer with the nuclear warheads probably extends to the majority of Canadians, and it has been suggested that it was to capitalize upon these barely conscious feelings that Liberal Party leader Lester Pearson came out in favor of nuclear arms several weeks ago. Pearson believed the Liberals could win the election by initiating the arms acceptance position, thus forcing Diefenbaker's hand.

Unwilling to come out in favor of the armaments, Diefenbaker in turn capitalized upon the blunt United States statement to expand the issues from a domestic to an international one. If Pearson had hoped to appeal to the desire for national security, Diefenbaker appears ready to play upon feelings of national insecurity. He is expected to wage the anti-American campaign the newspapers don't want, even though the Prime Minister evidently thinks the Canadian people do want it. The only safe prediction at this point is that it will be, in the words of Toronto's respected Warden Joseph McCully, "the dirtiest campaign since the 'No Truck or Trade with the Yankees' election ff githo d ti Yankees' election fight of 1911."

Debate on the complex arms problem has become hopelessly entangled with the larger problem of Canadian nationalism, and Diefenbaker's stand is certainly an assertion of Canadian independence. The essential question involves the positive and negative aspects of nationalism. Does Canadian independence come only at the expense of the United States, or is there indeed a positive Canadian identity?

Some Canadian historians believe that Canadian nationalism is indeed a positive achievement and point to the amalgam of British and American influences, the "northern character" (whatever that means) of the nation, and its distinctive pattern of immigration. Others maintain that Canadian national feelings are only visceral reactions of a little brother who is tired of taking his older brother's guff. Professor McNaught of the UT History Department, in a penetrating discussion of American influences on Canada, declared that "Americans are benevolently unaware of Canadian affairs, while Canadians are malevolently aware of the U. S." This image of the sullen sibling is an illuminating one, although, as Prof. McNaught went on to suggest, it is the type of thinking which is inimical to the solution of twentieth century problems, problems which require interdependence and mutual respect rather than emotional squabbling.

Since there are widespread material similarities between the countries, it is easy to adopt a negative posture toward the influential big brother and more difficult to discern the intangible differences betwen the nations. One can begin this search by pointing out that Canadian educational standards — from grade school through college — are more demanding than our own and by remarking upon the European sense of polish and refinement which seems to mark Canadian social relations. Yet the effort to establish precisely why Canadians cannot be considered American carbon copies is pointless in many ways, for it encourages a style of thinking which inevitably becomes backbiting and regressive. As members of the Atlantic Community, both nations must meet their problems with broad vision, and not with the sharply reduced perspective of nationalistic pettiness.

Most of the exchangees from both nations, I think, were impressed with the common styles of thinking and acting we share. Differences between us can be more accurately attributed to socio-economic factors which reach far across that undefended border. Nationality is a convenient category, although a terribly superficial index. To talk about anti-American feeling, one must speak in highly general terms, for individual malevolence is not manifest. Again, national talk comes easily, and in free and informal exchange, good-natured kidding is to be expected. Thus, in his speech of gracious welcome, President William Allen of the Toronto Metropolitan Council referred to the Carolina group as an "American invasion." If hated invaders are shown the warmly elegant hospitality we were extended, the life of a perpetual hostage would be the ideal resolution of the national identity crisis.

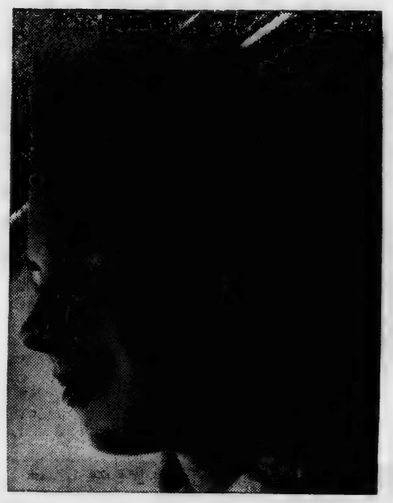
Toronto Government: Metropolitan Council

With a blossoming industrial economy and an area population of 1.6 million, Toronto is faced with the problems which plague most American urban centers—housing, welfare, transportation, highways, education, and adequate regional planning and development.

Toronto, however, moved beyond the moaning stage in 1950 by establishing the Toronto Metropolitan Council. Metro includes representatives of the City of Toronto and the 11 townships and villages which comprise the entire Toronto urban complex.

The thirteen area municipalities maintain their separate identity, but they have vested the central authority jurisdiction over the wholesale supply and purification of water, control over sewage treatment, responsibility for a basic standard of capital costs for education, public transportation, the major arterial roads, the administration of the lower courts and the county jail, homes for the aged, indigent hospital patients, neglected children and other welfare problems, public housing and regional parks.



It has also extended its authority in political matters by amalgamating the thirteen municipal police forces, assuming jurisdiction in licensing matters, air pollution control, and regional planning.

The Province of Ontario makes annual grants to the Metropolitan Council and it meets the remainder of its expenditures by assessing its thirteen municipalities.

Members of Metro are not directly elected to it; its 25 members hold elective office in their own municipalities. The suburban representatives are the chief elected officers from each township or village, while the city members include the nine (of 18) aldermen who led in the city-wide election, two of the four controllers, and the Mayor. The Chairman of the Council is elected from the body.

Although Metro government is not yet a perfect instrument for urban government, it has achieved an impressive list of accomplishments during its first ten years of operation and appears to be well accepted by Torontonians. It represents an attempt to cope realistically with metropolitan problems which differs significantly from American quasi-official planning associations. Metro has legislative authority and the power to levy taxes. Some local identity has been sacrificed to be sure, but it has been largely de jure, a small price indeed for the services gained.

Pensive and misty-eyed, Exchange Co-Chairman Suzie Johnson takes one last longing look at Toronto — and looks back over a highly successful program.

Suddenly a stranger becomes a friend. A realization is born that in only four transient days you may know and understand people of a relatively different culture, socialization, and environment.

Differences become vague, and you perceive more clearly the beliefs, ideas and ideals held in common.

You talk, imparting human events, concepts realized, old or new beliefs; and learn. You feel that perhaps you have known them all your life, or are people really basically the same.

When asked the purpose of the Toronto Exchange, a Canadian exchangee replied, "Oh, just to get to know and love these people so you can never see them again."

Detecting the bitterness in her tone, a UNC student remarked, "A thing may be worthwhile without duration."

She thought a minute. "You know, you're right."

Perhaps nobody really felt we would never see these people again. The world is too small. Someday we will see them, and a common bond will be remembered — a great experience will be relived.

As we left Toronto, a co-ed remarked, "If only we could know people all over the world as we got to know them. We'd never fight."

The Lighter Side:

Confederates Join Canadians

"There's nothing like walking into an 'Ugly American' situation," commented Dick Hesse staring at the morning headlines, "U. S. Tells Canada To Get Nuclear Arms."

We had just spent 24 hours on a bus and were attempting to retain that unwrinkled "Take the Bus and leave the driving to us" look. It was pretty hard to manage as six-foot-something Bill Wells, Sarah Cullen and Jeff Bayer had been stuffed head-first into the luggage racks. Larry McDevitt managed to look pretty comfortable in his sleeping bag, known affectionately as the "Womb," but the rest of us had been plastered against seats and windows sticking feet in every direction.

We took Niagara Falls by storm after thoroughly confusing Customs by going in and out of all the wrong doors. The group had one anxious moment as Sally James couldn't remember her place of birth (the only question being asked) and just muttered something about going to Toronto. She finally claimed a Michigan birthplace and we were admitted.

Wet with snow (from our Niagara Falls "weejun" ice skating and Dershie Bridge Ford's near fall) and looking like crumpled wads of paper, we were "delighted" to be met by photographers thoughtfully provided by our co-Canadians. Pictures, reunions, unpacking and a hot lunch followed. Janet Stewart just bubbled, "You're not too tired to ski, are you?"

The question was immaterial, and twenty minutes later we were on the slopes, where it took seven people to untangle McDevitt and Hesse skiied into a bale of hay. Buzzy Stubbs told a UT newspaper reporter that the skiing "sure was planty slick," and I took the slopes like a lady — sitting down. "Oh, you must be an American," was the comment of the Canadian I ran over on my way down.

Following a turkey dinner courtesy of the UT Students Administrative Council, it was off to the Crest Theatre and Shaw's "Arms and the Man." The house lights dimmed, and the Tar Heel group settled back in eager anticipation. The rest of the audience, however rose as "God Save the Queen" was played. We were impressed, although Toronto Exchange Chairman Brian McGrath had another viewpoint: "'God Save the Queen,'" he snorted. "It should be 'Oh, Canada,' our national anthem. We're national, not colonial!"

At Eric Fisher's post-theater party, it took no time at all for an exchange of social customs (the U.T. twist and some good jokes) and not much longer to sample the Canadian ale and beer thoughtfully donated by a local brewery. It IS stronger, too.

Friday's group activities were highlighted by a beautiful luncheon given by the Toronto Metropolitan Council. During the pre-dinner sherry hour, "Judas" Mayer was confronted by the imposing figure of Miss True Davidson, Reeve (Mayor) of East York Township and a member of the Metro Council. "Are you Tarheels discussing the War of 1812 and other historical bones of contention with your Canadian counterparts," the Reeve cooed. "No ma'am," Mayer replied hesitantly (for Reeve Davidson is a commanding woman), "we've decided to concentrate on settling this nuclear arms question." "Y-E-S, you should do that," was the response.

After Chairman William Allen's generous welcome and discussion of Toronto, we moved downtown to the multi-million dollar O'Keefe Center for the Performing Arts for a tour, a discussion of Canada's economic future ("Every time the U. S. sneezes, Canada gets pneumonia"), and refreshments courtesy of the O'Keefe Brewing Company, the generous proprietors of the establishment. Their slogan, "O.K. for OKeefe's" was OK with us, too.

We subdivided into smaller groups for dinners at different atmospheric restaurants, with our Canadian hosts leading their Southern friends to French, Chinese, and German restaurants. Later the Lady Godiva Marching Band led us to the Ice Arena with an old Canadian favorite, "When the Saints Go Marching In."

Toronto's Winter Carnival Ice Show was breathtaking, and the exciting student skating featured performances by Canadian champions and world finalists. The Carolina group will be watching for word from Italy this month about Wendy Griner, Petra Burka, Don MacPherson, and Gertrude Desjardins and Maurice LaFrance, champions all.

Between the Ice Show and the folkfest featuring The Tarriers, the arena resounded with "Hark the Sound," "Oh, Toronto, mother ever dear," and a particularly resounding "Give us a C—." A unique version of "Tiptoe through the Tulips" became the especial favorite of Joe Craver and is now the group song.

Bright and early Saturday morning we had to try our own luck at fun in ice and snow, and tobogganed without falling under the Exchange jinx. For the first time in four years, no Carolina coed broke a leg. Flushed with victory, we adjourned to the Beta house for lunch and a panel discussion on "The influence of University Life on Morals." (See your nearest exchangee for details) In discussing the merits of freer love in Denmark, Chairman McGrath exclaimed that he'd never known of a "frustrated Dane." "What about Hamlet?" was Ginny Carnes' squelcher.

Ice skating and attempts at such and/or curling (stones and brooms and ice) occupied the late afternoon, and after a change of clothes, we entered the medieval splendor of Hart House, a student union on the grand scale. Its director, Warden Joseph McCully, is one of UT's most beloved and respected citizens, and he quickly became our friend, too.

Sherry and imported cheese and the Warden's art collection gave way to an elegant roast beef and Yorkshire-pudding dinner, and the response from Chairman Mickey Simmons that in his Northern Virginia homeland a man is honored "for being a gentleman, a scholar, and a judge of fine liquor." Mick decided that after talking with the Warden and sampling his hospitality and his sherry, he was convinced that the Warden must be a transplanted Northern Virginian. The group indicated its approval in Canadian university fashion by beating their hands on the table.

From the leisurely atmosphere of Hart House to the electric excitement of a National Hockey League game was only a ten minute drive. Beth Walker watched two thirds of the game before realizing she was in Maple Leaf Gardens, not "Make Believe" Gardens as she had misunderstood. "I thought calling the team the "Leafs" was a cute nickname," she explained. Much of the exchange was like fantasy-land, but not that much.

The party that evening was scheduled for Janet Stewart's. Jan sent out notes to all her elderly neighbors asking them to be patient "with the usual college exuberance." They all called back, "You can bring brass bands, if you like." They weren't necessary.

Sunday dinner was served at the homes of some of the Canadian exchangees, and each group came back with reports of more lavish hospitality and excellent cuisine including peach brandy and 7-course desserts. A searching discussion of American influences on Canada followed at Hart House, "High" tea," folk singing including a compromise version of "This Land is Your Land," long farewells and thank yous, and all of a sudden, the bus was pulling away from Hart House. For the first time in four days we were quiet and sad. Our Canadian adventure in friendship and good will had succeeded beyond our wildest hopes.

Now, back in Chapel Hill, we are 28 very different people once again—but we now have a cherished experience binding us together We are sending an indication of our feelings to each of our co-Tar Heels. . . . that picture of the charging Confederate with the caption: "Forget, Hell!"

AN IMPROMPTU barbershop quartet, folk-style, is anchored by Exchange Co-chairman Mickey Simmons during the Toronto week. With Simmons, (l. to r.) are Neill Clark, Wayne King and George LaMonte.

WEARY from the long Toronto trek, sleepy Jeff Bayer totters precariously from his nest in the luggage rack where he crawled to get a few winks. He didn't fall.

'Morals' Discussion Heated

"The Effect of the University on Morals" turned out to be a heated topic for discussion as a panel of Torontonians and Tar Heels dissected the question during the Toronto Exchange week.

The omnipresent sex question naturally dominated the lively comments by panelists Neill Clark and Patti Perrin of UNC and Jo Ann Noyes and Brian McGrath of Toronto.

The panelists quickly squared off, with panelist Clark advancing the position of sexual liberalism with the opinion that sex should be viewed as a "purely biological function."

"Sex," the UNC junior argued, "should be viewed as a biological necessity. Love, as a matter of fact, sometimes acts as a deterrent to sexual relations."

Clark said he had often heard male students argue that "they wouldn't sleep with some girl or other because they were in love with her."

"That," he said "is the stupidest thing I ever heard of."

McGrath, co - chairman of the Toronto group, also advocated a more liberal sexual attitude, but attacked Clark for his "biological" view of sex. Sex, he said should be a "spiritual as well as a physical thing."

Clark countered this argument with an example: "Everyone has seen dogs ... ing in the street. Are they in love?" he asked.

McGrath based his argument for a more liberal attitude on his belief that sexual repression was a prime source of frustration among college students.

He said that he did not advocate sexual promiscuity, however, but a "more realistic" attitude.

Both female members of the panel represented a more conservative position or the sex question.

The discussion quickly brought questions from the 50-odd member audience of Canadians and Tar Heels as the opening statements ended.

Asked if he felt there was any connection between the "physical aspect of a male-female relationship and the spiritual aspect," Clark answered that there was none, except as "imposed by the people involved."

Clark said he did not "in any sense" reject the spiritual, but felt "highly satisfactory sexual relationships" were possible without it.

McGrath said he did not subscribe to this view, and that the two were not so easily separated.

Dershie Bridgeford of UNC said she felt that many males did not understand that the fear and problem of pregnancy dissuaded many girls from sexual relationships. "That's a problem boys don't have to worry about," she said.

Some comments from the floor by UNC's Wayne King brought a charge from Virginia Carnes, also of UNC, that he "wanted to abolish the institution of marriage." King replied, "that's exactly what I'd like to do. Who needs a ritual?"

Miss Carnes had earlier attacked panelist Clark for his statement on "dogs in the street" not being in love. Miss Carnes said in answer to the analogy that "human beings are not animals."

UNC's Patti Perrin, who opened the discussion, commented on the question of using alcohol. UNC's policy on this question, according to Miss Perrin, was an ambiguous one. "You can't . . . but you can" was her summary of the University attitude.

Clark's only comment on college drinking consisted of holding aloft one of the several beers he drank during the discussion.

He was later joined by McGrath as the discussion progressed to a more heated level.

IS THIS YOUR SHIRT?

If so, Miss Afflerbach will send you your [ ] label
THIS is a two-color striped button-down shirt designed and tailored by Eagle Shirtmakers and sold everywhere by fine men's stores. Many of them admire our shirts so much they sell them under their own names. High praise indeed, and we should like to reciprocate by advertising their (our) shirts. But it's hard to know just where to start. Obviously we can't say things like "None Genuine Without This Label" when they are all quite genuine, you know. And it would be silly to say "Try An Eagle Shirt Today!" when it is likely you already have a drawerful; even though you didn't know it until just this minute. So all we can suggest is that you send in for your Eagle label. Write Eagle Shirtmakers, Quakertown, Pennsylvania; Attention Miss Afflerbach.

Cincy Still Leads; Duke Ranks 2nd

NEW YORK (UPI)—Cincinnati retained the top spot in the United Press International major college basketball rating Monday despite its first defeat of the season, while Loyola of Chicago, also beaten for the first time, surrendered the No. 2 rating to Duke.

Wichita, 65-64 conqueror of Cincinnati last Saturday night, jumped up to sixth place and Ohio State also made its way back to the top 10 group in a tie for No. 7.

Loyola, after holding the runner-up spot for eight straight weeks, dropped to third place, swapping places with Duke. Loyola's 21-game winning streak was snapped by Bowling Green, 92-75, last weekend. Duke's record is 19-2, having won 13 games in a row.

Cincinnati, whose 37-game, two-season winning streak was broken by Wichita, remained the nation's top team for the 12th straight week, although not by unanimous acclaim, as it had been. One member of the 35-man UPI rating board cast his first-place vote for Duke.

Arizona State, with a 20-2 record, moved up one notch to No. 4, exchanging places with Illinois. Stanford was tied with Ohio State for seventh place following Wichita, with Colorado and Georgia Tech occupying the last two spots in the top 10 group.

Mississippi State and Oregon State dropped out of the top 10 after occupying the No. 7 and No. 10 ratings last week.

Oddly, Bowling Green's upset victory over Loyola did not earn the Falcons from Ohio a place among the top 20 teams.

Points are distributed on a 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis for votes from first place to 10th place.

Mississippi State headed the second 10 group, followed in order by NYU, Oregon State, Texas, Auburn and Oklahoma State.

Intramural Basketball Playoffs Near Finals

By STUART BALL

Four of the five basketball divisions are well underway to choose in their new champions as the second week of play in the Intramural playoffs begins.

Sigma Chi has advanced to the semi-final round of the fraternity blue section via a bye and a win over DKE. Tonight at 8:30 SAE meets OK Psi with the winner of that contest also to advance to the semi-finals. Most of the other action in this section is at the quarter-final stage.

In the Dormitory blue division the winner of last night's Teague-Joyner contest advances to the finals where it will meet either Craige, Air Force, or Ruffin.

Both the Navy DD's and the Winston Offs have secured berths in the semi-final round of the Dorm White division. Navy won by default over Aycock, and topped Joyner on a technicality for its two victories. Winston has topped Parker's Pack and the Mangum Mavericks in its two games, and is thought by many to be the team to beat.

The Fraternity White division, which is twice as large as the other three, is still in the early stages of its playoffs. The Chi Psi Psychoes, Sigma Nu Reds, Phi Gam Fijis, and ATO have advanced to the quarter-finals, however. The winner of tonight's Sigma Nu-Phi Gam contest will move to the semi-finals to be played next week.

Joyner swept to a perfect 5-0 season walked off with the Dormitory Handball championship by topping Mangum last Tuesday. In the Frad division the Physics Fiends took top honors by whipping Law School and Peacocks.

All Table Tennis entrants are reminded of a full schedule tonight. The matches will be played at the South end of Woollen Gym.

Cunningham, Pals Star At Charlotte

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Billy Cunningham wrote a new chapter into his already legendary book of basketball heroics Saturday night.

The occasion was North Carolina's 79-63 rout of Clemson, but the game was only a sidelight in view of Cunningham's luminous accomplishments.

The 6-5 sophomore, always spectacular but something even more over the weekend, buried Lennie Rosenbluth's school rebounding record by leaping for 27 stray shots. His total is also a North-South doubleheader high.

Billy's sub-par scoring performance might have been caused by the extraction of an abcessed tooth just 24 hours earlier. He said it didn't bother him, but it had to have some bearing on his play.

Toward the end of the game, those who weren't yawning were yelling to shoot — and score.

Billy had eight points with 15 minutes left. He did not score again until three minutes remained. Then he got six points in 30 seconds — all on rebound drives and all accompanied by wild screams from the many kids still in the audience.

Kids Mobbed Billy After Game

These same youngsters mobbed the UNC dressing room door after the game, waiting for their strawberry blond hero.

Another interested spectator wishing to congratulate Cunningham was Pete Brennan, the former UNC All-American forward who played such a big part in the 1956-57 national championship success.

After wrestling through most of the crowd at the dressing room entrance, Brennan headed for a dripping-wet, but very happy Billy the Kid.

"I've never seen anybody jump like you do," said Brennan, and that statement could just as well have been made by anybody else who has ever seen Cunningham.

If Billy's performances over the weekend were spectacular, Charlie Shaffer's must be labeled as surprising.

Coach Dean Smith said he would only use Shaffer in Charlotte if he had to. Friday night he had to. And Shaffer, looking like a refugee from the hospital ward, responded admirably.

Against South Carolina, he originally went into the game with four minutes remaining in the first half. Charlie proceeded to score 14 important points in addition to helping Cunningham off the boards with his six retrieves.

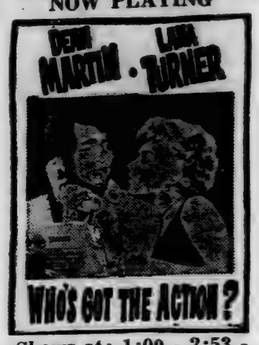
Shaffer's Efforts Big Help

If Charlie had not come up with the big contribution, the Tar Heels might have been on the short end of the 78-74 final score.

Saturday night, Shaffer was again back to his accustomed role as a starter — weak knee and painful elbow or not. This time he helped send Clemson reeling with 17 first-half points— most of them on the payoff end of Carolina's explosive fast breaks. He finished with 19 points and 11 rebounds.

UNC had six men in double digits in its cruise past the Tigers. Cunningham's 14 and Shaffer's 19 were followed by Yogi Poteat — 13, Bryan McSweeney — 11, Ray Respess — 10 and Larry Brown — 10.

It is difficult to imagine how Brown and Poteet managed to score as they did, for their defensive work on Clemson's fine guards was something to behold.



Brown held Choppy Patterson to six of 14 from the field while Poteet completely stopped high-scoring im Brennan. Brennan managed only two baskets. He shot 13 times.

Swimming Frosh Score Two Wins

UNC's freshman swimmers moved their overall record to 9-1 Friday with a double win over Westminister Schools and Staunton Military Academy, 62-31 and 53-42, respectively. The frosh Tankmen won seven events over both teams while losing only two to Westminister and three to SMA.

John Sheldon and Tom Murphy each won two events. Sheldon the 200-yard and 400-yard freestyle. Murphy the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle. Rick Forum and Fred Lipp won the 100-yard breast stroke and butterfuly events respectively. Carolina also took the 200-yard freestyle relay.

The Baby Blue Dolphins play host to Maryland on Friday in the Bowman Gray Pool.

Soviets To Remove 'Several Thousand' Troops From Cuba

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Russia has notified the United States that Premier Nikita Khrushchev intends to remove "several thousand" Soviet troops from Cuba by March 15, authoritative sources said Tuesday.

They said the Russian pledge was made in a Kremlin communication that was received in Washington Monday and laid before congressional leaders of both parties at a hastily called White House meeting Monday night.

The Russians did not say how many troops they meant by "several thousand." The administration has said the Soviets have about 6,000 combat troops in Cuba plus some 11,000 technicians. The Russians say these men have been training Cubans in use of conventional weapons.

In a development which could be related to troop removal, Chairman Thomas E. Morgan, D-Pa., said his House Foreign Affairs Committee was informed on Tuesday by Central Intelligence Director John A. McCone that "several empty Russian merchant ships were on their way to Cuba."

Will Lower Tensions

While the government would have welcomed more specific information on the promised troop pull-out, administration officials regarded the promise as a step that would lower some of the tension in the Caribbean—as far as it went.

Congressional reaction was cautious, for the most part. The consensus seemed to be that removal of any troops was a step forward but that all should be removed. One senator said there was some elaboration on the "several thousand" phrase at the White House meeting, but he declined to amplify.

Sen. John C. Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee, called the Soviet statement "highly significant" and a "good start." But he said he was interested in the kind of troops being withdrawn.

Senate GOP Leader Everett M. Dirksen, Ill., said: "What the people are interested in is withdrawal of all Soviet troops of all kinds from Cuba at the earliest possible date." Sen. George D. Aiken, R-Vt., said there was no assurance that any troops removed would not be replaced laaer.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, Mont., said he hoped the promised withdrawal would be followed by others until all Soviet troops are removed. He said:

"It's a continuation of a start which has already been made in the withdrawal of 4,500 to 5,000 from an intelligence estimate of 22,000."

Sen. Barry M. Goldwater, R-Ariz., said: "What's a few thousand. There should not be one Soviet soldier or technician left in Cuba."

Chairman Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., of the Senate Armed services committee, said word of the Soviet withdrawal was encouraging but he added: "I do not feel that we can afford to let this matter drop or be complacent about it until all the Russian troops and technicians manning weapons are removed from Cuba."

Sen. Leverett Saltonstall, R-Mass., top Republican member of the Armed Services Committee, said he thought the promised removal would be "received with a great deal of relief by the American people." He hoped it would be a start toward complete withdrawal.

Government Will Wait

The government was expected to await carrying out of the promise before deciding whether to prod Moscow any further. The President asked Khrushchev only last week just when he planned to honor his pledge to remove his troops.

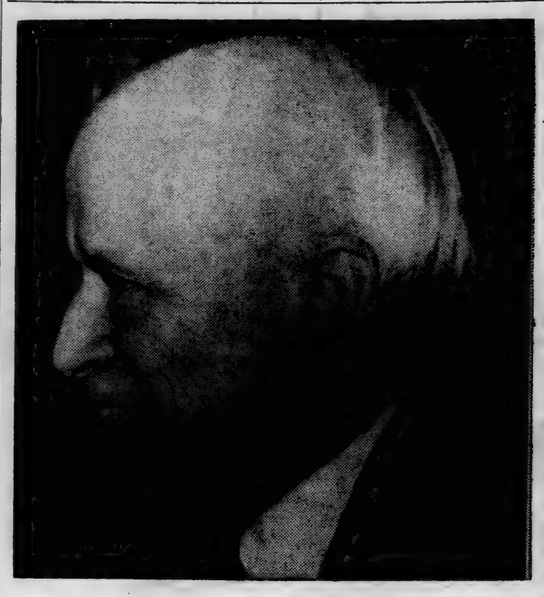
Dormitory Spotlight: Manly



Active dorms seem to have at least one thing in common—full participation of residents. A typical active dorm is Manly, and the unity of its members certainly is a result of their organization.

Led by intramural manager Carl Swann, Manly is first in intramurals. Ninth last year, the dorm's teams swept the football and volleyball crowns and presently hold a wide lead in the standings.

The increased social fee has made an expanded social program possible, and a beer and pizza party was held before Christmas. The success of last year's beach party has resulted in an annual affair, and it is to be held in late April. Manly was the only dorm to have such a party last year, according to dorm president John Schultz.

According to editor Murray Van Lear, the dorm paper was published three times last semester, and resident will have a page in Yack.

The only complaint by the residents is that there is not sufficient space in the dorm for social activities. The fact that there will probably be three men per room next year seems to rule out expansion of the social room.

'Can Security Exist In Garrison State?'

By JOEL BULKLEY

A mellowed but determined Norman Thomas Monday night challenged the belief that security exists in this "Garrison State in which we live," in a Carolina Forum-sponsored address in Memorial Hall.

Thomas, a six-time presidential candidate on the Socialist Party ticket, pleaded with his audience of 500 people to begin to think about the consequences of our almost complete dependency upon a militaristic economy. He said that our only hope lies in doing what is extraordinarily difficult— that of changing over to an economy in which we can conquer poverty and educate the people of our country as well as those of the rest of the world.

Thomas cited the failure of American public opinion to come forth with any suggestions and definite statements about ending this arms race we are in, as the major cause of our dangerous position. He said that we can not afford to spend 10% of our total national product on arms and still be able to hope to conquer illiteracy, and disease and expand education. Thomas noted that he was sure that the Health, Education and Welfare budget would be cut before anyone even thought of reducing defense appropriations.

The 79-year-old veteran politician also stated that not only is our economy in danger, but also that our democratic system is a very touchy position. When democracy becomes degraded, by this search for security, it is subordinate to politics instead of liberty. "Freedom must win out over the compulsion of the government to build a deterent force," he said. He went on to say that the draft is inevitable as long as civil liberties are second to the wishes of the Supreme Court.

Thomas noted that universities are also economically involved in the arms race in a direct manner. They rely upon research grants for the prime safety of our country. Thus, he added a new game is created in which the arms race opposes the seduction of colleges and education. Unfortunately, the educational institutions are not making the students think enough about the price we are paying as becomes so affected by the Garrison State and thus we are losing this game.

In answer to many of the questions which followed the talk, he replied if you have any questions concerning the current platform of the Socialist Party in the U. S., the party has an office on Broadway in New York City and the platform could be obtained there.

Honor Council Chairman Resigns

Walter Dellinger yesterday "regretfully" announced his resignation, effective Thursday, as chairman of the Men's Honor Council. The Council will meet tomorrow night to select a new chairman who will serve until the new Council is formed after the campus elections of March 26.

Dellinger stated that he would remain on the council but felt that it was necessary to "step down early" as chairman in order to complete his honors thesis in Political Science. He also said that he could have remained as chairman but his duties as a dorm adviser and the completion of his thesis would make it impossible for him to preside over the Men's Council hearings each Thursday until the spring elections.

Dellinger said that, "This is the time when the Council needs continuous leadership in order to go into the campus living units and communicate to the faculty and the student body the improvements made in the Honor System." He added that he felt that there are "younger members of the council who are both able and willing to take charge in doing this job in what he feels is a critical month."

Dellinger, a senior from Charlotte, has served on the Council for four years while attending the University on a General Motors Scholarship. He is also a member of the Golden Fleece, the Order of the Grail and the Old Well.

Tshombe Aide Stops Brawl

ELISABETHVILLE, Katanga, The Congo (UPI)—President Moise Tshombe's personal bodyguard, wielding rifle butts, broke up a demonstrating crowd of 200 to 300 Africans Tuesday outside the presidential palace.

A crowd, which included a handful of Europeans, had gathered to watch the previously announced raising of the Congolese flag in the palace grounds. The trouble began when a Katangese army captain told the crowd to go home because the ceremony was postponed until Wednesday so it could take place in the presence of Central Government Premier Cyrille Adoula.

When the crowd refused to disperse, the palace guard, supported by about 50 Katangese policemen, moved in. Blows were exchanged within minutes and a wild brawl resulted. A number of the demonstrators suffered minor scalp wounds. One young man was dragged inside the palace gates where troops punched and kicked him.

Tshombe is in France at present.

Reds Charge Berlin Shots To The West

BERLIN (UPI) — The Communists charged Tuesday night that "West Berlin terrorists" fired on an East German icebreaker on a Berlin border waterway, wounding the wife of the captain.

The East German communications ministry claimed the icebreaker Einheit was the target of shots as it passed under a West Berlin bridge Monday on route from one stretch of border river to another.

West Berlin police said they had received no reports of the alleged shooting.

The East German vessel had been on duty breaking up ice over the rivers and lakes which lie between West Berlin and the Soviet zone to prevent East Germans from escaping on foot over the frozen surface.

Communist police were reported earlier Tuesday to have opened fire along the Berlin border to foil an attempted mass escape of refugees to West Berlin. Red guards also arrested a woman trying to flee to the American sector of the city.

The border action was reported by West Berlin police as Maj. Gen. James H. Polk, U. S. commandant in Berlin, made a helicopter flight over one mile of East German territory to pay his first visit to the tiny U. S. administered enclave of Steinstuecken.

Police said the group of fleeing East Germans tried to break through the barbed wire barrier on the border of the French sector's Leubars District late Monday night.

Guards on the Western side heard shots, shouts and cries for help behind the barbed wire. French soldiers and West Berlin police rushed to the border but could see nothing in the darkness.

In a separate incident, police said, a woman was caught by Communist guards Monday night near the Spaeth Bridge on the border of the American sector's Nenukeelln District as she was trying to escape.

It was announced, meanwhile, West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt, fresh from his landslide victory in Sunday's municipal elections, will visit Paris in April.

The Socialist mayor presumably will meet with President Charles de Gaulle. A city hall spokesman said the French invitation was "official" and had been on hand for some time.

Battle Named President Of Frat Council

Charlie Battle of the Phi Delta Theta Fraternity was elected president of the Interfraternity Council Monday night. Battle, a senior from Miami, Fla., and co-captain of the 1963 soccer team, was vice-president of the IFC last year.

Other officers elected Monday were Ned Martin, SAE, vice-president; Lyn Turner, Sigma Nu, secretary; and Julian Myer, ZBT, treasurer. Brooks Emory of Zeta Psi was elected chairman of the IFC Court. Other court members include Bobby Gray, Pud Hassell, Buddy Schiff and David Reynolds. Martin and Battle will serve as ex-officio members of the Court.

In other business a motion was heard to amend the IFC by-laws enabling the IFC Court to try individual case under its jurisdiction instead of having to try the whole fraternity house when an individual is at fault as under the present system. The amendment would also give the IFC Court the power to decide whether the individual or the house is at fault in a given case and give the Court "discretion of punishment" in such cases. Another provision of the amendment would give the Court the power to refer cases in which an individual is involved to the Men's Honor Council. In order for this amendment to be passed, a two-third vote of the fraternities is required. The amendment will be voted on at the IFC meeting next next week.

STUDENTS BOARD

The International Students Board will meet at 4 p.m. today in the Y building. All members urged to attend.

CO-OP COMMITTEE

The Legislative Co-Op committee will not meet this week.

Form Said Similar To Administration Unsuccessful Plan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Five Republican senators got the jump on the White House Tuesday by introducing a medicare bill similar to one that barely was defeated in the Senate last year.

President Kennedy will present to Congress at noon Thursday his proposal to set up a health care plan for the aged under Social Security.

The legislation introduced Tuesday by five Republican senators from the liberal wing of the party also would finance medicare under the Social Security System.

GOP Whip Thomas H. Kuchel, Calif., and Sens. Clifford P. Case, R-N.J., John Sherman Cooper, Ky., and Kenneth B. Keating and Jacob K. Javits, N. Y., cosponsored the bill.

"We are not closing our minds to other methods under Social Security," they said in a joint statement. "We will examine carefully all developments in this field and will be ready to cooperate with Sen. Clinton P. Anderson, D-N. M., as we did last year in working for the passage of a law which meets the pressing health needs of our aging citizens."

The bill is far from a consensus proposal by Republicans. Many other GOP senators have sharply attacked the Social Security financing form in the past and are not believed to have mellowed much, if any, in their opposition.

The GOP liberal bill differs from last year's administration proposal in that it would:

Include an estimated 2½ million persons over 65 who are not covered by Social Security; provide an option under which beneficiaries would have a choice of receiving hospital benefit programs through private plans rather than through the government; allow private organizations and states to help administer the program; and provide for a separate health insurance trust fund.

"These provisions are essential if there is to be a recognition that private enterprise is an important partner in the effort to meet the special needs of the aging," Javits said.

Javits said the bill is the same as the Anderson-Javits compromise proposal last year except that "we have liberalized the home health care provision by making it available on the prescription of a physician." The Senate defeated the compromise Bill 52-48. Javits said the change in the home health care section was intended to keep costs down and avoid hospital overcrowding.

Waddell Gets Editorship Of Handbook

Cole Waddell, a senior, was chosen editor of the Carolina Handbook yesterday by the Publications Board.

Bill Carter was selected business manager of the Handbook and Art Pearce was named business manager trainee for the Daily Tar Heel.

Waddell, who has had experience on the Carolina Quarterly, the Carolina Handbook, and on the now-defunct Parlance Magazine, was the unanimous choice of the Board. He said he hopes to revamp parts of the handbook to make it more appealing and more informative to those entering UNC next fall.

Carter, a sophomore, has also had previous experience in publications work in high school and said he hopes to make advertising in the handbook more imaginative, gaining the attention of the students and the patronage of the advertisers.

Pearce, a junior, is co-news editor of the Daily Tar Heel and has worked for two summers on the Fairfield, Conn., newspaper. As business manager trainee of the Tar Heel he will be learning all aspects of the job and can be considered by the Publications Board for the position of the Tar Heel business manager next year.

Resident Advisors Needed For 1963

Applications for dormitory resident advisers are now being received by the Office of the Dean of Men. Interested upperclassmen, graduate, and professional students should submit applications at once. These may be obtained at the Office of the Dean of Men, 206 South Building.

Employment is for the two semesters of the academic year 1963-64. Salaries range from $300.00 per year for Resident Advisers to $1250.00 per year for Head Resident Advisors to $2,000.00 per year for House Masters.

Applications are also being accepted for dormitory Head Resident Advisers for the Summer Session of 1963.

Betancourt Is Welcomed By Kennedy

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy warmly welcomed President Romulo Betancourt of Venezuela to the United States Tuesday as the "number one enemy" of Communism in Latin America and the best U. S. argument for the Alliance for Progress program.

Betancourt's arrival for a two-day official visit was marred only by a cold, soaking drizzle mixed with snow and a Republican congressman's criticism of a "foreign politician who comes here seeking our money, and calling himself anti-Communist." Betancourt told Kennedy in a welcoming ceremony at the White House that he came not to seek aid but as a "friend and an ally" of the United States.

Kennedy hailed the Venezuelan leader's four-year fight for peaceful political and economic revolution as a shining example of "what we wish for our own country and our sister republics in Latin America."

Parade Postponed

Washington's mixture of snow and rain forced postponement of Kennedy's plans to take Betancourt, his wife and daughter on a seven-block parade through downtown Washington. Instead, the two first families drove directly from the White House across Pennsylvania Avenue to Blair House, the presidential guest house, in plastic domed "bubbletop" limousines. The parade was rescheduled for Wednesday.

Betancourt had lunch with Secretary of State Dean Rusk at the State Department and conferred with Kennedy at the White House in late afternon. The Betancourts were guests of the Kennedys at a formal state dinner at the White House tonight.

Alumni Win $1700 For UNC Fund

North Carolina's team of alumni quiz experts defeated the University of Kansas team on ABC-TV last Sunday and won $1700 for the UNC Alumni Giving fund. The UNC team was composed of Voit Gilmore, formerly of Winston-Salem and director of the U. S. Travel Agency; Vermont Royster, formerly of Raleigh and editor of the Wall Street Journal; and Richard Adler, Broadway playwright.

By defeating Kansas, the UNC team won the chance to face an alumni team from Mundeleine College, a Catholic women's school in Chicago. The contestants for Mundeleine will be Mercedes McCambridge, a well-known movie star and actress; Tomi Gilman, another actress; and Geraldine Stutz, president of Henri Bendel, a large New York firm.

The program will be seen next Sunday at 6 p.m. over WRAL-TV and at 6:30 p.m. over WUNC-TV A new contestant, Clifton Daniel, formerly of Raleigh, now the assistant managing editor of the New York Times, will replace Gilmore on the UNC team.

IDC MEETING

The IDC will meet tonight at six o'clock on the fourth floor of New East.

Pirate Vessel Heads Toward Brazil Port

BELEM, Brazil (UPI) — Brazil sent marines Tuesday to take over the pirate ship Anzeategui, "arrest" its hijackers and bring the ship into Belem.

Adm. Osmar Azeredo announced that a marine lieutenant and three armed enlisted men were flown from Belem to Santana with orders to board the hijacked Venezuelan frigheter, put the hijackers under arrest and sail the 300-ton vessel into this port.

Azeredo said a Brazilian harbor pilot boarded the Anzeategui at its anchorage with orders to guide the ship into Santana.

"The rebels will be taken into custody as a formality and partly for their own protection," he said. "The Brazilian government still intends to grant them asylum. The ship eventually will be returned to its owners."

The Brazilian warship Solimees was to meet the Anzeategui at Santana and escort it, under its marine command, to Belem. The admiral said the ship would remain with Brazilian territorial waters throughout the 200-mile sail to Belem. The steaming distance from Santana to Belem is about 26 hours.

Wilmar Modina Rojas, second mate of the ship and leader of the nine-man armed terrorist band which seized control last Wednesday, asked for the pilot because he lacked navigation charts for the area.

Medina anchored the ship in the north channel of the Amazon Monday night, about 50 miles from Macapa, to allow the pilot to board. The ship had 200 miles to sail before it reached Belem.

A Brazilian naval vessel was en route to intercept the Anzeategui and escort it into Belem.

China Problem To Go Before Model U. N.

Students from 43 colleges and universities throughout the country will begin arriving in Chapel Hill tonight and tomorrow morning as registration for the three-day UN Model Assembly gets under way. Sixty-one countries will be represented in this session, which begins tomorrow and will run through Saturday.

Among the delegations expected to participate are the Air Force Academy (as the United States), the Naval Academy (Indonesia), Duke (Cuba), and UNC (Russia).

The most "controversial" issues will be resolutions for the settlement of the Red Chinese-India border dispute and for the admission of Red China to the U.N. Other resolutions on the agenda include ones concerning Portugal's activities in Angola and Mozambique, and the effect of the Common Market on the developing countries.

In addition to hearing outstanding speakers and participating in committee meetings and plenary sessions, the delegates will be competing with each other for the Award for the Best Speaker and the Award for the Best Delegation. Last year's winner of the Best Delegation Award was Duke's Cuban delegation, which attended in fatigues and beards, walked out of committee meetings, and generally acquited itself in a revolutionary manner. Two years ago UNC's (Russian) delegation won the award. This year's UNC delegation consists of Henry Mayer, Mickey Simmons, Harry DeLung, Jim Reston and Bob Spearman.

Mayer and Reston were on the delegation which won the award and are being counted on for fine performances again this year.

Juniors To Sponsor Essay Competition

The Junior Class Scholarship Committee has announced that it will sponsor an essay contest on the topic "My Personal Evaluation of Carolina." Any UNC undergraduate is eligible to enter, with the prize for the winner being ten dollars.

All essays should be typewritten and double-spaced. The maximum length for all entries is 1500 words. All essays should be turned in by March 30, 1963, to the G.M. Information Desk. The judge for the contest will be ex-Chancellor Robert M. House.

Civil Liberties Cases

The Supreme Court decision Monday invalidating two laws which strips citizenship from persons who leave the country to avoid the military draft, has more significance than its effect on the laws involved.

By a 5-4 vote the Court majority said the two acts failed to provide procedural safeguards under "due process" provisions of the Constitution. Essentially the case involved civil liberties in conflict with the police power of the Federal government. The Court majority ruled in favor of civil liberties and full and fair due process of law.

Justice Goldberg wrote the majority decision. He was joined by Chief Justice Warren and justices Black, Douglas and Brennan — the four men who traditionally have formed the 5-4 minority position on all civil liberties cases. Former Secretary of Labor Goldberg's vote indicates he will follow the liberal, libertarian judicial road which was predicted when he was appointed to the Court. If he does (and if Justice Black doesn't retire for at least several more years), there could be a great change in the Court's interpretation of the freedoms of the First and Fifth amendments.

With this new interpretation could come decisions which strike down the McCarran and Smith acts as unconstitutional, or radically restrict their scope, and a possible curtailing of the free-wheeling activities of the controversial House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC).

* * *

In two 5-4 decisions handed down on June 5, 1961 the Court upheld the membership provision of the Smith Act and the registration provision of the McCarran Act (which requires members of the Communist Party to register with the government as agents of a foreign power.)

The 1940 Smith Act makes membership illegal in any group advocating violent overthrow of the government (meaning, as it is interpreted, the Communist Party.)

The 1950 McCarran Act orders the party, its chief officers and members to register with the Attorney-General as a "Communist-action" group. Further, it orders all "Communist-front" groups (as determined by the Attorney-General) to register. The act forbids members of the party or any "fronts" from getting passports, from holding jobs in defense industries, and includes restrictions on Communist uses of the mails. A great porton of the act provides for "emergency detention" of any accused Communist or Communist-fronter in camps in times of crises.

* * *

Many leading Americans have expressed their alarm at the implications of these acts. They fear the government is, in effect, outlawing a political party; is contravening the Bill of Rights (Fifth amendment — Communists are made to register themselves and thus lay themselves open for prosecution; First amendment — restrictions on free speech and free press; Eighth amendment — "unnatural punishment", $10,000 a day for not registering); that individuals are being punished by legislation rather than through judicial due process (bill of attainder); and that a dangerous precedent is being set when any group of Americans is singled out for such un-Constitutional treatment, even to the extent of establishing concentration camps.

With Mr. Goldberg's vote we hope the Supreme Court will soon get to its unfinished business of repairing the holes which have been bored into the Constitution by those who fear the free exchange of ideas within the democratic system. (JC)

Spread The Word

The administration has repeatedly referred to the student union, both present and proposed, as a "laboratory of leadership." They look upon a student union as the potential breeding ground for future enlightened citizenry, not as a playground for extended study breaks.

We wonder if the student body shares such a view.

Certainly, there must be that segment actively participating in the functions of student government who would agree that Graham Memorial is truly an educational facility, that the hours spent on second floor GM are anything but extended study breaks, and that a great deal of this stuff called "education" which they carry with them out into the world of tomorrow is molded and polished by the hours of extra-curricular activities which go into the makeup of a properly oriented "student union."

But just as certain, is that large majority which thinks too often, too quickly, of one large brick playpen which houses some offices and several pool tables. There is this majority which labors under such a misconception, a majority which by their own action, in most allowances, allows and even fosters the very understanding to which they pretend an objection.

If the University is to undertake the construction of a new student union, any thought of such an undertaking as the cast of a new and splendid bit of bait to lure students away from the books should immediately be dismissed. Needless to say, such an understanding is not in the minds of the administration.

The burden of dismissing a misconception must fall on the shoulders of those students who work and learn in the halls of the present GM. Those many individuals who make up the enrollment of the this "laboratory of leadership" must strive to increase the attendance, to share what they learn, and to prompt future registration in a course of applied self-government which has, indeed, been the breeding ground for that needed enlightened citizenry. Conspiracy Against Students Growing

Did you have time to read Henry Mayer's editorial in last Friday's DTH? If not, try to do so. Maybe you don't believe in the International Conspiracy Against College Students. But it does exist. Honest.

I received my full initiation into the elite society when I went to pick up my class tickets for the spring semester.

First of all, I was fined 63-cents because I had slept at the wrong end of the bed for a full semester. Then, the young man sitting at the head of the long table told me rather matter-of-factly there was no record of my pre-registering and he was so very very sorry but I just didn't have any class tickets.

No class tickets. Now, wasn't that a great welcome back present? No tickets — I couldn't believe it. I almost decided then and there to go back to my old job at the Funeral home but then I remembered what Terry said about going to school and things like that so I decided to give it a try.

At 7 a.m. Monday morning, the first day of classes, I started on the merciless journey to the basement of Hanes Hall and tried to straighten out the whole mess.

Now, this is the whole truth so help me. I made a total of six trips to Hanes Hall, five to South Building, four to Caldwell Hall, two to Saunders Hall, then back to Hanes where I waited for half an hour before I was able to get anyone to wait on me. The boss man sent someone back to the IBM room and thirty minutes later he presented me with five beautiful class tickets.

Then after I spent another hour going through the registration complex, I was finally able to attend one class for the day, and the Teacher didn't even show up at that.

* * *

Men, did you know you might be able to attend graduate school at Woman's College? WOW! We understand the campus now has about 100 men commuting daily. Not bad and the fringe benefits are great, so we're told. That would be our idea of real "quality education."

* * *

Even though spring nominations are several weeks off, both major campus parties are oiling the machinery, and preparing for a major struggle for power.

Although it may be too early for predictions, we believe the Student Party will back Mike Lawler for student body president. If Lawler, who is now vice president, indicates his willingness to run, the nomination will be his.

The University Party faces more of a dilemna. At present two major candidates are showing interest in the top spot on the ticket. They are Bob Spearman and Larry McDevitt. McDevitt who now serves as Presidential Assistant, was thought of originally by the UP as a "natural" for the nomination this year. But Spearman, whose remarkable rise in the political ranks has caused party leaders to take notice, is gaining momentum each day. The UP nomination for this post will be a hotly contested one.

We couldn't help but over hear this conversation in the office yesterday:

Clotfelter: You know, Chuck, I had to shoot my dog, yesterday.

Wrye: Was he mad ?

Clot: Well, he wasn't too happy about it.

Women's Council Defends Convictions

Edit Missed Real Point

To the Editors,

With reference to Saturday's reporting of Women's Council actions of last Thursday night and to its accompanying editorial the Women's Council would like to clarify certain points which were obviously misunderstood and thus misrepresented in both stories.

The misinterpretation of the facts involved was not deliberate, we feel, but was probably an unconscious error on the part of the reporter. The Women's Council has and still does support the defendant's right to an open trial. We are aware of the difficulties involved in accurately reporting its proceedings when reporters are unfamiliar with women's rules and their interpretations.

This very fact was, contrary to the opinion expressed in Saturday's editorial, precisely one of the problems which the Women's Council anticipated. The Council fully realized that students should be better informed of its actions, particularly with reference to the Campus Code.

Saturday's editorial referred to the Campus Code as "ambiguous and often ridiculous." The Women's Council realizes there may be truth in that statement. However, we wish to affirm that as long as any women's rules exist on this campus, whether ridiculous or not, it is the students' obligation to uphold them. It is likewise the Women's Council's duty to deal with infractions of these rules out of its obligation both to the University and to its individual students. This must hold true as long as the rules exist and until they are changed if student government is to survive.

With these facts in mind, the Women's Council would like to clarify the position taken in the two cases referred to in Saturday's editorial.

The rule in question in both cases reads as follows: "Students returning late for any reason must telephone the residence administration before closing hours." Contrary to TAR HEEL interpretation, the main question was not the time when the girls actually returned to the dorm but the time which elapsed before the dorm administration was informed of the whereabouts of the two girls and thus to have their sign out slips changed.

The Women's Council hopes that this clarification will shed new light on the facts as misinterpreted in Saturday's TAR HEEL. We also hope that this incident will generate a more conscientious effort on the part of those reporting open trials to become more correctly informed of the issues in question.

The Women's Council sincerely tries to avoid "dirty linen." We recognize the right of open criticism, and we both deserve and expect it on any occasion in which our linen is truthfully and unmistakably soiled. However, it is our wish and a fair one we feel not to have our linen unduly dirtied in the future through such misunderstanding and misinterpretation.

Otelia's Letters: A Real Drag

To the Editors,

How naive can a college student get? Is Carolina the most mannerly campus anywhere or the most ludicrous? Stanley Cameron writes of Otelia Connor's intellectual prowess and "meticulously mediated mental manipulations." Aside from grossly crude alliteration, he displays a complete disability to evaluate Mrs. Connor. This lady has been parading around the campus as an intellectual prodigy with the arrogance and pride of a delphic oracle. Her BELLES LETTRES have for too long a time been cluttering the pages of this newspaper.

Stanley just does not know Otelia as I do. I'll bet he's never met her or witnessed her shenanigans in Lenoir Hall—where she daily holds office hours. Her office hours are periodically punctuated by forays around the dining hall during which she retrieves abandoned newspapers in her bright red beenie freely dispensing with her advice on all manner of conduct, such as nose-picking etiquette. Stanley also obviously lacks the experience of most males on campus of being subjected to one of Otelia's famous interviews.

Poor Stanley would put Otelia on a par with Dame Edith Sitwell. He refers to Dame Connor as "the most original stylist to appear on the Carolina scene in many years." The only real similarity between Dame Connor and Dame Sitwell is their great maturity. Dame Conner is original only in the degree of triteness and prosaicness of the subjects upon which she chooses to expound. Ways to celebrate Christmas, Christmas vacations, parallel book reading, paper-doll cutting, man-hole-covers on Franklin Street, and tree trimming—such intrigueing articles should more fittingly be reserved for the bottom drawer of her vanity stand. And as for Dame Connor's intellectual prowlings, dexterity, suaveness, inaugurations, evasive humor, maturity, insight, and pearl-throwings—this conglomeration of confused impressions by Stanley clearly indicates that he does not understand the lady. Only when he speaks of her cat-fighting detachment and hide-stinging tantrums does he show alittle insight into Dame Connor's character.

What to Stanley is a Socratean gadfly is to DTH readers only a Chapel Hillian gabby fly—a fly whose annoying bites could better be handled by the swish of a horse's tail.

Blind Poet Has A Rare Talent Of Expression

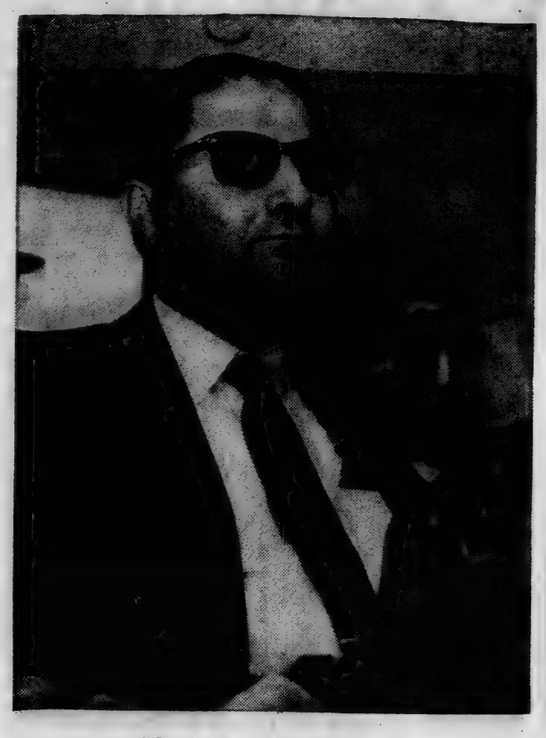
By BOB SAMSOT

"The writer of verse rubs hearts with another human being during an unusual moment of his life . . . He becomes the interpreter of the moment, empowered to communicate the feeling from heart to heart."

These are the words of Lew Barton, a rare man with a rare talent for being able to express himself and his feelings in a simple, stirring manner — a manner which smacks of the Mark Twain savor.

Part Lumbee Indian, Barton was raised in the Lumbee Indian Community, and his philosophy of life shows a rich carry-over from his people in his sincerity and warmth.

His poetry can be found mainly in two books: "Rhythm Little Lumbee" and "Way Out in Carolina," though he has written three books, a number of stories, and has contributed hundreds of articles and stories on various and sundry topics to magazines and newspapers.



But the most striking thing about Barton is his philosophy — one which is simple and sincere. A man whose main desire is to make others happy through his writings, Barton strives for communication in his works. He believes that this goal can be achieved only by simplicity of language and by using the perfect metric form for each work. A brief glance at any of his poems show him to be a master of human understanding and a man in whom feeling runs deep.

Lew Barton has known suffering and hardship to a greater degree than most persons will ever know.

In an automobile accident in 1950, Barton lost his vision. He was totally blind but has since regained light perception and a restricted field of one degree. He still only retains one percent of his original vision.

Though through all of his hardships, Lew has not been embittered at all. He says only that, "I have an awful lot to be thankful for."

Although always fascinated by poetry and literature, Barton has not had an easy path as far as education goes. As a youngster he was encouraged by his father to read, but his father believed that the only worthwhile books were practical ones. Lew seems to think that this is one of the reasons why poetry has held such a golden glow for him. Lew read everything he could get his hands on at every opportunity, and though the library at his school of Pembroke did not have a modern collection, it did have the classics and Lew exhausted them.

Blind Poet Lew Barton

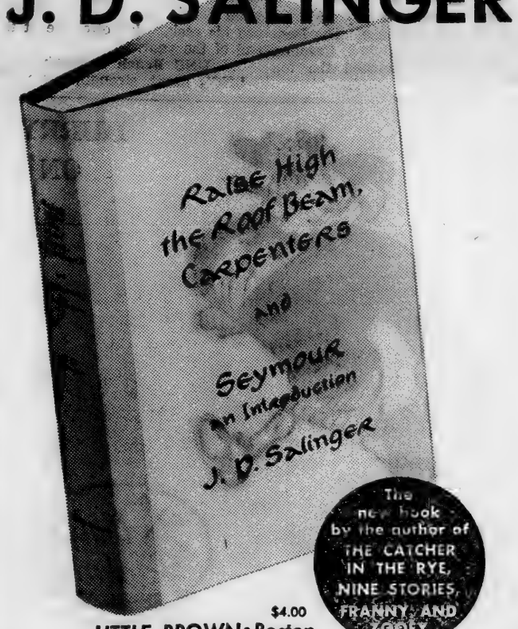
Since his younger days, he has read a vast number of books of all types but believes that the greatest masterpiece is yet to come. "We should start where Shakespeare left off," says Lew. "We shouldn't be satisfied with what we have. Language is growing and refining itself; the best lies ahead."

Lew got his college education at Pembroke State College and upon graduation was awarded the First Annual Marder Award for work done in the field of English. He had completed more than twice the number of credits required for a degree in that field and had maintained an over-all average of B plus.

Lew's main aim in life is "to spread good will among all men." A man who sold his first piece of writing to Street and Smith's "Wild West Weekly" at the age of 14, he has this to say about writing: "If we really like to write, we are interested in everything—especially in those close to us.

Communication is Lew's major aim in his writing. "The greatest feeling to me," says Lew, "is being able to talk to a man and have him talk back to me." "I've never met an uninteresting person. Communication is man's greatest gift from God."

Lew accomplishes his aim of communication in a way comparable to Mark Twain. His simple style and subtle philosophizing stir the feelings deeply and draw vivid pictures for the reader's mind. He writes from the clear blue at times; because something stirs his imagination or because of the mood he is in. He is a strong believer in the subconscious, and thinks that this is the chief power of creativity.



Lew's poems travel over every emotion, and include everything from humor to drama. Perhaps his strongest feelings are those of patriotism. In his poem "America, America" one can feel the strong emotion which drove Lew to volunteer for service before he was called, even though he had a wife and three children at home.

A man who has looked at life from many angles and has tasted bitterness and disappointment, as well as the darkness of frustration, Lew thinks that attending the University of North Carolina is the greatest thing that ever happened to him. "The spirit of friendliness that permeates the campus is the most refreshing thing that I have ever experienced," says Lew. "Although my contacts have been limited because of my handicap, everyone with whom I have come to know has been wonderful."

Looking back over his past life and his disappointments, Lew says that his life is on the upswing. Brushing up on his French and writing his thesis, Lew Barton is accomplishing something he has long wanted. "I have hungered to attend the University since I was a child."

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

The classiest backcourt combination in the Atlantic Coast Conference will make its final appearance in Chapel Hill against Virginia tonight.

Tar Heel co-captains Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet are among the six seniors who will play their last game in the friendly smallness of Woollen Gym.

UNC's honor roll of basketball players includes a number of outstanding guards — Tommy Kearns, Bob Cunningham, York Larese, Harvey Salz and Donnie Walsh — but the playmaking, scoring and defensive play of Brown and Poteet have contributed greatly to Carolina's winning basketball tradition. They have to be rated among the top UNC guard combinations in the school's history.

Four other Tar Heels — Peppy Callahan, Dieter Krause, Dick Vinroot and Charlie Burns — are playing their last season of basketball. Of the four, only Krause has been a starter. Krause averaged 4.1 as a part-time starter last season, sinking a deadly 57.1 per cent of his shots.

Dieter's father was a boxing champion and in some Carolina hearts, Dieter is too. He is is undefeated in his only bout — a freshman contest with Duke.

Dean Smith thinks highly of his reserves. "No group has given more effort than the non-starting seniors. They've been a loyal crew with wonderful spirit."

Two seasons ago — when two Tar Heels were suspended from several games of league play — Callahan volunteered and became the eighth man on the roster. He has been a valuable reserve since then.

Vinroot, the president of the senior class, is the biggest man on the team at 6-8. Burns is a fine shot, but at 6-2, he is one of the smallest forwards in the conference.

Six seniors is a big loss for any basketball team. They'll definitely be missed next season.

★ ★ ★

North Carolina basketball fans should have been especially pleased with Wichita's upset victory over Cincinnati Saturday night. Ed Jucker's top-ranked Bearcats had won 37 consecutive games over two seasons. They needed a win over Wichita to top UNC's 1956-57 streak of 37. Frank McGuire's national champs won 32 in a row, then added five more wins before falling to West Virginia in the winter of 1957.

Last week was an excellent example of the increasing number of strong basketball teams across the nation. Winning consistently is no longer possible for even the best teams.

Loyola, winner of 21 in a row, fell to Bowling Green, 92-75. Earlier in the week the then 2nd-ranked Chicagoans were pushed to the limit before edging Marquette by two points.

Other top ten teams — five — had similar bad luck during the week.

Even in the Atlantic Coast Conference where the Big Four usually take the top four positions, league balance is becoming more emphasized.

Virginia shocked N. C. State by winning two games from the Pack for the first time in the ACC's history. The Cavaliers have also defeated Maryland and given Duke, UNC and Wake Forest good scares.

Clemson was winless in league play and Wake Forest was unbeaten when the two teams met at Clemson. The Tigers began their climb from last place with a 71-70 upset over the Deacs.

* * *

South Carolina has pushed Carolina to the limit twice, before folding in the late stages of the game. Last year the Gamecocks trimmed UNC twice in three outings.

If the regular season play is any indication, all eight teams are capable of winning their opening round game in the tourney. The ACC's season is played in three days, not three months. The first 14 games are only warm-ups for the real thing and next week's eight-team party could turn out to be a surprise party for some unsuspecting coach.

LARRY BROWN, playmaking Tar Heel co-captain, is one of six UNC seniors who will be playing their last game in Woollen Gym tonight. The Tar Heels meet Virginia's Cavaliers, then travel to Duke Saturday for the last regular season contest.

ACC Standings Are Scrambled

The Atlantic Coast Conference will not be without excitement during its final week of regular season play.

The top three positions in the league standings have been sewed up by Duke, Wake Forest and North Carolina, but after that comes a five-way cluster of teams with losing records.

Clemson is currently in fourth place with a 4-7 mark, then comes North Carolina State, 5-9. Maryland, South Carolina and Virginia were tied for last place prior to last night's games with 3-9 records.

Tuesday night Duke went for its 13th straight conference win against Maryland and Clemson met South Carolina.

The bottom five teams are so close that several drawings may be needed in order to determine the seedings for the conference tournament next week.

North Caroloina could complicate the situation further by beating Duke Saturday and tying Wake Forest for second place. The Deacons currently stand 10-3, Carolina 9-3. Duke has clinched the top spot with its 12-0 record.

Brown, Poteet Play Final Home Game

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Billy Cunningham, fly-boy extraordinary, will have to surrender the spotlight tonight when UNC's seniors make their final home appearance in an 8:00 battle against Virginia.

Woollen Gym will echo a sad farewell to starting guards Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet and reserves Peppy Callahan, Dieter Krause, and Charlie Burns and Richard Vinroot.

Brown and Poteet have been two valuable jewels in Coach Dean Smith's UNC success this year. The backcourt pair have combined for slightly over 25 points per game, have usually had the toughest defensive assignments and have run the team machinery to a fine 13-4 record.

Brown, with a 13.7 average, is an odds-on-chaice for All-ACC honors—a reward long overdue. His running mate, Poteet, is not far behind (12.8) and it is his long, arching jumpers that Smith will count on tonight and Saturday against Duke.

Alongside Cunningham, Brown and Poteet this evening will gallop Bryan McSweeney and Charlie Shaffer. For Shaffer (averaging 10.4) it will be a welcome return to a basketball floor where he has not appeared in almost three weeks.

Virginia Is 3-9

Virginia's Cavaliers will bring a 3-9 conference record and three high-scoring ballplayers into the game tonight.

Although in last place much of the season, Virginia has, in Gene Engel, Chip Conner and Mac Caldwell, three of the best point-producers in the league.

All are consistently between 16 and 20 points per game, and Engel scored 25 in the Cavaliers' 86-81 loss to UNC earlier this season.

Coach Billy McCann's other two starters will be Mike Greenberg and either Kenny Goble or Gary Spohn.

The game will be somewhat of a finale for McCann. It will be his last in Woollen Gym as a Virginia coach since he has announced his resignation effective at the end of the year.

UNC Bench Strength

UNC's bench strength lies mostly in Mike Cooke, Ray Respess, Billy Galantai and Callahan. Galantai, because of an injury, and Cooke, because of a prolonged flu case, did not see much action in Charlotte over the weekend. Respess, on the other hand, played well in both games, taking Shaffer's starting spot in the opener against South Carolina.

Callahan, the red-headed passing ace, played a valuable role in that first game—and may have to be called upon tonight for some of the same.

The freshman teams of the two schools will play a preliminary contest at 6:00, but it may not be very close.

UNC's freshmen beat Virginia in their last meeting by a laughable margin of 50 points, 97-47. The Tar Babies are now 12-2 after a 78-72 win at Wilmington Saturday night.

Bob Bennett and John Yokley scored 20 and 19 points, respectively, in the victory.

BELGIUM VISITORS

UNC will be host to former King Leopold of Belgium and his wife, Princess Liliane, next Friday and Saturday.

Princess Liliane, who is interested in the area's outstanding medical facilities, will visit Memorial Hospital. King Leopold is especially interested in the computer facilities at the Research Triangle, UNC, and Duke.

Dr. Pierre Rijlant, professor of physiology and director of the Solvy Institute of Physiological Research in Brussels, and currently an advisor at the Reseach Triangle, said that the royal couple picked the Chapel Hill area because of the opportunity for personal contacts here and because of the Princess's interest in medical research and teaching.

March weather may get here before March does.

Trustees To 'Play Student' During Stay Here Next Week

The women members of the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina will visit the UNC campus February 25 and 26 to tour the newly completed University buildings and to meet UNC women students, as guests of these women students.

Special features of the trustees' visit will be a luncheon in the South Room of Lenoir Hall on Tuesday, February 26 at 12:30 p.m. Women students of the University will have lunch with the trustees.

Another feature will be a reception in the newly renovated women's residence hall, Cobb Dormitory, at 11:30 a.m. Tuesday, immediately preceding the luncheon. All women who are in the graduate school are urged to attend this reception to meet the trustees. The last campus visit by the woman members of the Board of Trustees was in February, 1960.

The trustees will arrive at UNC Monday afternoon, and will dine at 6 p.m. at Spencer Dormitory, the only women's residence hall with its own dining room.

At 7:45 p.m., the trustees will witness a women students program explaining women's campus organizations to be given at the home of Consolidated University President and Mrs. William C. Friday.

Members of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority will give a coffee in honor of the trustees at their sorority house at 9:45 p.m. UNC student officers will also attend the reception.

While on campus, the trustees will stay in women's residence halls and will attend dormitory house meetings held in each dormitory after closing hours. At these meetings, the trustees will witness the self-governing procedures of each dormitory.

The trustees will inspect the University's new language building, Dey Hall, at 9:45 a.m., Tuesday. Dr. Sterling Stoudemire, professor and chairman of the Department of Romance Languages, will take the trustees on a tour of the building. Julian Mason, assistant professor of English and director of Student Financial Aid, will address the trustees on financial aid, and Joe Galloway, director of Student Placement, will speak on placement.

Following the 12:30 luncheon in Lenoir Hall, the trustees will tour Ehringhaus Dormitory, one of the two new men's dormitories completed last summer.

The trustees will complete their visit with a tour of the newly completed School of Public Health. All deans, heads of administrative divisions, and Consolidated University officials will meet the trustees at this time during the tour of the new building.

Arrangements for the trustees' visit are being handled through the office of Katherine Kennedy Carmichael, Dean of Women.

UNC To Host Merit Scholar Finalists

The University is host today and tomorrow to 75 of North Carolina's outstanding high school seniors. These students are a group of National Merit Scholarship semi-finalists who are to be shown the various aspects of student life at Carolina.

This two-day program is being sponsored jointly by a Student Government committee, under the chairmanship of Robin Britt, and the Faculty Committee on Honors. Its purpose is to honor the semi-finalists for their achievement and to acquaint them with the opportunities that are open to superior students on the UNC campus.

The students arrived last night and many were taken to the UNC-Virginia basketball game. Others attended the Model UN Session and the free flick, "Harvest of Shame." All are being housed in Ehringhaus dormitory.

On both Thursday and Friday mornings the students will engage in discusions with faculty members and honors students about the University's academic program. They will also visit several classes and be taken on tours of the campus.

This afternoon, small groups of the students will meet with both Chancellor Aycock and Dr. Julian Mason of the office of Student Aid.

Tonight the students have been invited to attend sessions of the Student Legislature and the UN Mock Assembly in order to give them a glimpse of the activities of Student Government on campus.

On Friday afternoon at 2:30 p.m., there will be a panel discussion on the Honors Program led by Dr. A. G. Engstrom, chairman of the Faculty Committee on Honors. Afterwards there will be a reception in Graham Memorial at which the students will have a chance to talk with faculty members and campus leaders.

To conclude the two-day program, a banquet will be given on Friday evening in Lenoir Hall. The featured speaker will be Mr. James R. Hawkins, principal of Harding High School in Charlotte, and a member of the National Merit Scholarship Corporation Advisory Board. The UNC Glee Club will also provide entertainment.

This is the first year such a program has been attempted and it is hoped that it will be successful in attracting many of North Carolina's most promising high school graduates to the University.

Ullman To Attend Zurich Meet To Tap Prizewinner

The 1963 winners of the never before awarded International Balzan Foundation prizes, similar in scope to the Nobel Foundation prizes, will be selected with the help of a UNC professor emeritus.

B. L. Ullman, Kenan Professor Emeritus of Classics, will attend the February 26 meeting of the Committee on Prizes of the Balzan Foundation to select the prize winners. The meeting will be held in Zurich, Switzerland, the main headquarters of the foundation.

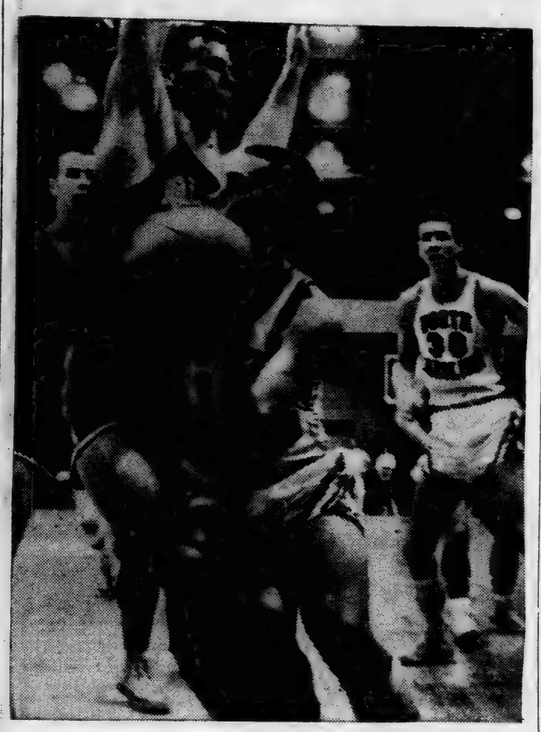
Winners of the Balzan prizes will be announced on March 1 in Zurich.

Five Balzan prizes are scheduled to be awarded to outstanding world figures. They are: one for "peace, humanity and fraternity among the people of the world;" two in "letter, philosophy and the arts;" and two in the sciences.

Balzan prizes will be awarded for the first time in the areas of the arts and sciences. The categories of these awards are: music, history, mathematics, and biology.

Following the official inauguration of the foundation on March 1, last year, the foundation awarded its first peace prize of about $250,000 to the Nobel Foundation.

UNC's Prof. Ullman is one of two U. S. members of the foundation's Committee on Prizes. A total of 24 leading world scholars are members of this committee.



Following the announcement of the Balzan prize winners, Prof. Ullman will journey to London, England, where he will give a series of three lectures on manuscripts at the University of London, March 6-8.

The International Balzan Foundation is named after the late Eugenio Balzan, former director of the Milanese newspaper "Corriere della Sera."

When Balzan died, he left in his will provisions for his daughter to establish a foundation dedicated to peace and the recognition of outstanding world figures.

Balzan's daughter died in 1957 before the foundation became a reality. Angela left a will stating the provisions for the foundation, and it has been set up according to these wishes.

UNC's Future Topic Of Morgan Speech

Dr. William M. Jordan, Director of the Political Affairs Division at the U.N., and Edward P. Morgan, a distinguished news commentator, wil laddress the first day's sessions of the Middle South Model United Nations General Assembly here today.

Jordan will discuss "The Future of the United Nations" at a luncheon banquet for the 300 assembly delegate at noon in the Carolina Inn. Morgan will address a Memorial Hall assembly of students, delegates and townspeople "On the United Nations" at eight o'clock.

Committee meetings will get under way at ten o'clock this morning and continue throughout most of the day. The committees and the locations of the meetings are as follows: Ad Hoc (Carroll Hall); Legal (210 Gardner); Economics (209 Hanes); Political (210 Hanes) and Social (Gerrard).

Jordan has been a member of the U.N. Secretariet since the establishment of the United Nations in 1946. A citizen of the United Kingdom, he has received distinction as a historian of twentieth century diplomacy.

Appointed to attend the San Francisco Conference which formulated the UN, Jordan was actively involved making arrangements for the first meetings of the Security Council. He served for ten years as Chief of the Pacific Settlements Section before assuming his present duties.

Morgan has been reporting news throughout the world for more than 20 years. He has won many awards for his outstanding news coverage, among them a citation from the Overseas Press Club for his coverage of the Geneva Summit Conference.

His radio program, "Edward P. Morgan and the News," has received the Peabody Award for the outstanding radio program in 1956 and was cited by the National Education Association for Better Radio and TV as the outstanding radio program of 1961.

Morgan's commentary for his seven o'clock television show tonight will originate from station WTIK in Durham. Morgan will also visit the Bulls Head bookshop, in the basement of the library, Friday morning at ten o'clock to autograph copies of his new book, CLEARING THE AIR.

Other speakers in the three-day program include Dr. George Taylor, associate professor of history at UNC. He will speak to an open assembly on Friday at 8 p.m. on "Moral and Psychological Aspects of the World Peace Problems."

Three-hundred students from 61 colleges and universities are expected to attend this assembly, which is sponsored by the Collegiate Council for the United Nations (CCUN) and the UNC YMCA.

"We hope to make the workings of the UN known to college students and to awaken more international conscienceness," said Hugo Spechar, secretary-general of the assembly. Spechar, born in Santa Cruz, Bolivia, is in the honors program in economics at UNC.

In addition to Morgan's address, the majority of the Mock UN meetings will be open to the general public.

Dormitory Spotlight: On B-V-P

Battle-Vance-Pettigrew seems to be an entirely new dorm this year.

Led by President Steve Lehrer, residents improved their intramural standing, completely renovated their social room and started a weekly forum.

Intramural manager Larry Edwards, who also doubles as IDC representative, leads the BVP teams. The dorm now stands tenth over-all, an improvement of nine places over last year.

Vice-President and Social Chairman Marty Lorber has scheduled a cabin party for late March. The dorm social room was recently doubled in size, and a new television and new furniture were added.

The "Sunday Forum," which will feature a guest speaker every Sunday afternoon, will begin this week. Dr. Earl Wallace of the Political Science Dept. will lead the discussion.

"Our secretary, Steve Greenberg, and the Resident Adviser, Jim Scott, have done an excellent job this year," commented President Lehrer.

Di-Phi Defeats Resolution For Greek Officers In IDC

By CHUCK NEELY

The Di-Phi Literary Society defeated a resolution "advocating the right of all dormitory residents to hold any office in the IDC", Tuesday night, after a spirited debate.

The resolution, which was introduced by Reps. Nat Dean and Charles Neely, was rejected by the Society by a vote of 6-9, and by the Society and guests by a vote of 7-10.

The debate hinged on a section of the Bylaws of the Interdormitory Council which states that no fraternity affiliates may belong to the IDC or hold the office of dorm president.

Supporters of the resolution maintained that it was unfair and discriminatory not to allow fraternity members who live in dorms to participate in the IDC. It was further argued that since fraternity members who lived in dorms paid the dorm social fees, and since they were subject to all of the dorm rules and regulations, they should be allowed to help determine, in the councils of the IDC, how their funds should be spent. Finally, it was pointed out that this step could help to heal the much publicized dorm-frat breech.

The opposition to this resolution based most of their argument on the grounds that fraternity members on the IDC would of necessity often be torn between loyalty to the IDC and loyalty to their fraternity, and that in the final analysis, their dorms would suffer. It was also noted that fraternity members would owe their first allegiance to their fraternity rather than their dorm in matters of meetings, time and work. Finally it was said that fraternity members had no real interest in dorm social life since their own social life was provided by their fraternity. Cond. Rep. Gordon Appell alluded also to the belief that if the resolution was passed, it was conceivable that the fraternities could come to dominate the IDC.

Other business of the evening included the induction of four new members and the appropriation of funds to provide a reception in Di Hall tonight for the Latin American delegations to the Model U. N. Assembly.

The four Conditional Representatives who were elevated to full Representatives are Ernst Schwintzer, Richard Edwards, James Wagner, and Gordon Appell.

The next meeting of the Di-Phi was scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 26, at 7:30. At that time, officers for the Spring Semester will be nominated and elected.

HENRY L. SCOTT requests the honor of your presence Friday night at eight o'clock in Memorial Hall when GM presents "Concerto in Fun." According to a GM spokesman, Scott is one performer who is temperamental about his audience, for the more eccentric they are, the better his show as he tries to make the audience a part of it. Scott loves his audiences and finds it difficult to perform before movie or television cameras because he feels he then loses the all-important elements— the eyes, ears and laughter— that mean the audience is having a good time.

GM INTERVIEWS

Interviews for Graham Memorial President for 1963 - 1964 school year will be held Tuesday and Wednesday, Feb. 26 and 27, from 2 to 3:30 p.m. A sign-up sheet will be at the information desk. All applicants are asked to make appointments.

SOPHOMORE CABINET

The Sophomore Class cabinet will meet tonight at eight o'clock in Roland Parker I of GM.

SENIOR INVITATIONS

Senior Class commencement invitations will be on sale today and tomorrow, from 9-4 in Y-Court. Thursday and Friday are the last two days invitations can be obtained.

"BEAT DOOK" COMBO PARTY

The "Embers" will highlight this weekend's entertainment slate as they "swing for the campus" tomorow night at 8 at the Homestead. Complete directions to the Homestead will appear in tomorrow's DTH.

This big dance is sponsored by the Junior Class, the same group which has presented several other combo parties this year.

Charlie Shaffer, Jr., Class president, notes this is the first big party this semester.

Admission price is $1.00 and setups will be provided.

President Allen To Address SL Tonight

A State of the Campus address by Student Body President Inman Allen and several financial bills, including one to appropriate $360 to pay three DTH reporters will occupy Student Legislature tonight when it opens its weekly session. The meeting will open at 7 p.m. instead of the regular time.

Allen's address is expected to concern a possible re-organization of student government committees. One of Allen's campaign planks was a streamlining of the campus bureaucracy with an eye toward increasing efficiency.

The DTH bill, introduced by Rufus Edminston (SP), would make available $360 from the unappropriated balance of Legislative funds to pay three reporters $120 each for a 12-week period. The Finance Committee of Legislature reported the bill out of committee favorably and it is expected to come to a vite tonight.

Other legislation expected to come to a vote includes a bill to appropriate $25 to the Freshman Class for operating and publicity expenses. This bill was also passed on favorably by the Finance Committee.

A bill to appropriate $25 to print the names and addresses of student legislators for posting in the dorms was reported out of the Finance Committee unfavorably.

Four financial bills have been withdrawn:

—A $50 request to print copies of legislative bills for posting in dormitories.

—A $50 request for a discretionary fund to be used to improve communications between legislature and the student body.

A $100 request for additional funds for the campus entertainment committee.

A $100 request to defray travel expenses of national merit finalists to the UNC campus.

SG Achievement Competition Set

For the seventh consecutive year, the U. S. National Student Association will sponsor the Richard Welling Student Government Achievement Competition. The competition has been designed by the USNSA to provide recognition for student governments that have developed certain undergraduate programs.

These programs should stimulate individual students to "develop an awareness and a knowledge of their responsibilities as future leaders in society."

Entries must consist of a report on the program that is being submitted. The entry categories include Academic Affairs, The Total Community, Human Relations and Special Projects. All entries must be submitted before May 20, 1963. Further information may be obtained from the Student Government office, 213 Graham Memorial.

Three Professors To Mull Common Market Problems

A debate on the European Common Market will be conducted tonight at nine o'clock in Gerrard Hall.

The discussion will examine the French and Anglo-American positions in regard to Britain's entry and the future shape of the Common Market. The program is sponsored by the Graham Memorial Current Affairs Committee.

Participants for the debate are James C. Ingram of the Economics Department, who will speak on the Economics aspects, Spencer Tucker of the Modern Civilization Department, who will argue the French position, and William Geer, also of the History Department, who will argue the Anglo-American position.

Planning Expert To Give 2 Talks

Henry Fagin, one of this country's foremost authorities on transportation planning, will give two lectures during his visit to the University.

During the 1950's he was Planning Director and later Executive Director of the Regional Plan Association of New York. From June, 1959, to August, 1962 he occupied the position of Executive Director of the Penn-Jersey Transportation Study where he had top staff responsibility for this 3.5 million dollar, nine-county, bi-state project. He is presently Professor of Planning in the Department of Urban and Regional Planning at the University of Wisconsin.

Fagin's appearances here are sponsored by the Department of City and Regional Planning and the Planners' Forum. The first talk will be held in 115 Ackland at two o'clock Friday, and will be entitled "Emerging Methodologies of Transportation Planning."

The second, to be given at eight o'clock in 115 Ackland, will be a general lecture in transportation planning, with an emphasis on policies planning. The public is invited to both discussions.

SCHOLARSHIP COMMITTEE

The Junior Scholarship Committee will meet at five o'clock today in the Woodhouse Room of GM.

King Leopold Here Friday

By PETE IVEY

The Royal Princess will devote her time to the heart, while the King will concentrate his attention on electronic "brains" and cosmic rays.

That is the schedule for the Chapel Hill tour of King Leopold, former monarch of Belgium, and for his wife, Princess Liliane, when they come to North Carolina Friday.

King Leopold and Princess Liliane will go on separate sightseeing journeys while at the University. She will go with heart specialists and see the Health Center. He will view the Univac 1105 and the Cosmic Ray facilities, escorted by scientists in physics and mathematics.

The Princess has expressed an interest in heart research. She will inspect cardiac facilities in Memorial Hospital and the UNC School of Medicine, including the internationally-renowned research in hemophilia, known as the "disease of Kings."

The bleeding disease research, related to heart ailments, is conducted by Drs. Kenneth Brinkhouse, John Graham, eGorge Penick and others. Problems in clotting and anti-clotting are probed. Facets connected with coronary thrombosis are objects of research. In the bleeding disease research a colony of dogs afflicted with hemophilia are central research subjects.

Dr. Ernest Craige, chief of cardiology in the School of Medicine, will be in charge of the tour in the hospital for Princess Liliane.

King Leopold's interest in electronic computers and in space research will take him to Phillips Hall which houses the $2.4 million Univac 1105 Data Automation System, now in its fourth year of operation on the campus. The Univac is the prime unit of the University's Computation Center. Data processing includes rapid provision of large amounts of information useful in science, business and other research, not only for the University here, but for other institutions in the state, including the Research Triangle Institute, and business and industrial organizations, the federal government, National Defense projects, and especially the U. S. Census Bureau.

The Physics Department here is involved in cosmic ray research—Physicists here are perfecting a device that will be sent up in an artificial space satellite and will be used to determine the nature and composition of cosmic rays. Kenan Professor of Physics Everett D. Palmatier will show King Leopold the cosmic ray experimentations.

President William C. Friday, Chancellor William B. Aycock, Dean of the Faculty James L. Godfrey and others will meet with King Leopold and Royal Princess Liliane and others during their stay. The royal couple will be guests of the University at the Carolina Inn. They will remain at the Inn overnight and depart Saturday morning.

Time of arrival of the plane bringing King Leopold and Princess Liliane to North Carolina is 8:55 a.m. Friday. They will be met at Raleigh-Durham Airport, and driven by car to Chapel Hill where they will arrive at the Carolina Inn at around 9:30 a.m. Tours of the campus will follow, with a luncheon at the Morehead Planetarium. The afternoon will be devoted to the tour of the Research Triangle and Duke University.

Hot Air Lives, Spread The Word

It has often been said, and just as often demonstrated, that a great deal of foul, hot air flows freely from the mouth of many a fine politician.

* * *

We were astounded, indeed, shocked, to read of Representative John Kerr's rude and uncalled-for remarks to the acting president of A&T College, when the latter presented his school's budgetary requests to the Joint Appropriations Committee in Raleigh.

Even if participation of A&T students in various sit-ins was valid grounds for withholding state appropriations from that school, which it is not, certainly a fine politician like Mr. Kerr should have either the ability or the tact to state such a belief in a manner not quite so crass as his ". . . yet you come here to white people and beg for money . . . We're getting tired of this . . . ."

If Representative Kerr thinks that Negro students' active support of sit-ins constitutes "action that is an anticipation of antagonism between the races," we would submit to that fine politician the hypothesis that his thoughtless grumbling has magnificently palel any significance which the sit-ins might have had for racial antagonism.

Indeed, statements such as those made by Kerr (not too often encountered outside of fictive works of a tortured nature) must be given credit for setting racial relations back that proverbial 100 years.

* * *

And yet, there is more cause for concern about those remarks than their mere clumsy rudeness. For if Representative Kerr, or any other state legislator, thinks that participation in sit-ins is justification for cancelling allocation of state funds to any school whose students take part in such an action, well then there will be many more disappointed presidents who are yet to appear before the joint Appropriations Committee, and a good number of them will be white.

Students and faculty members of Carolina, State, and, no doubt, Women's College have all been known to have supported and participated in sit-ins and picket lines to protest segregation policies of various establishments.

And we would hope that if the situation were to demand further action of a similar peaceful nature, that each and every one of them, as enlightened citizens, would rise to the task again.

Let no student or academic institution be intimidated by that inevitable hot air. (CW)

The Young Extremists

One of the most impressive efforts of the "Young Conservative" political push came recently in California, where the 13,000-member state Young Republican organization succumbed to young Goldwaterites.

Against the urgings of the chairman of California's Republican central committee the YRC's elected a slate of officers which had sought (and gotten) support from the John Birch Society. Immediately after the Birchite victory officers of the 4,000-member college federation of young Republicans (a part of the state YRC organization) bolted the YRC and asked their members to follow them. This might lead to a general split within the state GOP, with the organization taking a relatively "liberal" or "moderate" stand.

The problems facing the young Californians is but a reflection of the national GOP dilemma. Where to go?—Right, left, or just sit down where they are. In most of the North the YRC organizations seem to be more liberal, more pro-Rockefeller than the party itself; in the Midwest, South and other conservative strongholds the Young Republicans tend to be rabidly Birchite—in both cases swinging to the opposite extremes of the older Republicans.

For the YRs, like the GOP itself, the alternatives are: (a) to repudiate the conservative element and get lackluster support from them as a result; (b) to repudiate the liberal-moderate element, and attempt to put over Goldwater policies in the face of an overwhelming liberal, moderate and moderate conservative opposition; or (c) try to live as a "party divided", like the Democrats. . . . But neither alternative offers much hope for 1964, or until party makes its choice and sticks by it. (JC)

More Comprehensive Youth Program

By The Collegiate Press Service

WASHINGTON — President Kennedy has presented to Congress this year the most varied and comprehensive youth program in the history of the United States.

The President's proposals range from programs providing youth with an opportunity to serve abroad in the Peace Corps, increased federal scholarship aid, the creation of a domestic "National Service Corps" to promotion of a committee for the physical development of American youth.

The President singled out the problems of young people for priority treatment in the White House legislative program this year. In his State of the Union address before the new Congress, the President mentioned his youth program before all others, saying "First we need to strengthen our Nation by investing in our youth: The future of any country which is dependent on the will and wisdom of its citizens is damaged, and irreparably damaged, whenever any of its children is not educated to the fullest extent of his capacity from grade school through graduate school.

"In addition, there is no reason why one million young Americans, out of school and out of work, should all remain unwanted and often untrained on our city streets when their energies could be put to good use.

"Finally, the overseas success of our Peace Corps volunteers, most of them young men and women carrying skills and ideas to needy people, suggests the merit of a similar corps serving our own community needs: in mental hospitals, on Indian reservations, in centers of the aged or for young delinquents, in schools for the illiterate or the handicapped. As the idealism of our youth has served world peace, so can it serve the domestic tranquilty. . . ."

* * *

PROJECT NUMBER ONE, the Peace Corps, was begun in 1961, and has since grown from a few hundred volunteers to a force of more than 10,000 men and women. First looked upon with a great deal of skepticism by members of Congress, it is expected that this year's request for a Corps budget increase will be passed enthusiastically. Target budget for the next fiscal year: $100 million.

Another very significant youth bill that this year's Congress is expected to act on is the Youth Employment Act of 1963. This bill, proposed by Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn) is a two-point program to assist in the resolution of youth unemployment and to give young people an opportunity to contribute to the development of their communities through useful programs of work and construction.

The proposed legislation would set up a Youth Conservation Corps and programs for local youth unemployment problems. The measure was passed in part by the House last year, but has not yet been acted on by the Senate.

Senator Humphrey cites rather substantial figures in backing up his proposal. Unemployment statistics of the Department of Labor show that in November, 1962, for example, total national unemployment increased from 5.5 to 5.9 per cent of the working force, and that the adidtion of some 150,000 young adults to the unemployment roles in that month brought about the increase.

In fact, there were more than 800,000 young people out of work during the month of November, a total comprising almost one-fifth of all those unemployed in the United States. And it has been estimated that by 1970, three million new young workers will be seeking work in the country.

The Youth Conservation Corps idea (YCC) would primarily provide constructive, educational employment for out-of-work youth between the ages of 16 and 21, in the national forest and park systems. Humphrey says that this would be no mere make-work plan either: besides the good done the participants, he says, it is estimated that there is currently an eight billion dollar backlog of need work in conservation, increasingly important to the well-being of the nation.

YCC enrollees, besides working in the forests and parks, would receive approximately 10 hours weekly of formal schooling, to be arranged with local school districts. When a YCC enrollee completes his "tour of duty" which is expected to run from six months to two years, he will be sent home, and located in a useful job by state and federal agencies.

The second part of the senator's proposal, the Youth Area Employment Program, would be set up in cooperation with state and local governments, developing programs whereby qualified trainees could be placed in a wide variety of public service positions. Incentive and control of these programs would remain decentralized, the enrollees would be men and women between 16 and 22. Work would be done by the enrollees in libraries, schools, hospitals, welfare agencies, child care and recreation programs, and similar public services.

Senator Humphrey has said that he intends to push for passage of his Youth Employment Act before the Easter Congressional recess. The bill has been accorded priority by administration and party leaders in the executive and legislative branches.

DOMESTIC CORPS

The spectacular success of the Peace Corps has inspired the administration to try essentially the same type of program in the needy areas of the nation. A number of student and educational groups have urged the creation of such a "domestic peace corps" for several years.

An administration team has done considerable research on the feasibility of such a program, concluding that it would be worthwhile. The National Student Association will sponsor, with administration cooperation, a national conference of students on the idea and college students' reactions to the program, at the end of this month in Washington. It is expected that many of the student's suggestions will be incorporated in the final proposal to Congress, which is expected this summer.

Reaction to the proposal in Congress has been "very favorable," an administration spokesman said last week. It is expected in Washington that an experimental unit of the domestic corps, perhaps two or three hundred volunteers, will be created by executive order within the near future. The corps' operating budget for its first year is expected to be around $6 million.

Student reaction to questionnaires distributed to campuses has been enthusiastic, the administration says. Backers of the proposal are confident that volunteers for the new corps will be easy to come by.

The most commonly heard suggested title for the domestic corps is the "National Service Corps" — but Congress could easily change that. Corpsmen will work in Indian reservations in the West, in depressed, areas, in centers for juvenile delinquents, homes for the aged, and a wide variety of public service occupations. Applicants will have to be over 21 and possess some skill.

Requests for National Service Corps assistance projects will be by local or state initiative, with the local or state government expected to put up at least part of the cost of the particular project. Although the National Service Corps has not yet been relegated to any governmental agency, it is expected that it will be administered by the Department of Labor or the mammoth Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Many of President Kennedy's closest advisers have participated in the planning of the National Service Corps concept, including Attny. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, Interior Secretary Stewart L. Udall and others.

AID FOR EDUCATION

The administration has yet to present its complete educational platform to Congress, but it is already apparent that this will be the first major administration legislative program dealing specifically with the problems of youth and education in the country's history.

Last year a $2.4 billion college aid bill including construction grants and student loans, was defeated in the House. In fact, out of 22 educational bills introduced into the last Congress, only two received favorable action. The administration, however, claims to have much better hopes for the current session.

DTH Stands Accused Again

More On Other's Ideas

To the Editors:

The following paragraph is what should have been printed as the sixth one of my essay printed under "Own Ideas—Or Another's?":

If that which is your is that which you earn by your own effort, then it is not true that you have no thoughts which are your own if knowledge is something more than photographic or phonographic memorization—even memorizing requires your effort. Anything more than mere memorization which you gain from someone else's expressions—printed, spoken or otherwise — or your own experiences is certainly your own. Is understanding merely memorizing? Is thinking nothing but reciting?

Oh, by the way, if you understand what I have written, the knowledge is yours. Use it.

Writer Objects To DTH Ethics

To the Editors:

I think Henry Mayer and the Tar Heel have violated the ethics of journalism in my by-lined article on the Toronto Exchange entitled "Confederates Join Canadians."

It was edited (I have no objection to that) and then turned over to Henry Mayer, without my knowledge, for re-writing.

Henry then cut out several paragraphs and names to substitute other names and material. He added an unnecessary reference to drinking and four column inches on HIMSELF. This last was of a political nature that will be offensive to our Canadian friends. He also added an unflattering picture of the woman with whom he discussed the Nuclear question.

I specifically left out references such as these.

When I objected later, Henry told me he would take them out but he went ahead and had them published anyway.

It seems to me that Henry is just out to get more publicity for himself as he did when he refused to pay William Buckley.

I don't want my name to be on his comments and personal publicity all of which he prepared.

REFLECTIONS

FIGURES FOR 1963

According to the State Plan, Soviet national income in 1963, the fifth year of the seven-year plan, will be some 46 per cent higher than in 1958. To appreciate the full significance of the increase we shall draw the following comparison: It took the United States 25 years, Britain 28 and France 40 years to raise their national incomes 46 per cent as against those in 1913.

Soviet industrial output will be eight per cent greater in 1963 than in 1962, which means that the plan for 1959-1963 will be topped by 35 billion rubles. Whether this is much or little can be judged from the following example: 35 billion rubles are enough to build 12,000 shoe factories, 7,000 meat-packing plants, or 7,700 state grain farms.

The chemical industry, too, will develop rapidly this year. Its annual output will increase 17 per cent, the production of artificial and synthetic fibers will rise 14 per cent, and that of plastics and synthetic resins 25 per cent.

The year 1963 is one of industrial retooling and further improvement in all branches of the economy, primarily industry. The Soviet national economy will receive 11.6 billion rubles' worth of new equipment this year.

Basic funds of industry will have increased 70 per cent in the 1959-1963 period. By the end of 1963 the "young" basic funds (commissioned during those five years) will comprise half of all the basic funds of Soviet industry. In 1963 Soviet industry will have a larger stock of machine tools in operation than American industry.

During the first four years of the seven-year plan more than 3,700 large industrial enterprises have been put into operation in the Soviet Union.

Capital investments in the national economy will grow by 33.5 billion rubles in 1963. Due to these additional investments the increase in power-generating capacities in one year will equal the aggregate capacity of four gigantic power stations the size of the Lenin Hydroelectric Power Station on the Volga.

'Island' Has Rare Beauty

By NEILL CLARK
Review: "The Island" at the Rialto, Durham.

Once and a while a film comes along that is so unique that it stands apart from its contemporaries in a classification which makes comparisons irrelevant. It passes over considerations of a temporal nature and stands at once in a direct relationship with the universal. "The Island" is such a film.

It is a cinematic poem of rare beauty achieved without a word of dialogue, relying solely upon sight and sound images to tell a moving story of man against the earth. A Japanese couple and their two young sons move to an island that is completely without water. This necessitates immumerable trips back and forth across the waterway to carry buckets from a rain ditch on the shore to their crops on the island hillside. The slow, ponderous process is shown in continual swaying rhythms as the small boat glides across the water, as the man and wife climb slowly up the hillside, stooped under the burden of the precious liquid.

There are many sequences of this basic activity so that it seems repetitious to a westerner, but each sequence is slightly different from the last and the cumulative effect is to make the viewer feel the tedium that is an essential part of their life.

This is relieved by breath-taking evocuation of spring—the wheat waving in the wind, two butterflies in a flickering love-dance over the sea, and beautiful Japanese cherry trees fluttering against the sky.

But the film is more than just a beautifully photographed story of daily life. There is intense drama as one of the boys is taken sick while the parents are on the mainland. They see their son signallying frantically from the island and arrive to find the boy burning with fever. The father finds a doctor but they arrive too late, their oldest son is dead.

From this point to the end of the film is one of the most moving experiences I have ever had. The boys school mates disembark from a boat and wind in a slow serpentine movement up the hill, heads bowed. The coffin containing the child's body is borne to the grave by his mother and father. One by one the children come forward to throw a bouquet into the grave. They depart and the young son watches them slowly circle the island.

At night the bereaved mother stands on the hillside facing the shore where only brilliant skyrockets briefly break the silence and the darkness.

The next day in the fields the dam of repressed emotion breaks and she throws the bucket of water to the ground and violently begins to uproot the crops, while her husband stands silently watching, his face taut with mute compassion. She falls to the ground crying hysterically, then slowly looks up to her husband. Slowly he dips his water cup into the bucket and once again waters the crops.

This film, through its beautiful images, is an unforgettable experience. It is something one will carry with him for a lifetime.

Tar Heels Down Va., 85-73

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's Tar Heels tightened the reins and pulled away from a determined bunch of Cavaliers in the second half last night, gaining an 85-73 Atlantic Coast Conference victory.

The horses leading the charge were Carolina's hustling guards, Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet, and the ACC's sophomore sensation, Billy Cunningham.

Cunningham, the team' scoring leader all season, hit exactly 50 per cent of his shots and added five foul shots for 27 points. The Kangaroo Kid leaped for 23 rebounds as the homestanders led the visitors from Charlottesville in that department, 51-34.

But the co-captains, playing their last game in Woollen Gym, gave Billy more than enough help.

Brown hit 18 points, eight from the foul line and Poteet added 15, hitting half of his 14 tries from the floor. The nifty backcourt combo led the fast break attack which sent the Vavaliers down for the second time this season.

When Brown and Poteet left the court with 1:30 remaining in the contest, the Chapel Hill fans gave them a tremendous standing ovation which ovelapped into thirty seconds of playing time.

The Tar Heels moved for an 8-8 tie early in the game into a 22-14 lead after ten minutes.

But then the Cavaliers began to make it a contest, just as they did at Charlottesville when UNC won, 86-81. They closed the gap to 22-21 before Cunningham hit six straight points. Carolina again increased its lead, this time to 38-29, but Virginia dropped in the last three field goals of the half and was down only 38-35 at the intermission.

The last-place Cavaliers continued to move and eased into a 41-40 lead after three minutes of play. Poteet hit a jumper, then Gene Engel countered with his second straight jump shot to make it 43-42.

Cunningham then swished a soft jumper and Brown added two foul shots and the Tar Heels never lost their lead.

Brown's defensive play was the sparkplug that started the Tar Heels on their game-clinching drive. With UNC leading 46-45, the New York senior stole a Virginia pass and hit Bryan McSweeney on a fast-break layup. Seconds later he hit Cunningham on another fast break to make it 50-45.

The Tar Heels scored eight more points while Virginia got only a free throw from Hunter Conner. Poteet hit two jumpers, Brown a sparkling layup and McSweeney two foul shots and UNC led, 58-46. The lead wavered around the 10-point mark for the remainder of the game.

The lead was stretched to 15, at 77-62, with four minutes to go. When Brown and Poteet left the game Dean Smith's men were ahead by a comfortable margin of 80-66.

Carolina's four non-starting seniors—Peppy Callahan, Dick Vinroot, Charlie Burns and Dieter Krause—along with Mike Cooke, finished the game. Burns hit a twisting layup for the last UNC field goal in Woollen Gym this season. Cooke's foul shot with seven seconds remaining completed the game's scoring.

Gene Engel led the Virginia scoring with 16 points and Mac Caldwell contributed 15. Virginia's other high-scorer, dogged by Brown during most of the game, hit only three of 14 shots for nine points.

The Cavs outshot UNC in both halves and wound up with a 47.1 field goal mark, 33 of 70 shots. Carolina made one less basket in 72 tries for 44.4 per cent, but the overwhelming rebound advantage and 14 more points from the foul line were too much for UVA.

UNC's freshman team romped to its 14th victory in the preliminary, taking an 89-53 victory over the Virginia frosh. The Tar Babies shot 54.1 per cent from the floor and were lead by big Bob Bennett with 29 points and 15 rebounds. Johnny Yokley finished with 20 and Ray Hassell tallied 18.

Dorm Blue Favorites Advance In Playoffs

By STUART BALL

Teague and Craige, co-favorites in the Dormitory Blue Division of the Intramural Basketball playoffs, continued their winning ways as each advanced another notch in the pairings.

Teague, which has now won six straight games in league play, waltzed by Joyner, 48-31, with Junior Edge leading the attack. Edge got 17 points and was again the offensive standout. Craige displayed a balanced attack and overwhelmed AFROTC, 58-13. Osie Faison and Dan Fowler led as a total of four Craige men hit double figures.

In two Fraternity Blue League contests SAE topped AK Psi, 26-22, and DU won over Sigma Nu, 36-28. Ned Martin led SAE to a semi-final round berth with 10 points. Larry Jenkins was high man for DU in their first round win over Sigma Nu with 15 points.

The Chi Psi Psychoes advanced to the semi-final round of the Fraternity White Division as they wallopped the ATO Bruins, 35-17. Fred Seely led with 12 points. The Sigma Nu Reds also won a semi final berth, and will meet Chi Psi, by virtue of their 27-22 victory over Phi Gam .

In the most exciting game of the day the Phi Delt Shields took a 26-25 squeaker from the PiKA Plebians as Mac Boxley tapped in a foul shot with only three seconds remaining in the game. Doc Dickinson led the Phi Delt offensive output with 10 points.

Two other games were played with SAE winning over DKE, 34-20, and the TEP Tigers topping the DU Rinkeydinks, 43-23.

In the Dormitory White Division the Stacy Stars and Winston Waterboys advanced to the semi-final round with victories over the Parker Pound and Ruffin Wisies respectively. Stacy topped Parker, 49-36, as Danny Walker and Thad Masters scored 18 and 17 points apiece. Jim Siceloff's 15 points led Winston in its 39-17 win over Ruffin.

Cabe, Record Win Matches; Matmen Lose

North Carolina's Jerry Cabe won the feature match Tuesday night at Blacksburg, Va., but Virginia Tech's wrestlers coasted to a 26-8 victory over the Tar Heels.

Cabe defeated VPI's George Clear, 7-0 on a decision. The only other Tar Heel to win a match was Gene Record who pinned Virginia Tech's Page in 4 minutes, 28 seconds in the 177-pound division.

Sam Barnes' men now have a 3-8 record. The win was the first of the season for the Gobblers, now 1-6-1.

In the preliminary event, Tech's freshmen defeated Carolina, 24-8.

In other ACC wrestling action Tuesday, Virginia's Cavaliers wrapped up second place in the conference with an easy 20-5 triumph over N. C. State. The Cavaliers finished 4-1 in the ACC, losing only to Maryland.

UNC-VPI Results: 123-pound — Venturino pinned Arthur, 4:22; 130 — Snyder (V) pinned Fuss 5:27; 138 — Gellis (V) dec. Wiles, 12-5; 147 — Ellerman (V) pinned Crook, 4:42; 167 — Callahan (V) pinned Phillips, 5:07; 177 — Record (NC) pinned Page, 4:28; Hvy — Cabe (NC) dec. Clear, 7-0.

Nudes, Satan Dominate Mural

By STEPHEN N. DENNIS

A devil which combines the Satan of Michelangelo's "The Last Judgment" and Marcello of "La Dolce Vita" competes for attention with several Daliesque female nudes in John McCurdy's fifteen by twenty-one foot mural "Peace," commissioned for the United Nations Model General Assembly.

The mural will be on exhibition in Carroll Hall through Saturday, Feb. 23. It will form the backdrop for MGA proceedings and will furnish a symbolic keynote for the series of meetings and debates to take place in Carroll Hall this week.

McCurdy, son of Dr. Harold G. McCurdy of the UNC Psychology Department, has been working on the painting since early November. Ironically, this worldly satire is the effort of a major in the philosophy of religion. McCurdy was graduated from Duke University in 1961 with an A.B. in religion and spent last year at Princeton working toward his doctorate. He plans to resume work at Princeton next year.

The painting is bound to be a controversial one during its exhibition. Intended as a satire and prophecy derived from UN themes, it carries the UN, according to one interpretation, from the chaotic social state preceding it, symbolized by non-human devils and "Martians" in tortured poses, to the idealized and serene figures of the world which UN advocates hope will materialize as a result of the UN's efforts.

However, McCurdy himself believes that the process in the painting may be interpreted as moving in the opposite direction. He admits that the painting is deliberately symbolic, meant to be read in several directions.

One of the more interesting figures in the painting is a "humpbacked buddha" with six hands, two of them grasping a short, fat bomb, two of them plugging his ears with strained fingers, and two accepting money from flanking sycophants. One of the sycophants is strongly reminiscent of Leon Trotsky.

The mouth, eyes, and nose of the central figure were taken from a picture of Spencer Tracy at Marilyn Monroe's funeral. Other figures in this panel are a female skeleton playing Pan pipes and a Swedish female ghoul carrying a gravedigger's shovel and a silk tophat, seated atop a coffin.

McCurdy has several interpretations for the buddha-like figure. He is not sure whether the figure is plugging his ears to avoid the bickerings of the flanking figures bribing him or because the bomb which he is holding is about to go off.

The mural contains three merging scenes arranged in a roughly triangular fashion, with two sides and a top.

Details of the stylized figures at the top of the mural were taken from pictures in body-building magazines, anatomy textbooks, and the skeleton of the zoology department.

The composition of this portion of the mural is taken from the traditional Renaissance form of a Virgin enthroned with saints.

After completing a drooping figure on the crossbeam of a telephone pole in the right scene, McCurdy spiked a carpet tack through his left thumb while changing the canvas to new stretchers, he said.

A focal point of this scene is a red flower being dropped by a young girl onto an obese giant with dead eyes. The giant is supported by a strained devil with a distended tongue.

In view of McCurdy's admission of the thematic ambiguity in his painting, students are advised to view the painting themselves before deciding on its theme and artistic merits.

International Students Board To Hold Symposium

By PETE WALES

A symposium on international student affairs will be held here April 20, sponsored by the International Students Board.

The theme is Challenge and Response: Issues Facing the Students Today.

There will be three speakers, panel discussions and a luncheon during the day. Students will be invited from colleges in Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina.

"There are three major purposes for the symposium," said Kellis Parker, chairman of the subcommittee on the symposium:

"1.) To give expression to student opinion on the changing role of students and to create a better understanding of the role of students in other countries.

"2.) To stimulate an awareness of the profound challenges confronting students today.

"3.) To inspire students to respond to these challenges."

Magnus Gunther, a student here from the Union of South Africa and a former president of the National Union of Students of South Africa, will speak at the luncheon.

Dennis Shaul, president of the National Student Association, will speak in the afternoon followed that evening by an address from William Welch, first president of NSA.

Student leaders from all over the world currently studying in the U. S. will fill out the panels. Students from India, Indonesia, Korea and the Congo have already been scheduled.

Many of these foreign students have headed major political movements in their respective countries and will speak on the issues and problems facing students abroad.

Greeks Admitted To Dorm Council

By OWEN BISHOP

The Interdormitory Council Wednesday night voted overwhelmingly in favor of an amendment to its by-laws opening Council membership to members of social fraternities.

The amendment had been considered last fall but failed to get the two-thirds majority vote necessary for adoption.

The Council reconsidered it this week after the Rules Committee of student legislature suggested they do so.

It was adopted by a vote of 44 For and 2 Against.

The IDC by-laws, as amended, now require only that a dorm resident have and maintain a "C" average in order to be eligible for IDC membership. The provision now reads as follows:

"Any student residing in a University dormitory and having at least a 'C' average may be elected to any office in his dormitory. All elected dormitory officers must reside in the dormitory of their election and maintain a 'C' average for the duration of office."

In other action, the Council elected Gerry Goode, President of Ruffin, to serve as IDC vice-president for the remainder of the term.

Also, IDC Treasurer Lin Dearing announced that he has sent letters to all local merchants and all dorm presidents announcing a new charge-card system for the dorms.

Under the new system only people with charge cards can make purchases on credit and the cards are non-transferable. Anyone making a purchase, according to Dearing, must show both the charge card and his ID card. The system is being instigated to help alleviate the problem of unauthorized people charging things to dorm accounts.

Crisis Increases UN Role According To Affairs Head

By PETER VOORHEES

In a stuffy and smoke-filled banquet room of the Carolina Inn, in a perfect imitation of the popular conception of high level diplomacy, Dr. William Jordan yesterday outlined for the delegates of the UN Model General Assembly his thoughts about the future of the United Nations.

Jordan prefaced his remarks by saying that the first condition for any constructive thought must be to forget the past. Quoting Khrushchev's speech to the Supreme Soviet at the end of the Cuban crisis in November, he called for "a penetrating, scientific approach to the problems . . . facing the peaceful nations of the world." Having stated the need for this approach and the need for an "increase in mutual intelligibility," Dr. Jordan went on to list the contributions and the objectives of the UN today.

Speaking of its contributions to the maintenance of world peace, Jordan made five points. The first and major accomplishment of the UN has been to increase the climate for high-level conferences, "whereby states of the world are able to . . . thrash out the problems which confront them" on a meaningful and immediate level. In conjunction with this, he made his second point, that there is less and less debate on procedure and therefore more actual discussion of issues, a condition which in the past had frequently prevented needed high-level discussion.

Dr. Jordan then turned to the corps of international civil servants which has grown up with the UN, trusted and respected men owing allegiance not to a national government but to the UN. These men have made themselves increasingly recognized as a truly impartial body, and have been invaluable in the solution of international disputes.

These international civil servants have been able to find new modes of discussion on world problems and are able to move away from the usual pattern of "arrogant assertion and counter-assertion" that has in the past blocked progress. This was Jordan's fourth point, and closely tied to it was his fifth, which was the building up and perfecting of expedients to avoid and contain conflicts by such means as the UN Peace Force.

Jordan compared this progress, however, to pouring a bucket of water on the burning Westminster Abbey (in reference to his experiences as a fire marshal during the London blitz). He said the reasons for this were the two main trends in world politics today, the devolution of power from Europe to the newly-independent nations of the world which have yet to consolidate their strength and their relations with the established powers. He cited the necessity of this by saying that the only ways presently available for the solving of problems was by the imposition of force, the intervention of the UN, or action by responsible regional groups. He predicted that the latter course will be used increasingly for the next decade or so, saying that this is what the nations of the Middle East, Africa, and Asia must accomplish for themselves.

The second trend he noted was the increasing concentration of coercive power, in reference to the nuclear forces of the U. S. and the USSR. He said these forces must be rendered safe for the world and that testing must be stopped, both because of its harmful effects and because a solution must be reached while the two nations have a monopoly on the weapons. He suggested that the U. S. and the USSR should turn their weapons over to the UN, thereby making them a monopolized deterrent to war in the hands of a responsible and impartial world organization.

Jordan closed by stating that the "fabric of the international community must be strengthened," so that "people could work with people as people and not as representatives of a national power." He called for the increase of international offices for the purpose of associating peaceful international functions on an internationally rather than a nationally-identified basis. Noting apprehensively the increasing tempo of international affairs, Dr. Jordan praised the UN for its work in the Cuban crisis and pointed out that whereas previously diplomatic relations might well have been broken off between the U. S. and USSR at the time when they were most needed, the two governments had continuous and immediate means of communication available to them. He further noted that without this factor, war might not have been averted.

Jordan concluded that "times of crisis can be times of opportunity," "where proposals that might otherwise not have been accepted will be as the only alternative to war. He closed by saying that the UN is the hope for the future of world peace, and that "desperate as the world situation is today, it does have the instruments to change these situations."

Says We Fail To Capitalize On Red Mistakes

Americans are not ready and may not be willing to understand the activities of the Communist camps of Russia and China and the current disarray of the western alliance, according to Edward P. Morgan, ABC commenator, in an address to a United Nations Model General Assembly meeting here yesterday.

"At precisely the moment when the Communist bloc is shuddering with internal upheaval, the western allies choose this time to fall out among themselves and the United States finds itself unable—so far—to devise a pattern of leadership that will cope successfully with these radically changed circumstances," said Morgan.

Morgan suggested that action on the home front is needed. "If we cannot force petty despots at home to cede sovereignty to the larger good how can we expect to develop the flexibility, the credibility to devise a partnership with allies in which certain national rights are ceded to the common good?"

Morgan said that the United States in particular and the western allies in general are not making the most of "great, shattering and possibly fatal disappointments" which the Communists have suffered and are continuing to suffer.

Morgan emphasized that the Communists have not "added an acre to their empire by open, peaceful means since World War II." He said that any gains of the Communists have been by force of arms or the "palpable pressure of occupying armies."

"Khrushchev still threatens us, from the old and deeply dangerous sore spot of Berlin to the newer and bothersome boil of Cuba. But the Cubans have not chosen Communism voluntarily." Morgan said . . . "we can confront Communism in Cuba and the threat of it elsewhere in the hemisphere with the realism the situation demands."

He suggested Americans should realize that the Communist leaders themselves have not found Communism the easy vehicle they thought it would be for their ride to world domination.

Due to faltering of the long-range objective of Communism, the Communists may take "some desperate risk or try to stampede us into some fatal act of weakness or other folly" and "this, in the view of some thoughtful sources in Washington, is precisely why the immediate future is charged with danger and dark portent for us," according to Morgan. He said that Khrushchev's "misadventure" into Cuba last year and its American thwart is "no guarantee against a repetition of some bold, brash Communist thrust elsewhere."

Morgan said that it is the symbol of "sovereignty" which is "plaguing free men — and men striving to be free — at almost every level of human society." He said that it is this symbol which underlies the struggle with General de Gaulle and which underlies "the rows in our own local communities" in problems of civil rights, education and public welfare.

Just as de Gaulle is not ready to share sovereignty, "we Americans" are not ready to share it either, said Morgan. "In fact our insistence on control of nuclear weapons is one of the big lumps in the stew of controversies with our allies, de Gaulle and Diefenbaker included," said Morgan. He said that "Congress emerges a major villain here" and characterized the theme of Congress in operation today as not that of "public service but subservience to senility." He cited misrepresentation and inflexible Congressional seniority as reasons for his charge, and urged a freeing of the "machinery of democracy" by the action of the people.

Morgan spoke in Memorial Hall last night as part of the four-day UN Model Assembly meet.

Magazine Picks Van Vlaanderen Best Dressed

By MARY HARRIS

Judee Van Vlaanderen has been selected Carolina's best-dressed coed.

She will represent UNC in GLAMOUR magazine's search for the ten best-dressed college girls in America. The national winners will be featured in the magazine's August issue.

Miss Van Vlaanderen, a senior from Ridgewood, N. J., was sponsored by Pi Beta Phi Sorority.

First runner-up in the judging was Sherry Stone, a junior from Grifton, N. C. sponsored by the Nurses' Dorm. Second runner-up was Gaye Ragland, a Junior from Jacksonville, Fla. sponsored by Alpha Delta Pi Sorority.

Chosen from 14 contestants, the winners were selected on the basis of posture, deftness in the use of make-up, appropriateness of dress, use of colors and accessories, and general good grooming and neatness of appearance.

Other contestants and their sponsors were Kathryn Algary, Kappa Delta; Beth Bellamy, West Cobb Dorm; Kitty Foill, Kappa Kappa Gamma; Pat Hall, Alderman Dorm; Donna Hartman, Spencer Dorm; Donna Hennessee, Whitehead Dorm; Judy Ogrady, Tri Delta; Jane Paden, Mclver Dorm; Nancy Prevost, Chi Omega; Taylor, Alpha Gamma Delta; and Sandra Weller, Kappa Cobb Dorm.

Walter Dellinger And The Honor Council Improvement

Walter Dellinger's resignation as Chairman of the Men's Honor Council would seem indicative of his concern for the type of program which he felt that the Council should undertake.

When he felt that his many other committments would hinder his opportunities for "communication of the Council's improvements and goals," he regretfully stepped down.

Whether or not one believes that the Honor System in general has been improved over the past year, he must recognize that the efforts of ex-chairman Dellinger have continually and, to a degree, successfully been directed towards a much needed "increased communication."

This University, faculty, students, and administration alike, has perpetually needed to be more informed about the Honor System. We needed to understand the purpose of such a system, and we needed to be let in on the functionings of the organization that was charged with the obligation of making such a system work.

Dellinger's year at the helm has been a period of welcome enlightenment — enlightenment on both ends.

As he steps down, there seems to be an increased awareness on behalf of the Men's Council of its obligations and opportunities to be more than a judicial body which merely tries cases. The Council has undertaken to both solidify and spread a more realistic "social gospel" — a gospel of hoped-for student honor.

And in turn, the campus at large seems to be more aware of the efforts of the Council to anticipate and handle the problems which are basically inherent in any student honor system.

If Dellinger and this year's Council had done nothing more than establish an exchange of information, they would still be due praise. However, they have done more, and in a very real sense the improvements which they have made allow for an openness and communication which could have been disastrous if it had not been preceded by some house cleaning.

The Men's Council has laboured to establish a firm standard, an unwavering principle from which to approach penalties. They, as did the entire campus, obviously, recognized the need for some respectable degree of consistency in the punishment of various offenders, and, to the extent that we may judge, they have achieved a degree of consistency which many thought would never be forthcoming.

The Council's other great cause for concern has continually been the ambiguity and flexibility of the Campus Code. In the past, there have been far too many students hauled before the Honor Council for offenses which could have been best handled with a slight slap of the wrist and a disapproving glare from the Dean of Men.

This year's Council has apparently taken a more realistic approach to the government of the conduct of our Carolina Gentleman, and no more do we see every student who ever held a paper cup in public being hauled before his punishing peers.

Dellinger has spoken of "a reasonable Campus Code interpretation," and so far as we can tell, the approach coming from such an ideal has been hearteningly realistic.

* * *

But let us not be carried away; improvements — sure, there have been some, but improvements, certainly there is room for more. If the benefits of an increased communication are to permanently alter or improve the system under which we work and play, well then, the efforts of a Walter Dellinger must be but a foundation upon which his equally qualified successors must build and build and build. Tag-Team Entertainment

It has recently come to our attention that although the officers of the Germans Club have settled on a date for their "Winter Germans," they've yet to decide just who or what will provide the concert entertainment.

We would suggest, in keeping with swinging precedent, that the Club go all out to provide its members with a really swell show. And since we've been treated to the finest in rock 'n' roll on numerous occasions, why not add a new twist this time?

Why not have a tag-team wrestling match, with another great beebop band in the wings to urge the animals on? Yeah, man. (CW)

No Socks, Man

It would seem that President Kennedy has touched off more fads than the enterprising young minds of our drugstore cowboys, and we have been duly impressed. Wow.

However, we are none too impressed with the feats of our country's Marines who hobble fifty miles while complaining of sore feet and parched throats.

We've heard tell of Carolina Gentlemen who run 70 miles in Weejuns with no socks, while toting an empty keg on their backs in search of a refill.

It has something to do with suaveness and motivation. (CW)

Food Tax Is Necessary

Now that the N. C. General Assembly has settled in its beautiful new State House, and since the legislators have resolved responsibility for its upkeep, the time has come for all to start work.

The 23-man Republican delegation will try to collectively sponsor a bill aimed at repealing the sales tax on food. We hope that proposal will die in committee, or certainly be defeated on the floor should it get that far.

Probably no other law brings so much comment from so many people as the three-per-cent sales tax on food, which is being used to support the governor's quality education program.

Gov. Sanford's decision to seek this special legislation last term was a difficult one. His popularity has not increased because of it either. But Sanford's courage in doing what he thought best for the State is a an admirable trait.

If the food tax is repealed, it will be a severe blow to North Carolina's educational progress, simply because there is no other program which will achieve the goals of bettering and promoting education in the Tar Heel State.

These views are not solely our own, but those of the governor as well. Sanford has said there is "nothing to put in its (food tax) place."

If Republicans want to abolish the food tax in this strictly political maneuver, let them first prescot a more feasible method for securing the money for education. A tax on tobacco products would do for a start.

We urge the legislators to study this matter thoroughly and then to continue their support of Sanford's quality education program.

At a future date, the food tax may be repealed, but this year is clearly not the time for such a move.

Purely Personal

Almost two weeks ago we had the extreme pleasure of chatting briefly with John Kennedy and Billy Graham. This happened as one would say by being at the right place at precisely the right time. Both gentlemen impressed us immensely, and we were very surprised at their frank yet simple answers to all questions we ask them. Oh, yes, before we forget — John Kennedy lives in 313 Parker Dorm and Billy Graham rooms in 03 Old East.

It is very heartening nowadays to witness the power of the press at work. Last week in Charlotte, this power was clearly demonstrated, as people from the two Carolinas responded to a plea from Charlotte Observer columnist Kays Gary to aid in keeping the Charlotte Summer Theater alive.

The Summer Theater, which brings major dramatic and musical productions to the Queen City, was almost ready to ring down its final curtain — almost, mind you, but not quite. Gary launched his rejuvenation campaign through his daily column and in return, the Theater received substantial financial backing approaching $50,000.

The Charlotte Summer Theater was reborn, and the show will go on thanks to the power of the press, and newspapermen like Kays Gary.

Thomas Ideas Are 'Dead', Says Ex-Admirer

Called Pacifist –Not Socialist

To the Editors,

Friends, Americans, countrymen, lead me your minds, I have come to bury Thomas, not to praise him. For I ask you, is he not dead? His mind stopped somewhere in the late Thirties or early Forties, the former for his domestic policy, the latter as to his international policy.

I had always admired Mr. Norman Thomas as a champion for the common man, and as an advocate of true social democracy, but it seems, as he himself said, these are not necessary to his ultimate aim, but only desirable. Perhaps it should here be said that it was and still is the liberal wing of the Democratic Party which has brought about the reforms which he once so dearly championed. But as I stated, he is not interested in social reform anywhere, but instead in a new foreign policy which is so totally unrealistic that one can only be amazed at his lack of realization as to time and place.

Yes, my friends, he now advocates the ideal of so many frustrated idealists, the ideal of pacifism. He designates his nation as a garrison state similar to Sparta; he objects to federal grants to colleges on the basis that this money is intended to co-ordinate universities to the Pentagon; he criticized the present administration on the basis of its militarism, yet this same administration seems more true to the idea of civil rights and economic reform than he is at the present. In short, he is no real socialist, but instead he subjugates both his socialism and his nation to the ideal of pacifism. Yes, pacifism, it is a great goal to have as our national objective in the future, but little do men like such as Thomas and Russell seem to know that pacifism seems to be designated only for the West, at least as it serves Soviet foreign policy.

I would judge him to be very typical of his fellow frustrated pacitists; one has only to look around on campus, what type of student becomes a pacifist? He is usually very frustrated, very unshaven, very disposed to wear rags (this is usually not due to his financial standing), very pseudo-beat, and once more, very, very frustrated. Having had conversations with some of these stereotypes, I noticed that everything from anarchists to Marxists exists in their idea of a clan. To them it is an escape; they are very unhappy; and we must try to understand them, for they are after all products of our society, although the relation is sometimes difficult to see.

Yes, Mr. Thomas, if he can be taken seriously, really believes that the Soviets are still the "Uncle Joe" type of WWII, and that the West Germans, should they receive the atomic bomb, will begin another Polish attack. Unlike most socialists in the West, he is perfectly satisfied with the Oder-Neisse border, and there proves himself un-socialist, but totally occupied with his obsession of pacifism. But this is only a sample of his utterly ridiculous international policy plan which sometimes, if not often, contradicts his previous ideas. In short, Mr. Thomas is dead, if not physically, then certainly mentally (if his recent political speeches are an adequate sample of his mentality).

Debators Have Open Minds

To the Editors,

In the Tuesday issue of the DTH, you ran an article on the Di-Phi 'ebate which was to be held that night. As you may recall the debate was on "A Resolution Advocating The Right Of All Dormitory Residents To Hold An Office In The IDC."

In the second paragraph of the article, you stated: "The Di-Phi, in selecting this resolution, felt that any dormitory resident who pays both board and social fees should have access to positions of leadership in the system of dormitory government."

Let me state that the fact that the Di-Phi selects a particular resolution to debate, does not indicate in any way how a majority of the Di-Phi feels on the matter. This can only be determined during the course of debate and the final vote on the resolution. As I write this, I do not know how the debate will turn out, for most, if not all, of the members come to the debates with an open mind on the subject to be debated. Therefore, the final vote can go either way. Any other attitude would make a mockery of the debate itself.

Good Singing, Not Speaking

To the Editors,

I happen to be one of the admirers of Governor Sanford. I have been surprised that he has shown as much judgment and sound reasoning in all the speeches he has made. (Some of my friends in Durham remarked soon after his election as Governor — 'He hasn't got any sense.) While I think he puts his ideas and programs over well, the pronunciation of many of his words is ludicrous. Somebody should tell him he ought to take lessons in speech correction, especially if he has ambitions to go into politics on a national scale. If his enunciation grates on me, a southerner, just what kind of impression would he make if he should go north of the Mason and Dixon line?

Tonite I attended the concert at Memorial Hall by the U. S. Army Chorus. The singing was excellent, and I was as much impressed by the master of ceremonies as I was with the singing. Here was public speaking and presiding at its best.

(A graduate student, who attended the singing and came in after I wrote the above, said she didn't like him, he was too affected. He was rather affected in his use of mannerisms, but his enunciation was perfect and he put his message over. Dr. Springen should have been there. I would be interested in his opinion.)

Their rendition of their Civil War selections nearly brought tears to the eyes. This being the Centenial of the Emancipation Proclamation, the first 3d of the program was devoted to these songs. I had been brought up on them so they were very familiar. They brought down the house with their imitation of a horse walking. In another song they held their breath so long on one note that I even got alarmed. Their singing tonight was a piece de la resistance, so don't dare miss them when they come again.

Youth Program

Among the educational proposals introduced in the House on opening day was a two year, $235 million bill presented by Rep. Edith Green (D-Oregon), chairman of a special subcommittee on higher education. Mrs. Green hopes to get legislation providing for Federal matching funds for the construction of special culture centers run cooperatively by two or more colleges. Her bill would call for the construction of at least 15 of these centers in dispersed geographic areas, serving as joint laboratories, research centers, TV stations, and providing courses and programs that the individual schools could not provide their own students.

YOUTH FITNESS

The recent national controversy over the physical condition of America's youth grew out of an alarmingly high rate of rejections for the armed services for reasons of physical inadequacy. Combined with the Kennedy administration's fetish for the youthful Council on Youth Fitness, which began in 1962 by issuing its "Blue Book" entitled "Youth Physical Fitness) and outlining various exercises and good health practices recommended for the healthy American youth.

The exercises recommended by the Council turned out not to be much fun, and although the Government Printing Office has sold some 100,000 of the booklets, not much enthusiasm seems to have been whipped up on American campuses. Perhaps fearing that fearful students and youth will use the booklet as a compendium of exercise to avoid if one intends to beat the draft, the Council is now preparing a new booklet, which will concentrate on diet, good health, hygiene, group play, and all-around outdoor recreation as a more reasonable means to national physical fitness.

In recent interviews with the Collegiate Press Service, Congressional leaders of the fight for the administrations education and youth legislation urged that students write more letters to their Congressmen, either pro or con. Students never seem to write about these things that affect them so profoundly, it was indicated.

What's Wrong With UNC?

By BILL McALLISTER

"You don't have to worry about the University. The legislature is full of Carolina men and they'll take good care of her."

That was the frank opinion of a Raleigh newsman who has covered numerous legislative sessions. He was speaking three years ago.

But would he repeat that statement today?

Perhaps not if he saw the requests the consolidated university administration is going to place before the legislature this February. A look at just two important items on that list does not give a very rosy impression.

The requests are pessimistic, if not downright pathetic.

What's happened? What's the matter with Carolina?

Item: Carolina has for years had an imperative need for an adequate student union. The present one is 31 years old and student enrollment has tripled since it was built. Both N. C. State College and Woman's College have secured large, modern student unions which are the pride of their campuses.

The administration has now decided to request a student union for Carolina, but it won't be just that. It is only half a student union. The other half is going to be a library.

Of course neither Carolina's smaller sister nor younger brother institution had to settle for just half a student union. They each got a full one.

But apparently the same line of thought no longer prevails in the administration. A building now must have something to do with education per se before funds will be requested. (One can only be thankful this was not the practice when the Old Well was built.) Of course, no one thought of considering the proposal of several years ago when a library consoldidation program was begun with the goal of keeping most books on the campus under one roof. Likewise, no one either probably gave any thought of how much studying could be done in the library half of the building while a combo played in the union half.

What's happened to Carolina? Has she fallen so low in the esteem of her leaders that the state university must go begging on her knees to the General Assembly.

We think not. But the administration must.

Item: The library-student union proposal is not where this halfhearted approach has stopped. The administration has also finally realized that it is about time Carolina got an adequate indoor auditorium where the entire student body can meet for athletic and other special events. But someone forgot the future here too.

The plans call for a combination gymnasium-auditorium that will seat only 9,400 persons. University enrollment is expected to be that high next year and — if the present rate of growth continues—it will grow by 500 each year.

Obviously, the auditorium is going to be inadequate within a matter of years. Even if it was built today, there would not be enough seats for faculty and students together.

This was not the approach the administration took at State College several years ago. Thanks to a grant from the Reynolds family, the state was able to build a coliseum that will seat 12,500. And it was built when State had an enrollment less than half that number. Trust, Raleigh has a larger population than Chapel Hill but events at Carolina have a potential drawing audience of the entire Research Triangle area.

What's happened to Carolina?

It's not that we are too proud to accept these two proposed buildings, but we think that the people of North Carolina are too proud of thei rtradition of leading the South in the field of education to suddenly depart to a piecemeal, defeatist attitude.

Carolina is a school the people of this state want to be the best state university in the South. It has been —and it still can be.

But this halfhearted attitude of we'll-take-anything-we-can-get is doing nothing for the future of the school. But it is the taxpayers' money, and more importantly, it is hurting the reputation and honor of a great institution.

What's wrong with Carolina?

Nothing that a little positive thinking wouldn't cure

UNC-YRC Opens Spring Drive For New Members

The UNC - YRC will open its spring membership drive with booths in "Y" Court and Lenoir Hall on Monday and Tuesday, Charles Hooks, membership chairman, announced yesterday.

The spring semester is a busy one for the YRC. On February 26, Senator Charles Strong will be the guest speaker. Dr. Klingberg, Dr. Holloway, and Dr. Ranson Taylor are scheduled to speak; and Representatives Jonas and Broyhill have been invited to come to the UNC campus to speak at YRC meetings. Near the end of the semester there will be the election of officers.

On Monday and Tuesday of this week, a YRC member will be in the "Y" Court during class time and in Lenoir Hall during the lunch and dinner hours to answer any questions.

Hooks invites all interested students to stop at the booths and pick up a copy of the 1963 Platform of the North Carolina Young Republican Club.

'Evening With Otelia' Set

Graham Memorial's Current Affairs Committee will present "An Evening with Otelia Conner" Tuesday, Feb. 26 at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall. Mrs. Conner will speak briefly and answer questions.

Neal Jackson, organizer of the program, said, "Many people have read Mrs. Connor's letters to various editors and have heard a great deal about her, yet few have actually had the opportunity to meet her. Many people think she is some kind of campus 'Santa Claus.'

"In our Committee's constant efforts to bring discussion and thought to the campus, we felt that certainly Mrs. Connor could do this. During the question period, we may be able to gain some insight into Mrs. Connor's opinions and criticisms. Mrs. Connor is familiar with college students, having children of her own. Her son, who attended UNC, was very active in Student Government, having at one time been on the Honor Council.

"In short, I think it would be unfair to criticize her without first hearing her elaborate on why she thinks as she does."

All interested individuals are invited to attend.

Swimmers Host Unbeaten Terps

Coach Earey Says Heels 'Must Win'

By JOEL BUCKLEY

Carolina's varsity swimmers will be putting their final Atlantic Coast Conference standing on the line tonight when they engage an unbeaten University of Maryland team at eight o'clock in the Bowman Gray Pool.

"We must win this one in order to remain in contention for the ACC swimming title," remarked Coach Pat Earey yesterday. "Even if we go on to win the league swimming championships next month in Raleigh, it wouldn't mean anything unless we win against Maryland," Earey added.

Carolina is 4-1 in the conference after suffering a 53-42 setback last week at State, and 9-4 overall.

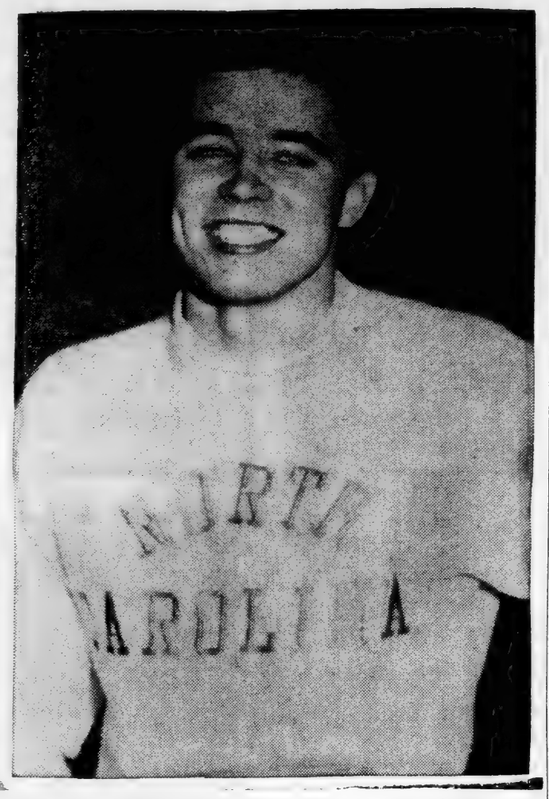
The team championship in the ACC is determined by combining the rankings of the dual meet season and point totals in the championship meet. Eight points are given for first place, seven for second, and so on in descending order.

"We hope to bring it down to the freestyle relay," the varsity coach added, "but we realize that Maryland will be even stronger than State was and will have a lot more depth.

"We plan to make last minute adjustments in the lineup in order to enable us to stay in the running," Earey noted.

Again the burden of decision will rest on Thompson Mann, Harrison Merrill, Thad Adams, Davis Roberts, Bill Bloom, Barry King and Harry Schiffman.

"Maryland has beaten Navy this year for the first time ever and Navy has beaten us" Earey went on to say. "But since the Navy meet went down to the wire (the freestyle relay) and since our boys were disqualified in that event, there isn't much need to regard comparative scores, except that they indicate that the Terps are stronger than ever." (Maryland won the ACC championship last year.)



Maryland will be exceptionally strong in the butterfly, breaststroke, diving, individual medley and freestyle spring events.

Coach Bill Campbell's team is loaded with defending individual champions. Hugh Lupiens is the 1500-freestyle champ, recording a time of 19:27 at Raleigh last year. Ron Squiers topped the conference in 1-meter diving and Kevin Gilson was co-champ in the 100-freestyle race. Gilson's time was 50.7 in that event last year, but he has done 49.5 this year.

Another exciting Terp swimmer is individual medlist Hugh Roddin 200-yards. 2:11 time). Two years ago Roddin was the ACC's 1500 freestyle champ, but his teammate Lupien took that title last season.

In addition the Terps have ten more lettermen and a sophomore butterfly artist who has swam the 200-yard event in 2:07.

Tomorrow the Tar Heel swimmers wind up their dual meet season against Virginia's Cavaliers. The annual conference meet will start in Raleigh on March 7.

HARRISON MERRILL, Carolina's sophomore swimming ace from Atlanta, Ga., is an important man in Coach Pat Earey's hopes for an upset over Maryland today. Merrill and his All-American teammate Thompson Mann give the Tar Heels one of the strongest one-two punches in the east.

Fullmer Is Ready For Tiger Fight

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI)—Gene Fullmer was so weak from dysentery when he lost his world middleweight crown in San Francisco to Dick Tiger that he could hardly raise his arms, United Press International learned Thursday.

Fullmer, now in the pink of condition for an attempt to regain the title in a battle with Tiger Saturday night, never has given out any alibi for the loss, in which he took a terrible beating.

But Fullmer's manager, Marv Jensen, confirmed that Fullmer was badly weakened for the bout.

"The fight had been postponed several times already due to the Giants getting into the World Series and the heavy rains," said Jensen. "So Fullmer didn't want to cause another delay.

"I didn't know he had dysentery until he started into the ring. He had been seized with stomach cramps four times in the half hour before he was to go into the ring.

"He was so weak that he didn't have any punch at all despite the fact he had trained 252 rounds for the bout."

The oddsmakers in Las Vegas still favored Tiger at 3 to 1 in the return match which will be the Saturday night television bout.

"I like being the underdog," said Fullmer. "But I'm in much better health this time. I'm going to retire if I lose, but I don't plan on retiring."

Fullmer completed sparring 100 rounds, minus one minute, Wednesday when he knocked out sparring partner Ed Hickman.

Tiger, also at the peak of condition, worked out with light calesthenics to round out his training.

Middies Lead Military Week Competition

The athletic side of "Military Week" winds up today with a "volley-battle" between the staffs of the Air Force and Naval ROTC units on campus.

With the Navy boasting a decisive lead in the totals of cadet-midshipman competition, both staffs will be trying for a final victory for their units in today's volleyball action. The games will get under way at 4:00 in Woollen Gym, with the best two of three games deciding the event.

Prior to Thursday's volleyball competition between the AFROTC Cadets and the NROTC Midshipmen, the Navy was leading with a total of 120 to the Air Force tally of 30 points. Today's game is worth 25 points to the victor.

Frosh Basketballers Seek Second Victory Over Duke

The unofficial Big Four Frosh Championship will be on the line tonight when UNC and Duke meet at 8.00 in the Duke Indoor Stadium. The game is open to the public free of charge.

Coach Ken Rosemond's Tar Babies will take a 13-2 record into the final match, a mark identical to that of Duke.

The two freshman teams have split a pair of games so far this year while dropping one other contest in Big Four competition.

Duke's other loss was to Wake Forest while UNC was bombed by N. C. State's frosh in Raleigh. The Blue Imps slipped past State Wednesday night, 78-72, while Carolina ran past Virginia, 89-53.

Rosemond will probably start Bob Bennett and Jim Smithwick in forecourt with John Yokley and Ray Hassell at the guards. Jimmy Moore may be the fifth starter if he has fully recovered from a bout with the flu.

Bench strength will be supplied by Bill Harrison, Earl Johnson, Mike Iannarella, and Jimmy Archardo and Terry Murray at forwards, Jack Marin at center and Steve Vacendak and Frank Harscher at guards.

The top reserves are Phil Allen and R. D. Carson. Allen and Carson led the Imps in their State win with 26 and 17 points, respectively.

Wrestlers Fall To VMI, 22-10

Virginia Military Institute handed North Carolina's wrestlers their ninth loss of the season Wednesday, 22-10, at Lexington, Va.

The Tar Heels won only two matches against the Cadets and will take a 3-9 record into tomorrow's match with the perennial champs of the Atlantic Coast Conference, Maryland's Terrapins.

1. My theory on looking for a job is—Play it big! Shoot for the top! Go straight to the prez for your interview.
I don't know any presidents.
2. Use your head, man. Have your dad set up appointments with some of the big shots he knows.
He's a veterinarian.
3. Beautiful! All you have to do is find a president who likes dogs. You'll have him eating out of your hand in no time.
I don't know an Eisenhower from a Kennedy.
4. Frankly, I don't know what else to tell you. You've got a problem.
It's not as bad as it seems. My idea is to find out the name of the employment manager at the company I'm interested in. Write him a letter telling him my qualifications. Spell out my interests, marks. Simple as that.
5. A letter to the employment manager? Ha-ha-ha! You've a lot to learn.
Then how come I landed a great job at Equitable—an executive training spot that's interesting, pays a good salary and has a lot of promise for the future.
6. Say, could you set up an interview for me at Equitable?
I'm not the president, but I'll try.

University Service To Be Beneficiary Of Campus Chest

Twenty-three cents will buy three meals for a Greek student.

Four dollars and thirty-four cents will pay a wek's hospitalization for a Japanese student in a TB sanitorium.

These are two of the ways in which the World University Service uses donations from UNC students to aid students in other parts of the world. WUS is one of four organizations which will receive contributions from this year's Campus Chest.

Commenting on the WUS, President Kennedy said, "Universities are the midwives of progress. In its many services to education, the World University Service is making a genuine contribution to the growth of freedom."

WUS is a major international mutual assistance program for students and is the only one in which aid is given on a student-to-student basis.

It has engaged in emergency projects such as restoring libraries in Tokyo after an earthquake in 1923, placing 1000 Hungarian student refugees on scholarships in American colleges in 1956, and is now building dormitories in Concepcion, Chile, which was recently struck by an earthquake.

The basic goals of the WUS are to help meet the needs of universities and students and to promote the sharing of knowledge throughout the world regardless of racial, religious, or political factors.

Last year, the Campus Chest donated $1,200 to WUS. Approximately one half of the proceeds from this year's drive will go to the WUS program.

UP To Probe Opinion On New Union

The University Party Poll Committee will take a survey Monday night to determine student opinion on the Student Union and the housing problem.

Questionaires will be distributed by Committee members, and students will be asked to express their feelings concerning three - man rooms, increased dorm rent, and the Student Union. The poll will ask students if they feel the Student Union is adequate, how often they use the Student Union, and if they feel there is a need for a new one.

Members of the committee are Gary Grosboll, chairman; Bill Stuffer, Jerry Teale, Jim Barbour, Bill Feingold, Sand Grossbart, and Chip Sadow.

Grosboll asks all students to cooperate and express their views fully so that various University organizations may gain a deeper insight into the needs of Carolina students.

Exchange With Panama Scheduled

The International Students' Board has established an exchange scholarship with the University of Panama for the coming year.

This exchange will serve a dual purpose: that of a cultural exchange in addition to the strengthening of the relations between the two countries. The importance of the exchange is directed toward decreasing the distrust and misunderstanding between the Panamanian and American students which has arisen as a result of the lack of contact with the Canal Zone.

In this aspect, the Latin American Exchange will differ from the already established European Scholarship in that the former will encompass political situations of international importance.

The University of Panama, located in Panama City, was only established about 25 years ago and now has an enrollment of 4,000 students. Classes are set up on the two semester system with semesters beginning in May and September.

The "summer session" operates from February through the end of April. Lectures, which are usually large groups as opposed to the seminar type, are held five days a week.

Consisting mainly of night students in the field of liberal arts, the University is a center of political activity within the country.

Those interested in being candidates for this scholarship may secure applications gebinning next Thursday at the YMCA or Graham Memorial.

These should be returned to the YMCA by March 22, and interviews will be held during the first week of April. For further information, contact Ben Newlin at 968-9073.

SG Cluttered, Allen Claims

Student Body President Inman Allen asked Student Legislature to decide if probationary sentences should be retained as a punishment for a violation of the Honor System.

In his "State of the Campus Address," Allen also noted that plans for legislation for either consolidation or dissolvement of "certain student government committees" are now being worked on.

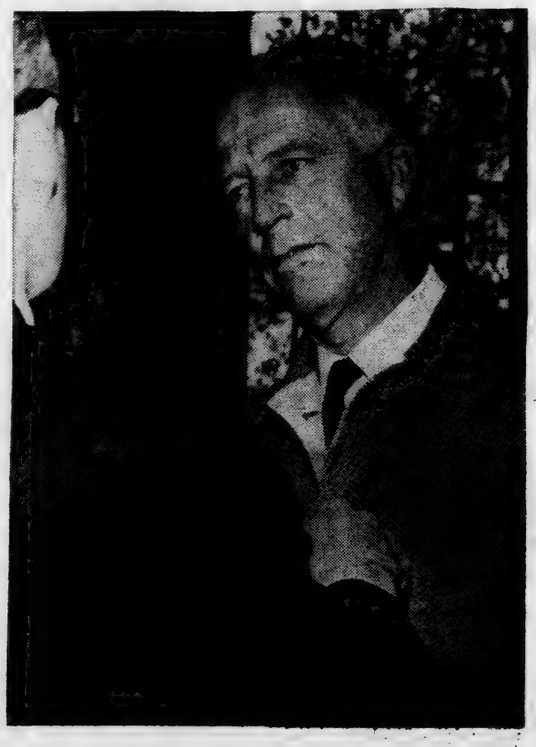
Allen cited the attitude which the Honor Council has exhibited in recent months — "an attitude which has seen a definite increase in the number of sentences of suspension and a similar decrease in the number of probation sentences—" as a reason for the possible deletion of the probation sentence.

"Student government is too diversified," Allen remarked as he explained the purpose of the proposed re-organization of student government. The proposed revision would involve strengthening the executive branch, "with particular emphasis being paid to gaining more adequate fiscal control and a greater efficiency in communications.

Former Belgian King Tours UNC Campus

Leopold III, former king of Belgium, and his wife, the Royal Princess Liliane, visited medical and scientific facilities here Friday and capped off their tour of the campus with a luncheon, with Governor and Mrs. Terry Sanford and University Officials, in the Morehead Planetarium.

The royal couple was greeted at a morning coffee hour in the Carolina Inn. There to meet them were Consolidated University President William C. Friday, Chancellor William B. Aycock, Dr. W. Reece Berryhill, dean of UNC's School of Medicine, Dr. Nathan Womack, head of the Department of Surgery, Dr. Charles H. Burnett, head of the Department of Medicine, and the medical and scientific faculty who later conducted them on tours of selected campus facilities.



The royal couple toured UNC facilities devoted to their particular fields of interest.

Princess Liliane, accompanied by Dr. Ernest Craige, associate professor of medicine and a specialist in cardiology, visited Memorial Hospital's heart disease treatment and research areas. In her homeland, the Princess is a great patron of research and is particularly interested in the treatment of heart patients.

King Leopold, whose interests are in mathematics and physics, was hosted by Dr. Everett D. Palmatier, Kenan professor of physics; Dr. John W. Carr III, professor of mathematics and former director of UNC's Computation Center; and Dr. William M. Whyburn, Kenan professor of mathematics.

The King toured the scientific facilities here and visited the Mathematics Library, where a special display of books and journals of Belgian origin had been prepared in his honor. After meeting senior math faculty, he toured research project facilities in physics and the Computation Center.

The royal couple, accompanied Governor and Mrs. Terry Sanford to Morehead Planetarium where a luncheon was held in the visitors' honor. Among those attending were Chancellor and Mrs. Aycock, President and Mrs. Friday, President Deryl Hart of Duke University and Mrs. Hart, Dr. Pierre Bernard Louis Rijlant, professor of physiology at the University of Brussels and director of the Belgian Research Institute of Physiology, who had accompanied the royal couple on their flight to the triangle area, where he is spending the month of February conferring with groups at UNC, Duke, and the Research Triangle Institute; and Dr. Gertrude Cox of the RTI.

Cellist To Perform In GM Sunday At 8

Reine Flachot, the young French cellist and winner of the Prix Piatigorsky at the age of fifteen, will appear at Graham Memorial Lounge Sunday night at eight o'clock as a part of the Graham Memorial Spring Concert Series.

The concert is part of an exchange program arranged by Carnegie Hall in association with the International Federation Jeunesses Musicales, through which European artists tour American colleges and universities.

Born of French parents in Argentina, Miss Flachot began playing the violoncello at the age of eleven. A daughter of a university family, she had been encouraged to pursue a classical education and she received her bachelor's degree in philosophy.

After completing her work at the university, she returned to music and studied under Gregor Piatigorsky and Pierre Fourier. In 1960 she was honored by the Russian composer Aram Khatchaturian by being asked to appear as a soloist in his 'Cello Concerto at the festival given in his name at Paris. Prior to her tour of American colleges and universities Mme. Flachot appeared as a soloist with the American Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

Reine Flachot will appear here accompanied by Alan Motard, an artist in his own right. Motard was the recipient of the Marquerite Long-Jacques Thibaud Prixe for pianists at the Acedemie Musicale Napoletana and won first prize at the Nice Conservatiory, where he began his musical studies.

Mock Assembly Votes To Admit Red China

Debate Is Fiery In Opening Meet

A student session of the United Nations Model General Assembly here yesterday did what the real U.N. hasn't done—it voted to admit Communist China.

The resolution to admit the Red Chinese was presented by the U. S. delegation, made up of the Air Force Academy. The resolution allowed the Republic of China to retain its seat on the Security Council. The U.N. would maintain the neutrality of the waters between Formosa and the mainland.

The USSR promptly moved to amend the resolution to read that "the People's Republic of China take its rightful position as one of the five permanent members of the Security Council." This issue claimed the attention of the session in one way or another for the rest of the afternoon.

The Russian delegation cited the original purpose of seating China on the Security Council in 1945, as to represent the largest single nation in the world on the Council. It then asserted that Chiang Kai-Chek's government no longer fulfilled this function and was therefore not a legitimate member of the Security Council.

Ireland countered this by saying that there were no two Chinas, and that though the People's Republic should be represented, it should not be on the Security Council because its actions don't demonstrate an accordance with the principles of the Charter.

Accusation followed counter-accusation, with the Ukraine charging that there is only one China, that being the People's Republic, and Algeria insisting that one China or the other be recognized as China. At this point, a delegate from the non-existent delegation of the Republic of China seized the floor to denounce capitalism and defect to the USSR in an emotion-charged scene.

After further debate on this amendment and often excessive parliamentary manuevering, the amendment was brought to a vote and defeated 35 to 10 with 11 abstentions.

Debate then returned to the original resolution, and the USSR again gained the floor to reiterate that Taiwan can't possibly be said to represent the 700 million people on the mainland. Maylaya countered this by charging that the People's Republic was too "agressive and irresponsible" to represent anybody.

Albania spoke against keeping the Republic in the United Nations and the People's Republic out of the Security Council.

Russia then moved to strike the clause in the resolution for the Republic of China to retain its Security Council seat. This would leave the question undecided until after Red Chinia gained admission when it would then be easier to get her seated on the Council.

Yugoslavia spoke against the motion, and a vote defeated it. A motion for adjournment of debate was then passed.

In a last effort to keep the question of the Security Council seat open, Russia moved for a vote on each of the clauses separately. This motion was defeated, and the resolution was submitted to a roll call vote, passing by 43 to 4, with 11 abstentions.

Assembly President Duke Marston of Duke was in charge of the Plenary Session.

The session opened explosively with an immediate resolution from Pakistan to expell the delegations from France, Belgium, and the Soviet Union for being behind in their dues and assessements. The chair denied this motion, and then ceded the floor to Algeria's Premier Ben Bella, who expressed Algeria's gratitude at the UN membership, sympathy for the Arab, Asian, and African states, and dedication to the principles of peace and socialism.

Late yesterday, the Assembly began debating a second U.S. resolution, this one from the Economic Committee, calling for a U.N.-administered program to utilize the present economic groups and organizations for the mutual benefit of all nations.

It has yet to consider a Ghanian resolution from the Social Committee to continue expanding the relief programs for refuges of South Africa and Angola.

In another resolution concerning Angola. Chile submitted a proposal calling for the immediate preparation of the people for self-government and independence soon.

The delgates plan to consider an Ad Hoc Committee resolution submitted by Guatemala calling for a U.N.-administered insurance fund for economic rehabilitation.

Receptions Planned For Trustees

Student chairmen planning next week's visit of the University's women trustees, have scheduled three events for the visit.

Campus women's organizations will have an opportunity to meet and talk with the trustees. Individual meetings with large numbers of women students, and tours of all new University facilities are being arranged.

Chairmen Beverly Hanes, Jean Yoder and Donna Bailey are responsible for the Monday evening program to be held at the home of President and Mrs. William Friday. All major women's organizations have been invited; their activities, progress and plans will be presented through conferences with the Trustees and by the use of visual aids.

Working with a group of approximately 200 student volunteers, Chairmen Julia Latane, Jackie Greenwood and Susan Dellinger have scheduled an intricate system whereby these students will meet each Trustee individually. Utilizing the "spare" moments of the Trustee's day, students will accompany the ladies to and from meetings, teas, lunch, etc.

The Chairmen stress that all women students are invited and urged to attend the luncheon held in the South Room of Lenoir on Tuesday, and also encourage students to approach the Trustees on campus in order to meet and speak with them.

Tuesday's luncheon will be chaired by Miss Diane Blanton and program chairman Judee Van-Vlaanderen. Following the luncheon, the Trustees will be formally introduced to the students by Dean Charles Henderson, Jr.

Women's organizations participating in the Monday evening program are: the Women's Honor Council, the Panhellenic Council, Women's Residence Council, the Carolina Woman's Council, Women's Orientation Committee, the Women's Athletic Association, the Valkyries, and the YWCA.

GRANT WHEELER

Honor Council Picks Wheeler For Chairman

Grant W. Wheeler was elected Chairman of the Men's Honor Council Thursday night. Wheeler succeeds Walt Dellinger who resigned earlier in the week to prepare his Political Science thesis and will serve as Chairman until one month after the April 2 campus elections.

Other officers elected are Whitney Durand, Vice-Chairman, and Peter Jason, Scribe.

Wheeler, a senior from Needham, Mass., has served on the Council since his freshman year and had served as Vice-Chairman under Dellinger. Last year he served as Summer School Chairman. Wheeler is also a member of the DKE fraternity and the Order of the Grail.

Recorder Purchase Approved

SL Sets Elections Tuesday, April 7

Student Legislature Thursday night passed a bill appropriating $1060 for the purchase of two steno and autograph machines for use by the Men's and Women's Honor Councils. Also approved was Tuesday, April 2 as the date of the spring campus elections.

Larry McDevitt spoke in behalf of the recorder bill and stated that it was essential that two machines be purchased instead of just one. The bill, as it was originally introduced in October, requested money for two machines, but had been cut to an appropriation for one by the Finance Committee. McDevitt read statements by both Bev Haynes, Chairman of the Women's Council and Walt Dellinger, ex-chairman of the Men's Council, which urged two machines be bought in order to provide for the maximum amount of protection for the student during an honor Council case.

An amended version of the first four sections of the general election laws was also okayed. The only changes were that, in the Men's Dormitory districts, DMI would include just Craige dormitory and Ehringhaus dorm would be considered in the new DM VII district.

The rest of the proposed changes will come up next week and will include a proposed reduction from five to four legislative seats for Town Women's district. Dorm Men's 1 would also be reduced, from seven to four legislative seats, and DM VII would be allotted four seats, thus leaving SL with 50 representatives.

Queen's Crowning Features UNC Military Ball Tonight

The crowning of a queen at tonight's Military Ball will be the social highlight of the year for the military organizations on campus.

The annual ball will conclude the first UNC Military Week, which has seen daily athletic competition between the UNC Air Force and Naval ROTC units.

The combined enrollment of 595 Air Force Cadets and Navy Midshipmen, plus over 70 special guests, have been invited to attend, according to AFROTC Cadet Capt. Charles R. Brown, Jr. Brown is the commander of the UNC chapter of the National Society of Scabbard and Blade which is sponsoring both Military Week and the Military Ball.

A saber arch will salute the Queen of the Ball, who will be selected from a court of five nominees. After her entrance, the saber bearers will form a figure, and the queen and her escort will begin the Queen's Dance within the figure.

The Queen's Court consists of five young ladies nominated by members of Scabbard and Blade:

—Miss Carole Ansley, a junior English major at UNC, from Jacksonville, Fla. She was nominated by Midshipman Capt. Leon Gordon of Chadwick, Ill.

—Miss Jeanne Dixon, a UNC freshman physical therapy major from Rocky Mount. She was nominated by Cadet 1st Lt. Richard A. Lennon, Jr.

—Miss Joyce Louise Colson of West Suffield, Conn., is a junior at the University of Connecticut majoring in education. She was nominated by Battalion Commander Robert C. Jones.

—Miss Muff Greason, a UNC graduate with a B.S. in psychology and a resident of Morristown, N. J. Miss Greason is now in a graduate program at the University of Pennsylvania. She was nominated by Cadet Lt. Col. Bruce B. Greene, the Cadet Group Commander.

—Miss Elizabeth Mills McDonald, president of Pi Beta Phi Sorrily at UNC, is a senior from Salem, Va. She was nominated by Midshipman Lt. (j.g.) Charlie Shelton.

The Military Ball will begin at 8:30 at the Durham Elks Club. Coeds have been granted late permission to 1:30, provided they are out for the ball.

Music will be furnished by the Sto Fox Combo, with additional entertainment by Daniel and the Lions, a campus folk-singing group.

Lower Voting Age To 18 In State

It is a rare spring day in February when this newspaper endorses actions of the Republican Party—particularly the North Carolina GOP. But Republican state Reps. J. Thornton Stockton and Sen. Charles W. Strong have acted intelligently and directly in a situation which has seen no directness and little intelligence in past years.

* * *

Stockton and Strong introduced bills in the House and Senate this week to lower the voting age in the state to 18 years. Such a change will require an amendment to the State Constitution. The Stockton bill would have the people vote on such an amendment in the 1964 general election.

* * *

The reasons for such a change are obvious: men between 18 and 21 are required to serve in the armed forces—it is only fair to let those who fight for their country vote for its leaders; and persons in this age group are often taxpayers and thus have a financial stake in the nation.

* * *

Sen. Strong said the average 18-year-old is sufficiently aware of political issues to be able to vote intelligently. "Many of them are more politically aware than their parents," he said.

* * *

Lowering the voting age to 18 has been a controversial issue in many states—but only two (Georgia and Kentucky) have taken the initiative to pass such legislation. The result has been no great lessening in the operations of democratic procedure in either state (which were at a pretty low level before the voting age was lowered.)

* * *

In North Carolina, as in any other state, the college-age population is as qualified to vote—in some cases, more so—than the average population. College students (and even the median population of the 18-21 age) have a generally more perceptive view than their elders of national and world politics, and the measures needed to form a sound American policy.

It would be sound and reasonable for the Legislature to support the Strong-Stockton bills to lower the voting age—and for the people of North Carolina to support such an amendment in 1964. (J.C.)

Nowhere To Go On Sat. Night?

Nowhere to go, on Saturday night. This age old problem for teenagers is also becoming one for Carolina students.

Imagine this common Saturday night occurrance. The boy picks up his date a little late. They go over to the free flick but Carroll Hall is filled up 10 minutes before the film starts. They go to one of the theaters downtown. When they get out, they want to go dancing, but the only place available, Graham Memorial, is full.

What do you do now? Watch TV or give up and take her back to the dorm? This problem is no joke to the dormitory man. He has very little choice of entertainment and few places to take a date. The problem is both too little entertainment and too little variety.

Efforts at improving this situation have been made during the past year, but little has been accomplished. A year ago the Student Entertainment Committee of Student Government sponsored an all campus weekend that included a concert in Graham Memorial by the Four Aces. Unfortunately the high price of tickets and some competing entertainment made the affair a dismal flop. The Student Entertainment Committee has disappeared from existence.

The IDC has tried to help out by sponsoring dances between male and female dorms. Graham Memorial has tried to help out with its combo parties and entertainmtnt series. However, they are hampered by the same old story — lack of space.

Carolina needs more entertainment, a place for more entertainment, and better coordination of its entertainment.

The obvious answer to the problem of space would be a new student union. But, until that unforeseen day comes, we will have to make use of what we have.

We aren't sure what the answers are, but we would like to make some suggestions.

First, the campus needs a student activities committee to handle all scheduling and contracting of campus entertainment — whether it be the Four Freshmen or the Hotnuts, or the Graham Memorial series. This way there would be none of the conflicts of two special events on the same night. The committee should be appointed to serve from Feb. 1 to Jan. 31 of the following year. It would schedule events from two to six months in advance. Thus in the spring, it would plan entertainment for the fall. In the fall it would plan ahead for the spring. That way, Carolina could schedule some of the bigger stars and the group sponsors could plan a proper publicity campaign. The committee could plan at least one big concert, dance, or other program for each month. Any remaining weeks could be used for class sponsored dances or Graham Memorial combo parties.

Secondly, some arrangement should be made for use of Woollen Gym for programs that will attract large crowds. Memorial Hall with 1,700 seats is too small for the number of students who want to see the Graham Memorial programs now. If the Kingston Trio or Johnny Mathis were contracted to sing here, even Woollen Gym would not hold the crowd. But, at least it would be better than Memorial Hall in that three times the number of students could see and hear the program.

Thirdly, why not move the free flicks from Carroll Hall to Memorial Hall. The free flicks are noted for the crowds they attract. For many movies students have to be turned away. If the flicks were in Memorial Hall, everyone who wants to could see the flicks, and there would be need for only one showing each night because of the expanded space.

Fourthly, the present Faculty Club should be available for student use on weekends. It would be ideal for small private parties by sororities, professional fraternities or small campus organizations.

We suggest one of the student parties take the initiative in fulfilling these ideas. If the parties are really for the students instead of what honors they can get, they will not wait until spring elections and make the annual promises. Promises get shrugs of the shoulder. Action gets votes.

Is Student Government a government of the students, by the students, for the students, or is it a government of the students, by the legislators, for the legislators?

McKenna — The Good Days Gone

The following address was made by Mr. McKenna Wednesday in Washington at a Book and Author Luncheon sponsored by the Washington Post.

By RICHARD McKENNA

When I cast about for something of general interest that I might say this afternoon, I thought about the letters I have been receiving from readers of "Sand Pebbles." They ask certain recurrent questions that are probably of general interest. But what I at last decided to talk about was a question of my own which a good many readers have now answered for me.

The question was: How authentically had I recreated the atmosphere and events of the revolution in Central China in 1926? For me, "Sand Pebbles" is an historical novel, yet I knew it to be contemporary to the memories of many people still living. Despite my knowing very well how important book reviews are, it was the verdicts of the people who were there which I awaited with greatest anxiety.

I have now heard from a good many of them and I am happy to report that they all say "Sand Pebbles" vividly recreates those times in Central China just as they remember them. I am at least as proud of that as I am of any other distinction the book has won.

Most of the letters, understandably, are from old gunboat sailors. A man in Philadelphia was chief engineer of one of those old ex-Spanish gunboats when she went aground for three days far up the Yangtze River. When they got her off she had a thump in her engine which he tried for a year to take out and could not. That was in 1916. He wrote me utterly convinced that I had gone aboard his old ship ten years later and taken out the knock and finally written the experience into a story. He thought the repair job a more praiseworthy feat than the novel. Reluctantly, I had to tell him I thought I had invented that faulty engine and could take no credit for repairing it except on paper.

It was not too hard for me to recreate those times from a naval viewpoint because I was myself a young sailor in China just a few years after the revolution. I had only to extrapolate the attitudes and behavior of the men I knew a few years backward into a scene which had not changed much physically. But when I tried in my imagination to experience that history as a Chinese, and as an American civilian in China, it was more difficult. I did much research into contemporary sources. I studied hundreds of letters to the editor in newspapers and magazines, trying my hardest to be the writer and to think and feel and say those words myself. In a strange way, I made myself become a Chinese and a missionary as well as a sailor, all in the same body. It was a weirdly illuminating experience, of which I shall say more in a moment. When I finished the writing, I had some small doubts about the naval consensus but I was most anxious about the others.

I have not heard from any Chinese yet, but letters from a number of businessmen and missionaries have arrived to reassure me. A recent one is from a married couple who were on the staff of a mission school in Wuchang, across the river from Hankow, during the period of "Sand Pebbles." I cannot forbear to quote. They write: "It seems amazing to us that you have been able in your novel to be so very accurate in your details and to show so fairly and correctly the attitudes of the many conflicting groups."

I always knew that to be my most formidable writing problem. I had to depict a three-way conflict. The feeling was bitter and passionate. While I was living my way back into it I was reminded strongly of the conflict then raging in Algeria. In time I found myself taking all three sides with equal clarity and emotional force of conviction.

Now I know that any psychologist will insist that no sane man can do such a thing. It was not something I did, however; it simply happened to me. Perhaps I was technically mad, but I felt quite natural. It was not until the writing was finished and I began coming back to my own proper and contemporary person that I experienced briefly the full strangeness of it. Today it is hardly more than a memory. Some of the effects, however, I think are permanent. I went into the experience strongly on the navy side, although not blindly partisan, and I came out of it much nearer to the side of the liberal missionaries. Now I am having trouble believing in the reality of my own past self.

Let me summarize that three-way conflict in China. Seven European nations, the United States and Japan had treaties with China which in certain ways gravely impaired Chinese sovereignty. The Chinese wanted to get rid of the unequal treaties, as they called them. In effect, they were demanding immediate and unconditional independence. The liberal missionaries favored granting their demand. That is only the bare bones of it; I have not the time to state it more fully.

What shook me, what still shakes me, is that I could have spent nearly ten years in China after that revolution was crushed without becoming more than vaguely aware that the unequal treaties existed. I never knew they were so bitterly offensive to so many Chinese. Yet I was not stupid. I had a fair education. I talked to many people ashore and I read the newspapers. I cannot explain to myself why I did not know.

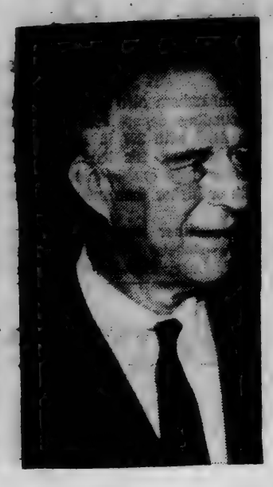
I have tried very hard to recall what I and my shipmates on half a dozen different ships in China knew and thought and said about the unequal treaties. We knew that we were protecting Americans in China. We knew we were not subject to Chinese law, but only to the U. S. Court for China. We knew it was all right to curse and kick coolies in China but you had better not do anything like that in Japan or the Philippines. We knew our ships could go anywhere they pleased in China without the diplomatic arrangements necessary for any visit to Japan. That was all part of the lore passed along to newcomers on the China Station.

When I finally returned to the States in 1941 I came ashore in San Francisco with one of my Shanghai shipmates and we walked up Market Street. We were looking all around. The shops were no more impressive than the ones along Nanking Road, we told each other. Then we came to a drugstore with a great streamer sign advertising a cut-rate liquor sale. In the window, the prize bargain of the day, was an array of pint bottles of our favorite Scotch whisky. The price on each was two dollars and twenty-nine cents.

"Pints!" we both said, unbelievingly.

We looked at each other with a wild surmise. Craig spoke first.

"I guess we're back in the land of the free, all right," he said ruefully.



Well, those were good old days and they are gone forever and I am glad they are gone. I find more discomfort than pleasure now in those memories. They make me wonder what I may be taking casually for granted right this moment which could seem equally incredible to me thirty years from now, if it is granted me to live that much longer.

Dorm Spotlight: Teague

A well-organized program is essential to any dorm's success, and Teague's is one of the best examples.

Strong leadership and excellent facilities have been combined, with the result being a unified dormitory.

Residents have had an active social, athletic and academic life. President Jack Warren has organized committees to coordinate all activities, and what initially seemed like a far-reaching plan has now culminated in a successful program.

Under social chairman Ken Glace, residents had one party last semester and three are planned for the rest of the year.

The fall party featured a combo and had an excellent turnout. Full advantages were taken of an excellent social room, and chairs and tables were borrowed from the housing office.

The dorm newsletter is distributed several times a semester and is published by the publicity committee which is led by Martin Parker. The committee is presently compiling a list of all residents' home towns and majors. This list will be mimeographed and distributed.

"We hope to set up a scholarship award on a competitive basis for next year," said Warren. "Each man would contribute a dollar and at the end of the year the two men with the highest quality point average for that year would receive about $100 each."

The recreation committee has been responsible for purchasing games for the social room, which has ping-pong, checkers, chess and scrabble for residents. All games are checked out by I.D. cards.

All planning is carried out by the projects committee under Chairman Ronny Gabriel, which is responsible for all activities.

Projects are coordinated by the promotion committee, headed by Chairman Richard Vitek. This committee is responsible for getting residents to help in the various activities.

The majority of residents are juniors and seniors, with a fair representation of graduate students and sophomores. Study conditions are excellent, and the dorm's academic average is high.

Teague's basketball team has reached the finals in intramurals, and will play for the championship Wednesday night, according to manager Jim Ryan. A ping-pong tournament was held early this semester, and the top players are representing the dorm in the intramural tournament.

IDC representatives are Gordon Coley and Dave Williams.

Harris, King Are Top Student Teachers

Two UNC students, John Harris and Ilena King, have been chosen as Mr. and Miss Student Teacher for 1963, and will be presented at the North Carolina Education Association Convention in Asheville on March 22.

Miss King, a senior from Hendersonville, is majoring in elementary education. She is presently serving as president of the Student National Education Association and is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority.

Mr. Harris is from Columbia, Tenn., and is now engaged in the five-year program in the School of Education. He graduated from David Lipscomb College and is presently working toward his Master of Education Degree.

Criteria for selection include contributions to the activities of the Student National Education Association, personality, and probable success as a teacher.

Carolina Among 175 In Bridge Contest

UNC is one of more than 175 colleges, universities, and junior colleges throughout the country participating in the 1963 National Intercollegiate Bridge Tournament.

The UNC tournament will be sponsored by Graham Memorial and will be played Sunday afternoon at two o'clock in the Roland Parker Lounges. Mike Alexander is the local tournament director.

Traveling trophies and plaques will be given the college participants winning the national titles—one cup for the college scoring highest on the East-West hands and one cup for the college of the North-South hand winners. Each of the four individual national winners will receive a smaller cup for his permanent possession.

All play will be mail and will be conducted on the individual campuses in a single session. Both graduates and undergraduates are eligible to compete. There will be no charge for playing in the tournament. Students who do not have partners should call Mike Alexander at 968-2316.

For the Uninitiated, Bleakness Reigns

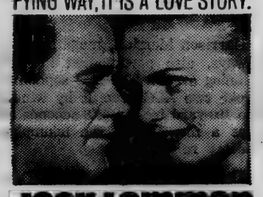
Chamber Music Will Be Concert Program

"An Evening of Chamber Music," sponsored by the Tuesday Evening Series of the UNC Department of Music, will be heard on February 26 at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall.

Performing a program of Corelli, Mendelssohn, Martinu, and Mozart will be Edgar Alden, Mary Gray Clarke, and Wilton Mason of the UNC music faculty, and Dorothy Alden, director the the Chapel Hill Youth Orchestra.

Mr. Alden, Miss Clarke, and Mrs. Alden are also members of the North Carolina String Quartet. Mr. Mason has just returned from a Kenan Leave of Absence.

Corelli's Sonata da camera a tre, Opus 4, No. 4, with performers being Mr. and Mrs. Alden, violin, Miss Clarke 'cello, and Mr. Mason, harpsichord, dates from 1694. Musicologist Homer Ulrich writes that in this opus one feels that "there is a successful attempt to write dignified, melodious pieces of music, free of formal restrictions and free of pomp and empty display."



The Mendelssohn Trio in D minor, Opus 49, will be performed by Mr. Alden, violin, Miss Clarke, 'cello, and Mr. Mason piano.

In a change from the instruments, local audiences have come to expect Mr. Alden, violinist, and Mrs. Alden, violist, to play. Mr. Alden will play the viola and Mrs. Alden the violin in the Three Madrigals for violin and viola by the contemporary composer Martinu.

For the final selection, the Mozart Quartet in G minor for violin, viola, 'cello, and piano, all four chamber musicians will again be heard.

The concert is free to the public.

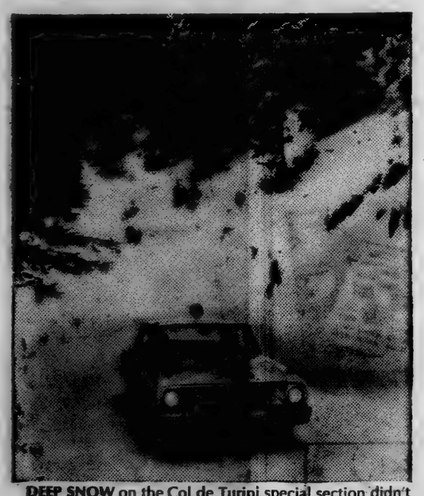
FALCON IS "NEW KING OF THE MOUNTAINS"* IN TOUGHEST 2,500-MILE MONTE CARLO RALLYE

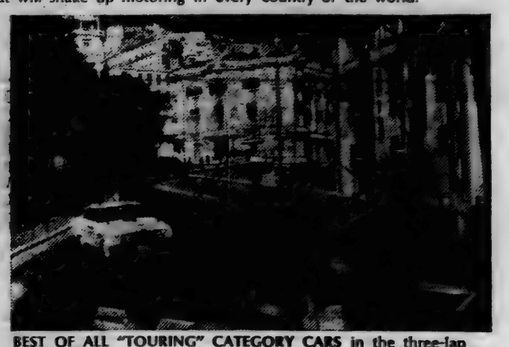


Special edition Falcon V-8 "Sprint" defeats the world's best in final 490-mile test section on icy Alpine cliff roads . . . then outperforms every sedan on famous Monaco circuit!

Falcon picked the world's roughest winter ordeal to reveal an astonishing new brand of total performance. Four days and three nights through an inferno of ice, snow, freezing fog, endless curves —2,500 miles against an implacable time schedule, designed to try a car's reliability, road-holding and performance to the ultimate. Experts said a first-time car couldn't hope to finish—and two thirds of the 296 competitors did drop out. But Falcon not only placed first and second in its class, it defeated every car, regardless of class, on the brutal Chambery-Monte Carlo final leg, set best time among all finishers in all of the six special test sections—and showed its heels to every sedan in the dramatic three-lap elimination on Monaco's famous round-the-houses course. You couldn't get better proof of total performance anywhere!

*You can read the dramatic report of the world's most rugged winter Rallye in Sports Illustrated's February 4 issue. And you can get the full story of this and Ford's other total performance accomplishments from your Ford Dealer.

FALCONS TOOK CURVES LIKE THESE—hundreds upon hundreds of them—and proved that road-holding is not a European monopoly. In fact, Sports Illustrated magazine called them "the new kings of the mountains" and quoted a London newspaper as declaring, "The Falcons are part of a power and performance plan that will shake up motoring in every country of the world."



DEEP SNOW on the Col de Turini special section didn't even slow the "Sprint." And sure-footed Falcon also amazed the Rallye experts by its traction on glare ice.

STORMING ALONG IN THE FRENCH DUSK, a Falcon plunges into the third night behind the special lights that let a Rallye driver see around curves, spot patches of ice, penetrate fog.

"LACETS" is French for zigzags like these. It means "bootlaces", but to Rallye drivers it means an ultimate test of steering, stability, brakes and, above all, durability.

BEST OF ALL "TOURING" CATEGORY CARS in the three-lap Monaco circuit was the Falcon piloted by Swedish ice expert Bo Ljungfeldt. It was surpassed by only three cars, all of them two-seater sports cars in the Grand Touring category.

Heels Take Aim At Duke's National Ranking

By ED DUPREE

In the Atlantic Coast Conference it's rare when a basketball team loses on its home court, then reverses the decision on the opponent's hardwood. But that's what Dean Smith and his talented cagers will be trying to do this afternoon.

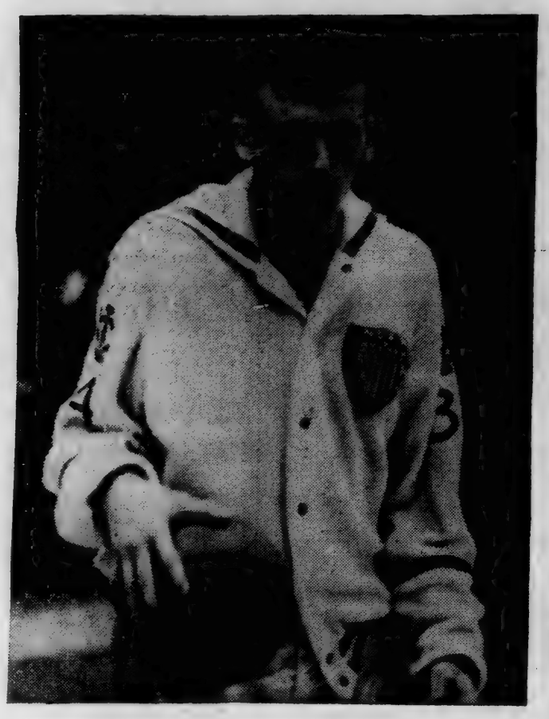
North Carolina's Tar Heels lost a heartbreaker to Duke's Blue Devils on February 2 in Chapel Hill. Today at 2 o'clock the ACC powers collide again—this time at Durham—before a regional television audience and a packed Indoor Stadium crowd of 9,000.

The Tar Heels led in that first game until the closing minutes when Vic Bubas's sharp-shooting men finished strong for a 77-69 victory. The Dukes are now unbeaten (13-0) in the conference, thus first place is all sewed up for the regular season.

Carolina could finish second in the ACC with a victory, combined with a Wake Forest loss to South Carolina. Both Wake and UNC are 10-3 going into today's games—their tournament seedings depend on the outcome.

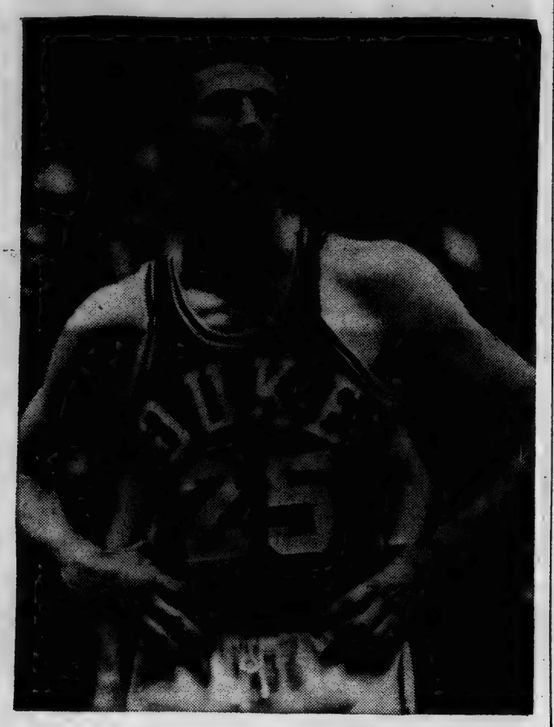
All eyes will be on the team's stars—UNC's Billy Cunningham, nicknamed "The Kangaroo Kid" and "Billy The Kid," to mention some, and Duke's Art Heyman, dubbed "King Arthur." It will be the second of three possible meetings between the league's top scorers—Heyman, the All-American, and Cunningham, an All-American to be.

Art, already picked the player of the year by Sporting News, has scored 564 points in 22 games, a 25.1 average. Billy, one of the nation's outstanding sophomores, is number two in the ACC with a 22.5 mark.



Cunningham also sparkles in the rebounding department. He leads the ACC with 297 in 18 games—a 16.5 average. His long arms and springy legs enable him to jump with or higher than men six inches taller.

But neither team is a one-man show. Duke's Jeff Mullins and UNC's Larry Brown are also good bets for the All-ACC team, joining Art and Billy. Mullins is the number three scorer with a respectable 19.5 mark and Larry, concentrating more on defense and assists than most men with his shooting ability, is hitting 13.9.



Other double-figure scorers are Carolina's Yogi Poteet (12.9), Duke's Jay Buckley (11.3) and Carolina's aggressive Charlie Shaffer (10.1). Bryan McSweeney completes Dean Smith's starting five, with Ray Respess and Mike Cooke as the top reserves.

The remaining two Duke spots will probably go to Buzzy Harrison and Fred Schmidt, but 6-11 sophomore Hack Tison could easily slip in. Sophomore guards Ron Herbster and Denny Ferguson also rotate in and out of the Duke lineup.

It all shapes up as a typical prestige battle between the traditional rivals. Duke, on the basis of its number two ranking in the nation and a 20-2 record, has to be rated the favorite over the Tar Heels, 14-4 overall. But if the powerful Dukes start taking things for granted, the revenge-minded Tar Heels could be too much to handle. Dean Smith's men are conceding nothing to the boys in the next county.

Four Teams Play At Home Today

A full slate of sports is on tap for North Carolina fans today—in addition to the all-important basketball game at Duke.

After meeting unbeaten Maryland, Coach Pat Earey's swimmers can relax a little against Virginia in Bowman Gray Pool this afternoon at 1 o'clock. The conference meet will be the last for the Blue Dolphins before the ACC swimming championships in Raleigh on March 7.

At 6 o'clock in the Bowman Gray Pool Coach Alan Gentry's strong freshman swimming team will be the host for the annual freshman invitational swimming meet. This meet is always a record-breaking event and the UNC frosh have demonstrated their ability to snap records right and left.

An hour later in Woollen Gym (7 p.m.), Coach Sam Barnes' men will have the Maryland Terrapins, perennial wrestling champs of the ACC, as their visitor. The Tar Heels have won only four individual matches in their last three meets with West Virginia, VPI and VMI. Their task tonight could be the most difficult a UNC wrestling team has ever met.

Coach Dale Ranson will exhibit his strong track team against South Carolina tonight. The field events will start at 4 and the track events at 7—both in the Tin Can. Next on the indoor track schedule is the league championships, on March 9 in Woollen Gym.

Dick Tiger Is 7-2 Favorite In Middleweight Title Fight

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI)—World middleweight champion Dick Tiger places his newly-won crown on the line Saturday night for the first time in a scheduled 15-round rematch with former kingpin Gene Fullmer.

The 33-year-old Nigerian, who easily whipped Fullmer to win the title in San Francisco last October, has been installed as a 7-2 favorite to win again.

The fight, featuring two of the world's greatest brawlers, will attract a $100,000 gate to the Las Vegas Convention Center, which has a seating capacity of 8,100.

The bout will be nationally televised (ABC) starting at 10 p.m. (EST).

Despite the lopsided beating he took in their last bout, Fullmer is confident he can win this time.

"I wouldn't be fighting Tiger again if I didn't think I could lick him," said the 31-year-old Mormon elder. "I'll change my style some and hope that makes the difference."

Fullmer refuses to use as an alibi the fact that he had dysentery during the last bout. Generally noted as one of the strongest men, pound for pound, in the ring, Fullmer was bulled all over the square by Tiger in their first battle.

"I plan to use the same style of fighting I used in the first bout," said Tiger. "But this time I'm the champion and he'll have to come to me. And I like to fight men who are coming in."

Tiger goes into the ring with a record of 41 wins, 12 loses, and two draws. He has scored 21 knockouts during his career.

Fullmer has won 55 fights and lost only five, with two draws. He has scored 24 knockouts.

Mermen Hand Terps First Defeat, 52-43; Final Event Decides

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina, its freestyle relay team racing to an ACC record in the meet-deciding final event, splashed to a stunning upset win over Maryland here last night.

A screaming capacity audience watched Larry Roberts, Thad Adams, Willie Bloom and Thompson Mann get the all-important seven points in the last race, giving UNC its coveted 52-43 victory. Their time was 3:20.2.

The two ACC powers had gone neck and neck for nine events leading up to the 400-yard free relay. But here, where Carolina had been frustrated just last week by N. C. State, Coach Pat Earey's mermen came through with the tremendous effort.

The quartet never trailed as Roberts took a small lead at the gun. The margin was maintained, and Mann, Carolina's gifted All-American, had a three-foot lead going into the last lap. Thompson poured it on and beat Maryland's Kevin Gilson by about five feet at the wire.

UNC's win now puts the mermen in fine position for a crack at the ACC season championship. A win by Maryland over State College tonight would throw the dual-meet crown into a three-way tie.

Carolina took seven of the events last night in recording its tenth win in fourteen contests.

Mann, in addition to anchoring the freestyle relay team, also swam for UNC's winning medley relay foursome and won the individual medley.

Harrison Merriell, magnificent as always, also participated in three winning events. The star sophomore broke two ACC records by winning the 100-yard free in 48.8 seconds and was a member of the triumphant medley relay team.

Three other sophs—Ernie Oare, Chip Smith and Scott Smiley—also made valuable contributions in the victory.

Oare, who won his speciality—the diving event—against State, duplicated that effort last night by upsetting ACC champion Ron Squiers. Smith copped an important second place in the 50-yard free while Smiley raced to victory in the 00-yard backstroke.

Maryland, which lost its first dual meet this season, had four first-place winners. Raoul Rebillard (200-yard free), Don Dunphy (200-yard butterfly), Hught Lupien (200-yard breaststroke) and Gilson (50 free) were the Terp victors.

Duke Freshmen Capture 73-59 Win Over UNC

By ETADIN MOLADNU

DURHAM — Duke's freshmen basketballers used a tenacious defense to capture the rubber match of a three-game series with UNC here Friday night, 73-59. The Blue Imps, who won their 14th game of the year as against only two losses, paced by the scoring of 6-8 center Bob Bennett with 5 points, never led in the game.

Duke jumped to an early 9-4 lead, and the Tar Babies rallied to cut the advantage to one point, but Coach Bucky Waters' freshmen pushed their margin to 20-13 with six minutes gone. The Imps led by 35-28 at the half. UNC managed to keep the score close in the first half mainly because of the efforts of hard working Jim Smithwick. Excessive fouls, however, hurt the Tar Babies dearly. Two UNC players, Ray Hassell and Smithwick, fouled out of the game.

Steve Vacendak was high for Duke with 16, Jim Licardo had 14, Jack Harscher 12, Phil Allen 10, R. D. Carson 8, and Terry Murray 3.

For UNC, it was Bennett 25, Smithwick 11, Bill Harrison 4, Ray Hassell 6, Johnny Yokley 5, Charlie Phillips 3, Jim Archer 3, Earl Johnson 2, and Jim Harrington 2.

The game was the last of the season for Coach Ken Rosemond team, which finished with a 13-3 record.

THE CURSE OF THE CAMPUS: NO. 2

As was pointed out last week, one would think that with all the progress we have made in the education game, something might have been done by now about roommates. But no. The roommate picture has not brightened one bit since Ethan Goodpimple founded the first American college.

(Contrary to popular belief, Harvard was not the first. Mr. Goodpimple started his institution some 75 years earlier. And quite an institution it was, let me tell you! Mr. Goodpimple built schools of liberal arts, fine arts, dentistry, and tanning. He built a lacrosse stadium that seated 102,000. Everywhere on campus was emblazoned the stirring Latin motto CAVE MUSSI—"Watch out for moose." The student union contained a bowling alley, a clock, and a 16-chair barber shop.

...and as for shaving, they didn't

(It was this last feature—the barber shop—that, alas, brought Mr. Goodpimple's college to an early end. The student body, being drawn from the nearby countryside, was composed chiefly of Pequots and Iroquois who, alas, had no need of a barber shop. They braid their hair instead of cutting it, and as for shaving, they don't. The barber, Tremblatt Follicle by name, grew so depressed staring all the time at 16 empty chairs that one day his mind finally gave way. Seizing his vibrator, he ran outside and shook the entire campus till it crumbled to dust. This later became known as Pickett's Charge.)

But I digress. We were discussing ways for you and your roommate to stop hating each other. This is admittedly difficult but not impossible if you will both bend a bit, give a little.

I remember, for example, my own college days (Berlitz, '08). My roommate was, I think you will allow, even less agreeable than most. He was a Tibetan named Ringading whose native customs, while indisputably colorful, were not entirely endearing. Mark you, I didn't mind so much the gong he struck on the hour or the string of firecrackers he set off on the half-hour. I didn't even mind his singeing chicken feathers every dusk and daybreak. What I did mind was that he singed them in my hat.

To be fair, he was not totally taken with some of my habits either—especially my hobby of collecting water. I had no jars at the time and just had to stack the water any-old-where.

Well sir, things grew steadily cooler between Ringading and me, and they might have gotten actually ugly had we not each happened to receive a package from home one day. Ringading opened his package, paused, smiled shyly at me, and offered me a gift.

"Thank you," I said. "What is it?"

"Yak butter," he said. "You put it in your hair. In Tibetan we call it gree see kidstuff."

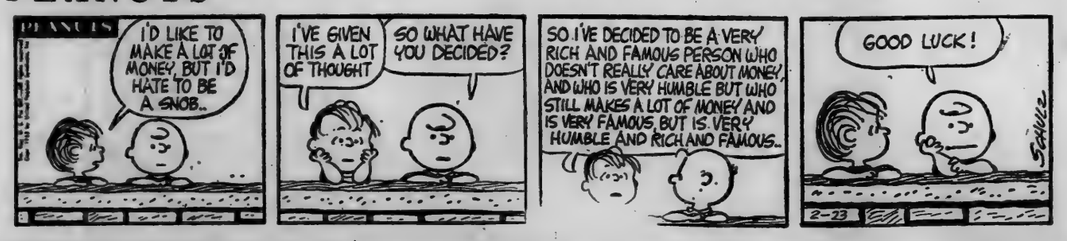
"Well now, that's mighty friendly," I said and offered him a gift from my package. "Now you must have one of mine."

"Thank you," he said. "What is this called?"

"Marlboro Cigarettes," I said and held a match for him.

He puffed. "Wow!" he said. "This sure beats chicken feathers!"

"Or anything else you could name," I said, lighting my own Marlboro.



And as we sat together and enjoyed that fine flavorful Marlboro tobacco, that pure white Marlboro filter, a glow of good fellowship came over us—a serene conviction that no quarrels exist between men that will not yield to the warmth of honest good will. I am proud to say that Ringading and I remain friends to this day, and we exchange cards each Christmas and each Fourth of July, firecrackers.

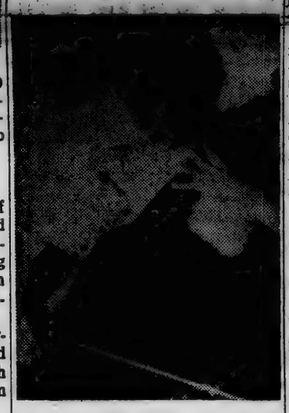
Duke Topples Tar Heels

DWARFED AND SURROUNDED by Duke's 6-10 center Jay Buckley, Carolina guard Yogi Poteet looks for a teammate to pass the ball to in the second half of the game yesterday. Poteet's problem here seemed to plague the Tar Heels all afternoon as the Blue Devils rolled to a 106-93 victory. See story and more pictures on page 4. —Photo by Jim Wallace

UNC Peace Union Elects Officers

The Student Peace Union elected a Steering Committee and Chairman at its weekly meeting Sunday afternoon. Pat Cusick as elected chairman of the group by acclamation. Norwood Pratt, Dave Canakos, John Dunne, and Irvin Hochran constitute the newly-elected Steering Committee.

"The increased scope and number of our activities have made more organization necessary," said Cusick. "We plan to continue sponsoring speakers and films, distributing literature, and providing displays to make the UNC student body aware of the growing possibility of nuclear war and alternatives to the policies that make it possible. This week we sponsored a delegation to the UN Model General Assembly and will soon open a lending library and reading room at the YMCA in conjunction with the YMCA Foreign Affairs Committee."



Cusick announced that Dr. Joseph Starley of the Physics Department is the group's Faculty Advisor.

The SPU meets every Sunday at 4 p.m. in 205 Alumni to discuss the goal of and obstacles to disarmament. Visitors are welcome.

Reine Flachot To Appear Here Tonight

French 'cellist Reine Flachot will appear at 8 p.m. today in the Graham Memorial student lounge. The program is free to UNC students and faculty.

Born of French parents in Argentina, Miss Flachot began playing the violoncello at the age of eleven. At fifteen she was winner of the coveted Prix Piatigorsky and in 1960 she was honored by Russian composer Aram Khatchatarian by being asked to appear as a soloist in a cello concerto given in his name at a festival in Paris.

MISS FLACHOT

Miss Flachot will appear here accompanied by pianist Alan Motard, recipient of the Marquerite Long-Jacques Thibaut Prixe for pianists at the Acedemie Musicale Napoletana.

Miss Flachot, who studied in Paris under Gregor Piatigorsky and Pierre Fourier, will present the first of GM's Spring Concert Series.

G. V. Taylor Asks Stronger Moral Sense To Prevent War

War 'Inevitable' But Impossible Says Professor

By PEITER VOORHEES

G. V. Taylor, UNC associate professor of history, said Friday night in a speech to the U.N. Model Assembly "war is a normal occurance in any system of independent and proximate states," and that "diplomacy can only arrest war for a time."

When governments run out of concessions to offer, Taylor said, they must follow the advice of their generals. Speaking of the advances of military technology, however, Taylor said that "while in terms of history war is inevitable, it is in this technology inpermissable."

Taylor began his Memorial Hall speech by labeling himself a 19th Century anachronism, and admitting that many of his proposals would be impractical.

"Mankind has obligations to generations yet unborn," Taylor said, "and no government may rightfully peopardize the lives of citizens of a nuetral country." Taylor said of today's international tensions that "Man must revitalize his moral sense."

In spite of this pressing need mankind is still "willing to adjust himself to annihilation," Taylor said, and in times of war, has led himself to allow tragedy to be expressed in terms of statistics. "Statistics," he said, "anaesthetize our morality. We must not think of people as digits."

Man must eliminate the "corporate revulsion at the thought of foreign states merging into international bodies," for as long as this continues, war is inevitable, Taylor stated.

Dr. Taylor closed by saying that we are endangered by entrenched attitudes and opinions and our refusal to face harsh realities. "Man will not survive unless morals retain authority," he said.

Mulligan Here Wednesday

Graham Memorial will present Gerry Mulligan and his baritone sax at 8 p.m. Wednesday in Memorial Hall. Mulligan and the three members of his quartet, Bob Brookmeyer on valve trombone, Bill Crow on bass, and Gus Johnson on the drums will appear free for all UNC students.

Mulligan has formed a number of quartets in his 20-year career. "Each of my groups has had an entirely different sound, and an entirely different effect on me," Gerry said recently. "It's misleading to talk about 'the quartet' as if there'd been only one."

Gerry has run the gamut from best-selling LP's to nightclub attendance records and jazz festival eminence. At the first Newport festival in 1954, he not only sat in with the Eddie Condon's Dixielanders, but also took part in a finale that brought Mulligan, Stan Kenton, Condon, and a dozen more into a wild version of "I Got Rhythm."

Doctor Of Old Needed Only Stars, Peonies And Leeches

Ever hear of an out-patient clinic or a medical hospital in the thirteenth century, A. D.? Or see a mystically-empowered "Caladrius" bird that could save a man's life just by looking at him—or let the patient die by failing to turn his head?

These and other practices and institutions identified with medical history are little known to the general public. But they'll gain in popularity if a local scholar has his way.

The scholar is Loren MacKinney, a Kenan Professor of Medieval History whose knowledge of early medicine could probably have qualified him as reputable practitioner in the years 500-1500.

He would need only some stars to gaze upon, several springs of peony, a jar of leaches to suck blood from patients and an array of herbs—and someone to help hold his more unruly clients. And, of course, he'd have to know of spots on the human body from which blood should be drained in order to bring relief from a specific disease.

These and other practices viewed through the 20th Century eye as medical oddities are only a few among numerous findings which Dr. MacKinney is incorporating into a detailed volume nearing completion for publication. His research deals with "Medical Practices in Miniatures and Texts"—another way of saying he's studying early medical practices by examination of extant small paintings depicting them.

The job has taken Professor MacKinney to the best libraries in almost every European country, including nations behind the Iron Curtain. Now, at home in Chapel Hill, MacKinney is recording the medical evolution into a two-part volume with reference as far back as 510 A. D.

The heart of his research are the "miniatures," or small paintings, themselves. He has found

CAMPUS BRIEFS

ORGANIZATION REPORTS

All organizations that wish to be included in the 1963-64 Student Government budget must send their organization reports to the SG offices in GM before Monday.

NEW LEFT

Bob Millon will address the New Left Club Tuesday night in its meeting at 127 Rosemary St. The topic for discussion will be Latin America.

THEORETICAL SEMINAR

Professor Egil Hylleraas of the University of Oslo will address the Duke-UNC Theoretical Seminar Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock, Room 265 Phillips Hall.

YOUNG REPUBLICANS

The Young Republicans Club will meet Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m. in Gerrard Hall. The speaker will be State Senator Charles Strong.

STATISTICS COLLOQUIUM

John Adams will show the Statistics Colloquium Monday how an analysis of variance might be performed in a special case of circular dependence. The meeting will be at four o'clock in Room 265, Phillips Hall and will be open to the public.

DI PHI

The Di-Phi will meet at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Di Hall, Third Floor, New West to elect officers for the spring term. It is extremely important that all members and conditional members attend this meeting and that they be on time.

SPO

The Student Peace Union will meet Sunday at 4 p.m. at 205 Alumni. Discussion topic will be Waskow's "Limits of Defense." Interested persons are cordially invited.

STATE AFFAIRS

Dr. John L. Sanders, Director of the Institute of Government, will speak Monday night on "The proposals for Higher Education in North Carolina."

The address, scheduled for 7:30 p.m. in room 111 Murphy, is sponsored by the State Affairs Committee. The meeting is open to the public.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Ensign, Director of Camp Hanover outside Richmond Va., will be in Chapel Hill Thursday evening and Friday morning to interview those interested in summer employment as staff counselors.

Camp Hanover is a Presbyterian Camp. Those interested should call the Presbyterian Church Office (942-3573) Monday for an appointment.

PETITE MUSICALE

Rene Flachot, a young French 'cellest, will appear Sunday night at 8 p.m. in the Main Loung in GM in a Petite Musicale. This program is open to the public.

SUNDAY CINEMA

Yvonne de Carlo and Alec Guiness star in "The Captain's Paradise," a satire on one man's idea of paradise centered around a ferry which shuttles between Gibraltar and North Africa. The film is open to students with ID cards at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Chicago U. Will Permit Nazi To Talk

CHICAGO (UPI)—The University of Chicago said this week it would permit American Nazi George Lincoln Rockwell to speak on the campus Tuesday even though it expects "no truth or wisdom" from him.

Residents of a dormitory have invited Rockwell to speak, and the appearance of the self-styled Nazi has aroused opposition both on and off the campus.

Dean of Students Warner A. Wick said in a statement this very opposition has made it "more important . . . to these students to demonstrate that the freedom we take pride in exists in fact as well as in name."

"Although we should have preferred to celebrate our principles on an occasion that promised to be more wholesale, the university will keep its faith with the student code and with the tradition of free interchange that the code embodies," Wick said.

SP MEET

The Student Party will meet at 7:30 p.m. in Howell Hall. All members and any interested persons, are urged to attend. Membership dues have been reduced from $1.50 to $1.00 since last semester.

Items on the business agenda include current relations with the ISP, the filling of the vacant SP Legislative seat in Dorm Men's 3, (Joyner, Alexander, Connor, and Winston), and the coming Spring elections. In addition, extensive by-law changes will be voted on.

Princess Liliane Might Send Her Son To Carolina

By GARRY BLANCHARD

Her royal highness Liliane, second wife of the former King of the Belgians, looked a little pooped.

It was about noon Friday. She and her husband, King Leopold III, had spent the morning touring separately the areas of the University of North Carolina campus in which they were interested.

The princess was waiting for Leopold to join her in one of the Carolina Inn's reception rooms. Gov. Terry Sanford was due to arrive shortly to escort the royal couple to lunch in the Morehead Planetarium. Newsmen and university officials milled around by the door.

The reporter walked over to the princess — regal in her two-piece green outfit, topped by a black fur neckpiece and hat—and began chatting with her.

"You know why I'm looking around so closely here?" she inquired of me. "I want my son to come here to study. His name is Alexander. He's 20 years old and in his second year of medical school."

Did she mean the Unittd Staes or Carolina?

"Here," she said with a smile, pointing at the floor. "As a mother, I'm very interested in the atmosphere and the surroundings. Here, it's cozy, it's nice. It's exactly the place I'd like him to be.

"I've always had in my mind to put him in Harvard, because that was where he was operated on for a heart ailment in 1957.

"But a doctor friend told me 'Before you make your decision, go and see the University of North Carolina' . . . that's why I'm here. That, and to see your heart-treatment center, of course."

Just then the governor walked in with four Belgian exchange students from N. C. State College in Raleigh. The former king, who had arrived a few minutes earlier, joined his wife in greeting the entourage.

Earlier in our conversation, the princess said that she and her husband had been to the United States "very, very often" since her son's operation at Harvard Medical School for Children in 1957.

This is when her interest in forming a heart foundation in Belgium had begun.

"Many Belgian parents started writing me, asking me to help their children get the same help ours had. So I started working and created the foundation."

The royal visit was prompted in part because Dr. Pierre Rijlant, professor of physiology and director of the Solvy Institute of Physiological research in Brussels, is working temporarily at the Research Triangle Corp. in Durham. He is a close personal friend of the royal couple.

Dr. Graham, Sanford To Dedicate New Building For Public Health

Gov. Terry Sanford; Deputy Surgeon General David E. Price; U.N. mediator, and former Consolidated University President, Dr. Frank P. Graham, and Dr. Abel Wolman of Johns Hopkins University, head a distinguished roster of speakers for ceremonies dedicating the new School of Public Health Building, April 6 and 7.

The new facility, completed and occupied in the fall of 1962, represents $1,816,000 in new construction and, combined with a previously existing unit, gives the UNC School of Public Health a two-million dallor building, with 120,000 square feet of space.

Dr. E. G. McGavran, dean of the School, will preside at the two-day celebration. In Chapel Hill to commemorate the official opening of the building will be educators and administrators from the nation's public health schools and from national and international health organizations.

Keynoters for the event are Dr. Graham and Dr. Wolman, professor and director, Department of Sanitary Engineering, John Hopkins University School of Public Health and a former president of the American Public Health Association.

Twenty outstanding authorities in the field of public health will participate in a four-part discussion, Saturday afternoon, April 6, on "Schools of Public Health—Past, Present, and Future." Heading the discussion will be Dr. John Wright, fomer head of the UNC Department of Public Health Administration and current director of the School's program in continued education service; Mr. Emil Chanlett, professor of sanitary engineering; Dr. John Larsh, professor and head, UNC Department of Parisitology; and Dr. Lucy S. Morgan, professor of public health education.

Dr. Wolman will talk at the First General Session, Saturday, at 10 a.m., on "Trends and Challenges in Public Health." Dr. Graham's talk, at 8:30 p.m. Sat., will be on "The University's Role in World Education." Both talks will be in UNC's Hill Hall auditorium.

Dedictation ceremonies will begin Sunday morning, with a special memorial honoring the late Dr. Milton J. Rosenau, former director and dean (1936 to his death in 1946) of the School of Public Health, and founder of the world's first such facility, the Harvard University School of Public Health.

UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock and Dr. David E. Price, Deputy Surgeon General, will make opening addresses at the building dedication Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. Governor Sanford will make the dedication talk and will present the dedication plaque to Dean McGavran.

Following these ceremonies, the new building will be open for tours.

SANFORD, GRAHAM TO DEDICATE — Governor Terry Sanford, Dr. Frank P. Graham, and the Deputy Surgeon General of the United States head a list of distinguished speakers for ceremonies dedicating this new $2,000,000 home of the UNC School of Public Health. A two-day program, April 6 and 7, will commemorate the official opening of the new facility, completed and occupied in the fall.

Defense Funds: Adverse Effect On Education

Increasing educational subservience to the demands of the "Garrison State" wil result if the Cold War arms race continues, Norman Thomas warned here Monday. He implied American colleges and universities have and will become less their own masters and more subject to the desires and economics of the Department of Defense.

For those who agree with Thomas' views on the Garrison State this is obvious. For those who disagree, there is substantial evidence that even now the Cold War is having a major, and not particularly beneficial, effect on higher education in the United States.

Fact: Of all Federal funds devoted to research and development in all U. S. universities (1960 figures), 39.8 per cent came from the Department of Defense, 8 per cent from the Atomic Energy Commission, 3.6 per cent from the National Aeronautics and Space Agency. In addition, 11.1 per cent came from the National Science Foundation; totalling 62.5 per cent of government funds going to defense and defense-related research.

Fact: Of all funds for research in that year, 68 per cent went to 25 major universities; whie 186 private liberal arts colleges and 55 state colleges participating in federal research programs got only 1.1 per cent.

Fact: In 1960 the government owned 35 research centers in operation on U. S. university campuses. In that year $334 million of the $800 million the government devoted to university research went to these federally-owned projects.

* * *

From these facts, come questions:

Is there a disproportionately-large share of the government's research dollar being funnelled into the Cold War at the expense of research and teaching in the humanities and pure sciences?

Are the biggest, financially-strongest universities being built up even further by the federal government? To the point where smaller schools cannot competitively conduct their own research?

Will the government-owned research centers at any future time threaten the independence of the universities and professors?

* *

Less obvious are these questions, whose answer may be equally disquieting:

What is the effect on the arts and humanities with this increasingly-great emphasis being put on scientific research?

Within the scientific field, will not government funds contribute further to the current overbalance of research over teaching and applied over pure science?

A more vague danger—that the federal programs by their very existence tend to work against the concept of a ful liberal, non-specialized education, in conjunction with other elements (such as business).

* * *

Obviously, the Federal government does not now have a dangerously-large influence on American higher education.

We would not necessarily oppose increased Federal aid to higher education—but preferably in areas other than defense. In comparison with the 40 per cent of Federal funds coming from the Department of Defense, only 2 per cent comes from the Office of Education—this is a sorry, sorry situation. Federal aid per se is not bad, but too many funds, too concentrated and restrictive, is bad. JC)

The Mock UN...Mockery

As the meeting of the Mock United Nations came to a close yesterday, an often heard but little understood remark rang disappointly true. Americans are unable to empathize with foreigners.

The Mock UN could serve one worthwhile purpose by offering to college students the opportunity to truly understand the approach to world issues taken by other nations. This meeting, quite like those in the past, revealed the American's inability to project himself into the position of others. The representatives of many of the nations, despite their efforts, were unable to shake themselves from their American heritage. Each spokesman was able to picture the concrete international problems facing his country, but lacked the ability to ascertain and understand the emotional and ideological factors involved.

Limited by this crucial inability, all that the Mock UN could do was paint a fanciful portrait of what the UN would be like if all the foreign powers upheld the American ideal. Unrealistic? . . . yes . . . worth it???

"Oh, Anti-Negro, Eh?"

State of the Campus

Student's 'Sense Of Being' At UNC

By Inman Allen

The history of what has conventionally come to be called a State of the Campus Address is somewhat obscure and clouded. The records of which Student Body Presidents have, or have not, chosen to address the students of this University on issues which they feel to be of vital importance to the student community are unclear and not complete. I hope that my presence here tonight will, however establish an obligatory precedent to which all suc ceeding Student Body Presidents will adhere. I feel that the justifications for such addresses, even though we are involved in a system of government which lends itself to student transiency, are plainly evident; this occasion offers that person possessing ultimate responsibility the opportunity to state a point of view which must, necessarily, be different than that of every other student; this occassion offers the President the opportunity to mention certain areas of student involvement with the hope that the discussion of these points will stimulate student thought; and finally this opportunity allows me to address you on what I interpret to be the state of our student community.

At the outset I would suggest that there are several different areas which are of primary importance. The first, and I feel sure the most important to all students, is what I would call a "sense of being"—what it means to come to this University as a student. If one believes, as I do, that the commitment to use one's knowledge is equal with the obligation of a student to acquire it, then one realizes how much the University has abdicated its responsibility to the students.

The challenge to you and me, as students, which results from this abdiction of responsibility has created an attitude on this campus which either settles upon, or is the catalyst in the formation of, two main groups of students—those who maintain a withdrawal from this sense of being and center their values on courses today for a career tomorrow, and those who defy our existing laws and regulations by climbing in windows and escaping down fire escapes. Too small a number discover this sense of being and participate in the community of mankind and in the community of students by reporting violations of the community's self-imposed regulations. attempting to create a new attitude in the University's Admission's Office in order to educate all qualified students of this state about what UNC has to offer, or by actively supporting the attempts made by the resident of another state to gain admission to a publicly-financed institution. These students deserve our respect. But a vast number of Carolina students are not participants in the community, nor have they gained a sense of being—they are merely going to school, and there is an irreconciliable difference between these two ideas.

* * *

Another area of concern which is so closely connected to that I have just mentioned is the Honor System. Need anyone attempt to justify the merits of an Honor System? No, I think not! Need anyone attempt to interpret the evolution of our Honor System here at the University? No, I think not! It has been the acceptance of a responsibility, abdicated by the University and delegated to the students, an acceptance which has been championed by many students over a period of many years; This year has been no exception! As students, we cannot cease in our support of the Honor System at any time. As students, also, we cannot slacken in our efforts to keep the Honor System vitally adapted to the changing complex of the student community. With this acknowledgement, and cognizant of the attitude exhibited by the councils in recent months in their deliberations as to what sentence should be imposed upon a student found guilty of a violation of the Honor Code—an attitude which has seen a definite increase in the number of sentences of suspension and a similar decreases in the number of probation sentences —I would implore this body to immediately consider its position on the question of whether probationary sentences should be retained as a varying degree of punishment for a violator of the Honor System. In addition, I feel that students beyond the immediate reach of the executive offices of Student Government, and beyond the immediate membership of this body should be confronted with this question. Those students, whom I spoke of earlier as merely "going to school", perhaps should be confronted with the challenge and responsibility of making the decision themselves.

* * *

THE NEXT area upon which I would dwell momentarily is that which could generally be called "relations of Student Government with the Administration." Every year that goes by finds Student Government experiencing a different kind of relationship with the University Administration. Certainly this relationship must be constantly changing; the University is changing; the University is changing and our continue to do so in this dynamically-growing academic community. So far this year I think this relationship has been unique—undoubtedly, the University has defended and continued to give the necessary support to our concept of student responsibility. At times we have lived up to what both they, and we as students, must expect of ourselves—other instances have shown that we have overlooked certain areas of responsibility.

The subsequent events connected with the "Beat Dook" parade have presented a problem to the student body, a problem that we must solve ourselves by increasing our responsibile attitude before the Administration can rescind their actions taken as a result of the parade. Certainly, the Faculty Committee on Discipline has been very interested in working with Student Government in the area of the Honor System. Having met jointly with students, there are many areas of student discipline and responsibility about which both the Faculty and Student Government have gained clearer insights and deeper understanding. Yet, one of the remaining problems which must be solved in the near future is basically centered on the idea of communication between the organs of Student Government and the Administrative Offices of the University. This problem also manifests itself within the vast complex of what has become, I feel, in recent years, a student government that is too diversified in its structure. The answer to these problems does not lie in our becoming just another school involved in what would be called omnipresent Constitutionalism—there's too many cases, both here at Carolina and at other schools, where student leaders have either overemphasized structural issues or failed to understand the relevance of their constitutional labors to the student body politic. Although I would admit that this trait has characterized the American political scene and has provided one of the most interesting phenomena of American political science, we can be thankful that this type of emphasis has been of reduced statue and we can plan that it will continue to be so. I would insert at this time, however, that work is being done to reorganize the structure of the executive branch of government, particular emphasis being paid to the objectives of gaining more adequate fiscal control and a greater efficiency in those areas of communication which I mentioned earlier.

* * *

THE WORK of Student Government Committees has been, I feel, adequate in some instances, excellent in others. I would particularly mention the work of the Academic Affairs Committee, the Campus Committee of the National Student Association, the Student Audit Board, and the International Student Board. Without trying to enter the realm of specifics—I think the achievements of these committees have been apparent throughout the year and I know any committee member would be pleased to discuss future plans of a committee with any interested student—I would point out that, for any of a number of possible reasons, certain committees have found their function and purpose waning in importance, their obligations to the student community no longer clearly defined. This fact, quite naturally, is closely related to the reorganization plans which are being worked upon, and I am sure that the necessity for legislation for either consolidation or dissolvement of these few committees will manifest itself.

Finally, I would offer a challenge to this community of students—a challenge that we must keep forever in front of us, and one that presents no less than a difficult job that must be done. You and I and the several hundred other students who are actively supporting our student community through participation on various committees, cabinets, and similar groups, we must remember the great number of students who give only tacit support and acknowledgement to this learning process called Student Government. In our activities, whether they be of a service nature, or selfish nature, or political nature, we must solicit and encourage the active support and participation of the ever-increasing student body. This is the challenge of the future of our community of students —that each will feel the commitment to use his knowledge and experience in the community of students. Let us not, then, look for tasks big enough for our powers; but rather let us seek and employ powers equal to our tasks.

Wine & Roses: 100 Proof Stuff

Maybe there's something after all to those Sunday sermons on intemperance. Certainly if every church had a preacher as dynamic as ack Lemmon, and his theme was as powerful as "Days of Wine and Roses," (at the Varsity Theater) then those Saturday nights wouldn't be quite so bottled-in-bond.

The trick to the whole thing is to make your minister an average guy, say, named Joe Clay (Lemmon), and have him work as a malcontented public relations man. Then, arange for him to fall head-over-hang-over in love with a pretty secretary in his office (Lee Remick). The next step is to have them married. Then wind them up for 117 minutes, escort them through a series of cocktail parties, put scotch and sodas in thei rhands, and watch them become alcoholics. It's as simple as that, but not really.

Because if the Clays remain in a drunken stupor almost the entire picture, so does the audience with some of the most sensitive and exciting performances to come out of Hollywood in recent times. It is the acting of Charles Bickford, Lee Remick, and particularly Jack Lemmon, that carries the script over its sometimes porous rationale, and makes "Days of Wine and Roses" one of the outstanding movies of the year.

J. P. Miller's screenplay, derived from his "Playhouse 90" vehicle, is intelligent and skillful in its clinical striptease of a couple of heavyweight social drinkers who totter off the edge. Some of the individual scenes, aided by the deft touch of director Blake Edwards, even approach a measure of artistic brilliance.

A strictly play-it-for-laughs Lemmon, bounding about his girl's apartment armed with a can of bug spray, stands out in sharp contrast to an animal-crazed Lemmon in a straightjacket. Indeed, despite the obvious dramatic overtones, an admirable virtue of the picture is that it manages not to always take itself too seriously. Director Edwards, who knows a thing or two about comedy ("Breakfast at Tiffany's"), takes full advantage of his versatile star. If anybody can play a frustrated public relations man, juggling bosses and blondes, it's Lemmon. In his worst drunken sprees he squeezes out a laugh by staggering disarmingly against glass doors or bouncing up and down on a bed with child-like absorption.

For a while, it's a laugh-a-drink, but when Leumon starts playing musical chairs with jobs, an his wife burns up their apartment in a Huckleberry Hound hangover, their life together is no longer wine and roses. Their alcoholic reveries culminate in a harrowing scene when Lemmon smashes up a greenhouse, frantically looking for a bottle. Seeing him grovel in mud on his back, liquor dribbling from his mouth and washing his dirt-streaked face, is enough to cure the audience, if not Lemmon.

Tacking an ending on to such a subtle and complex theme can be tricky business. However, Miller and Edwards acquit themselves with distinction. There's no sudden dramatic revelation to the upbeat of a violin, but then, there shouldn't be. Alcoholism isn't cured by miracle sugery and a month of rest. The fact that the husband proves the stronger of the two in realizing that they really are alcoholics, is satisfaction enough.

"Days of Wine and Roses" leaves no doubt that Lemmon and Remick have their troubles. The film has its troubles, too. Disappointingly, the pathological nuances of the alcoholism receive only bare lip-service. Lemmon does mutter something about wanting "to be a public relations man and not a pimp." The dubious handwriting on the wall for Lee Remick is a passionate taste for chocolate candy, smoothly transferred into brandy alexanders by her enterprising suitor. But one suspects that there's more to it than that. As a result, an audience is apt to walk away very much satisfied that they've seen two alcoholics, but equally as unsatisfied as to how they really got that way.

Nevertheless, "Days of Wine and Roses" is a hard-hitting picture, and Jack Lemmon hits even harder in the most distinguished role of his career. He should have no problem in marching off with the second Academy Award of his career next spring, not that virtue and justice prevail in these matters.

Wicker To Give Journalism Talk Thursday Night

Presidential Government" is the title of the fourth Journalism Lecture for 1962-63 to be given by Tom Wicker, 1948 graduate of the School of Journalism, now White House correspondent for the New York Times, at 8 p.m. Thursday, February 28, in 104 Howell Hall.

Mr. Wicker, a native of Hamlet, became executive secretary of the Southern Pines Chamber of Commerce upon graduation. In June 1949 he went to the Robesonian in Lumberton and later handled publicity for the North Carolina Department of Public Welfare. A veteran of World War II, he was called back to active duty anc served two years in Japan as Public Information Officer.

Returning to newspaper work in 1954, he became sports editor of the Winston-Salem Journal. In 1957 he moved to the Washington Bureau of the Journal-Sentinel, but took a year's leave as a Nieman Fellow at Harvard University in 1957-1958. After returning to his job in Washington, he became associate editor of the Nashville Tennessean in July 1959. He has been with the Washington Bureau of the New York Times since 1960.

U. S. Will Destroy Attackers: Russell

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., said Friday he believes that from now on U. S. airmen will shoot down any Communist planes attacking vessels in international waters and ask questions later.

Russell, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, made the statement after the committee had been briefed by Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara.

New Degree To Boost Talent

Students who wish to become painters, actors, directors, or musicians may be able to spend more time working toward their professional interests if the University adopts its plan for a new division and new degree.

The new division would be the Division of Fine Arts. The new degree would be the bachelor of fine arts, and undergraduate degree.

The University's Faculty Council, the legislative body representing the General Faculty, has approved the proposed division in principle.

The proposal for the new division is now subject to the approval of the General Faculty. The proposal for the new degree is subject to the approval of the Board of Trustees of the University, and the Board of Higher Education.

The division would be added to those three divisions already in the College of Arts and Sciences: humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences. The College of Arts and Sciences offers work at the junior-senior level.

The new division would benefit those talented students who plan to make their careers in the performing arts. The division would affect only selected departments of the University: Art; Dramatic Art; Music; and Radio, Television, and motion picture (RTVMP).

The departments involved will have to prepare their curricula to meet the requirements for the new degree. Some of these departments may add additional courses.

The new program would allow working toward the B. F. A. degree to take more courses in their major field of interest while they are at the freshman-sophomore level in the General College. At the junior-senior level, these students could take up to more than half of their courses in the field of major interest.

The program would thereby give a painter more time to take studio courses, for example. It would give an actor more time to take courses which would help him in acting. In essence, it would allow the students to spend more time in the practice of their particular fields of interest.

Since the Department of Music currently offers a bachelor of music degree, it will retain this degree for its preprofessional undergraduate students who wish to take advantage of the proposed division's offerings. However, the B. M. degree is currently given at the end of five years of study at the University. This degree program would be revised to correlate with the B. F. A. program and would be given at the end of four years of study.

The proposed division and the proposed new degree would in no way affect the already established bachelor of arts degree program of the University. The majority of students who now study for the B. A. degree would continue to do so, since the proposed bachelor of fine arts degree would be available only to students who definitely plan to make a profession in the performing arts.

In keeping with this philosophy, all students entering the B. F. A. program would have their work carefully reviewed at the end of their sophomore year. If their progress is deemed insufficient by the major department to pursue the B. F. A. degree, the students will be required to change their degree program.

There is speculation that the new division and degree, if approved, would prepare the way for some reorganization in the graduate program in the performing arts.

Joseph Sloane, professor and chairman of the Department of Art, said that he imagined that there may be students who have not previously come to the University of North Carolina because the bachelor of fine arts degree was not available.

Harry Davis, professor and chairman of the Department of Dramatic Art, said that as the need arises, the Dramatic Art department would plan to add additional courses. He said that the new degree may draw to the University students who are now attending professional schools. The proposed division would offer an opportunity to the professional student to do his training at a University of the stature of the University of North Carolina," he said.

All heads of the departments involved in the proposed program emphasized that the new division would appeal solely to those students wanting real professional orientation within the wider complex of the total University. The students pursuing the B. F. A. degree would have to take basic courses required by the General College of all University students in: English, foreign languages, soical sciences, natural sciences, and the necessary fulfillment of mathematics requirements.

In the fall of 1963, the University will admit a limited number of freshmen women who plan to study in the fields of art, music, and dramatic art. It can be expected that some of these women students would be interested in pursuing the proposed B. F. A. degree.

On The Delight Of Old Books

It is fairly clear that anyone who reads old books gets to read more books, and better books, than the chap who sticks to the newest thing.

What we want to point out here is the abundant extras the old book reader enjoys. He get to read what people were saying about great events back in the days when nobody knew what the answer was going to be. He hears the voices of little people, just as they expressed themselves, ever so long ago.

Sometimes the flyleaf of an old book tells a special story of its own, a story perhaps, of a famous man who passed the book on to a young friend, who in his turn became famous. We have a book in which James Mason used the flyleaf to note facts about his farm, way back in 1779.

Sometimes an old book brings a catch in the throat, as did the book of verse we sold the other day for 38c. On the flyleaf was written "To Rose, who will always be young and fair." The date was 1873.

In the old book corner of the Intimate, we sometimes feel a bit unreal, watching the ghosts go by—ghosts of authors, ghosts of owners, the nicest ghosts in the world. James Mason's corn sprouts again, and Rose is indeed forever young and fair. The treasure we offer is precious beyond earthly measure, though the price tag is cheap.

Join us some time, won't you?

them from Leningrad to London, from Istanbul to Stockholm, from the 6th to the 16th century.

He has chosen them not as satires upon the methods of early medicine, but rather as pictorial evidences of the various stages through which medicine has passed and the tools it has used. Maybe, he says, the historians of the future will look with similar interest at methods of the 20th century and smile inside at the crude and mystical approaches used.

The first part of Dr. MacKinney's book deals directly with photo reproductions and miniatures depicting medical practices from the year 510 to about 1550. For the unscholarly layman interested primarily in what he can see and read for himself, this is the more interesting part of the book.

Part Two is a detailed list of all known "miniatures" in the world and where they can be found. They include those incorporated in Dr. MacKinney's book, and several thousand others scattered about the world.

One interesting miniature illustrates the belief that the cure for lunacy was to place a sprig of peony around the patient's neck. Or, if you thought of it in time, a piece of peony worn during a long trip would protect the traveler from all sorts of danger—that growing out of organic difficulties or the worst kind of external attack.

Professor MacKinney's book is being published by the Wellcome Medical Historical Library of London, England.

Heyman's 40 Points Lead Duke Past Carolina, 106-93

Blue Devil Height Dominates Contest

By ED DUPREE

Duke's Blue Devils and All-American Art Heyman were unstoppable yesterday as the nation's number two team outran, outshot and outrebounded North Carolina's Tar Heels.

The result in Duke Indoor Stadium was a 106-93 Blue Devil victory—the first time in UNC history that an opponent has hit the century mark.

Heyman, playing his last home game for Duke, gave the fans something to remember him by. He hit 40 points for a career high and pulled down 24 rebounds.

But the Tar Heels had their stars. Billy Cunningham led the scoring with 31, hitting 11 of 22 from the floor and nine of 15 on the foul line. Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet added 27 and 18, respectively.

Both teams shot 50 per cent from the field in the first half, but Dean Smith's men were down 51-35. Duke's superior rebounding enabled them to take 42 shots, while the Tar Heels tried 30.

Jeff Mullins, who scored 23 for Duke, hit a jump shot and made it 6-4 Duke early in the contest. The home team never lost its lead.

Bryan McSweeney hit a jumper a minute later, making it 9-8, but then the powerful Dukes were off to the races. Fred Schmidt started Vic Bubas's men on their move by hitting two consecutive jump shots. Soon the score was 18-8.

The Tar Heels cut the lead to seven, the last time at 35-28, seven times during the remainder of the half. But two baskets by Schmidt, three points by Mullins and a free throw by Heyman made it 43-28. Carolina was never really close after that.

The Dukes proceeded to build up their biggest lead of the game midway of the last half. A Schmidt field goal made it 77-51 and it was evident that the Methodists were going to ohit the century mark.

Then the Tar Heels came to life—for the first time in their final regular season game. Mike Cooke hit for two points, then Poteet stole the ball and poured in a lay-up. Seconds later Poteet scored again, cutting the lead to 20. The advantage stayed near 20 until Cunningham hit his first field goal of the second half. Duke scored again on a jump shot by Mullins, then the Tar Heels began to look like the team that gave Duke a fit in their first meeting in Chapel Hill.

Cunningham hit one of his characteristic floating bank shots and countered with a twisting lay-up seconds later. Heyman bucketed two baskets, offsetting lay-ups by Cunningham and Brown, then Carolina scored seven straight points. Two driving lay-ups by Brown, a jumper by Cooke, and Brown's foul shot made it 89-78 and the partisan Duke crowd began to get a little uneasy.

The next ten Carolina points were provided by Cunningham and Charlie Shaffer. Billy hit two field goals, one a near-40-foot jumper, and two foul shots. Shaffer popped in a jumper and two free throws. That made it 96-88, Duke.

The Dukes ended any UNC hopes of a comeback victory by hitting six straight points, including Heyman's 40th point. Art left the game with 22 seconds remaining and received a tremendous ovation from the 9,000 fans.

Heyman played like an All-American during the entire game. Art missed 19 of his 33 shots, but when he failed to hit he went after the ball like a cat after a mouse. He got at least 10 of his 40 points by following through on his own shots.

Brown played perhaps his best game in three years for the Tar Heels. Dwarfed by the likes of Duke's big men—Hack Tison (6-11), Buckley (6-10) and the other Blue Devil starters—the 5-10 senior guard scored 12 of his 27 points on lay-ups with the Duke giants watching his tricky moves as if they couldn't believe them.

The story of the game was mostly Duke superior rebounding. Billy Cunningham's 16 snares marked the only good job on the boards for a Tar Heel. Duke outrebounded the visitors, 61-31.

Duke topped the shooting, but not by an overwhelming margin. Both teams took 79 shots for the game and the Blue Devils hit four more than UNC, 41. Duke's percentage was 51.9, UNC's 46.8.

Smith Proud Of Team's Rally; "Heyman Never Played Better"

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Duke's 106-93 win yesterday didn't leave North Carolina supporters much to say, so Coach Dean Smith didn't say much.

But, in view of the events just concluded, what he did say was surprising, for only the slightest disappointment came through.

"I was proud of those kids today," said Smith. "They don't know what it is to give up. We felt we were in this game all the way—even when they went so far ahead. It might have been unrealistic but, until we got back down to 11 behind with about a minute left, we thought we could catch them."

The UNC coach, exceedingly calm after watching 100 points scored against a Carolina team for the first time in the school's history, had nothing but praise for Duke and a guy named Heyman.

"I'd have to say this is the finest I've ever seen Art play," Smith admitted. "His shooting was fantastic, and he was making them from 20 feet plus even with hands in his face, guys all over him, everything.

"We like to think Brown (Larry) and Poteet (Yogi) are two of the finest defensive ballplayers in the country. But, today, even when they went for him and covered him, he still made the shots."

On the subject of strategy, Smith said he made no drastic changes after the Blue Devils had run up their big first half margin.

"Fred Schmidt made us come out of our 'point and one' zone in the first half, and then, of course, we used our half-court press when they started to pull away.

"I've said all along that Schmidt is a great shooter," Smith sadly related. "He killed us in the first half, and then Mullins started hitting after intermission. They're so tough. Vic (Bubas) has far from a one-man team, believe me."

Terp Matmen Win By 27-3; 10th Defeat

Carolina's wrestling team lost its 10th meet of the year yesterday to the visiting Terps from the University of Maryland, 27-3.

The Tar Heels were unable to score any points until heavyweight Jerry Cabe scored a decision over Frank Wikander.

The Terps got off to a fast start when their undefeated 123 pounder, Roger Nutzig, pinned Louis Arther at 2.32 of the first period.

Ronald Maunder of Maryland then scored a 7-1 decision over Ken Furr in the 130 pound division. Tom Quilled continued the Terrapin surge by beating Jack Jones 6-4 in the 137 pound action.

In the 147 weight class, Dave Ott beat Jack Jones 3-0. Robert Kupnisky, Maryland's 157 pounder, then pinned Ellion Dworin at 2:08 of the third period.

Maryland recorded another pin in the 167 pound class when Amando Soto pinned Walter Phillips. The pin came at 1:44 of the third period.

Marshall Dauberman decisioned Gene Record in the 177 division, 4-0.

Cabe averted a Carolina shutout by defeating Wikander in the day's last match 4-2. Cabe won the match when he scored a takedown with only three seconds left in the match.

The match brings Maryland's record to 6-2, and UNC's to 2-10.

Mann Leader In 63-32 Win Over Virginia

By Lazlo Birinyi Jr.

Coach Pat Earey's varsity swimmers, fresh from Friday's upset victory over Maryland, swamped the visiting Cavaliers of Virginia yesterday, 63-32.

All-American Thompson Mann led the team with two first places in two record-breaking performances. Mann, who is known primarily as a backstroker, again showed his versatility as he knocked .2 seconds off Dick Woodrow's school record of 22.6 for the 50-yard freestyle. Mann later came back to anchor the 400 freestyle relay team which broke the UNC and ACC record which was set Friday night against Maryland, wtih a time of 3:17.9.

Davis Roberts swam the first leg of the record-breaking relay effort in 50.3; Willie Bloom did his 100 yards in 50.8 seconds while Harrison Merrill, sophomore All American candidate, covered his leg in the tremendous time of 48.0. Mann, the anchor man, completed the race with a 48.7. The time for the entire relay was 3:17.9.

Other Carolina victories were scored by Howard Cone, Tate Kemper, Larry Kowal and Joe Mummaw in the 400-yard medley relay; Pete Swift in the 200-yard individual medley; Thad Adams in the 100 yard freestyle; Mike Bissell in the 500-yard freestyle; and Tate Kemper in the 200 yard breastroke.

Virginia's victories were scored by Jim Harrison in the 200-yard freestyle, Jim Newton in diving, Jim Harrison in the 200-yard butterfly, and Bunny Benham in the 200-yard backstroke.

Benham broke a UVa record in his event. Gordon Knight also broke a UVa record in the individual medley but could capture no better than hird in the event behind Swift and Harry Schiffman.

The Daily Tar Heel

Seventy Years Of Editorial Freedom

Increasing cloudiness today with cooler temperatures and a chance of showers.

Begun As An Athletic Journal

DTH Celebrates Seventieth

Many Famous Editors Have Served

"Another day, another issue."

This statement might well sum up the feelings of the Daily Tar Heel staff, except that today is not just another day. Today the Daily Tar Heel celebrates its seventieth birhtday.

The first issue appeared on Thursday, February 23, 1893. This was just over a hundred years after the university first opened its doors.

In those early days, and for 30 years thereafter, the paper was financed by the Athletic Association. It was designed to promote and report athletic events, and was published on a weekly basis in Durham.

Charles Baskerville, the first editor, found trouble during the first month of the paper's life. The non-fraternity staff members, agitated over the paper's pro-fraternity policy, pulled out and established a rival paper — the White and Blue — which tried unsuccessfully to abolish not only the Tar Heel, but fraternities as well.

Five years after the founding, color was first used in the Tar Heel. The entire paper was printed in royal blue ink, proclaiming the victory of the Carolina football team over Virginia for the championship of the South. In bold blue headlines the game was termed "the greatest game ever played on a Southern gridiron!"

Scathing editorials against the existing dilapidated gym and abuse of the library appeared in 1899. In that year the paper recorded the birth of organized cheering at athletic contests, giving the official school cheer as "Popsy-Wopsy, Tinkly-Tee, Vivela, Vivela, UNC."

The first coed joined the staff as managing editor in 1901 when J. C. B. Ehringhaus, later governor of the state, was editor. Photographs were first used the following year. Prior to that time, only sketches and drawings broke the monotony of type.

"Overwork and tired eyes" caused Frank P. Graham, (later president of the University) to resign in 1907 after one semester as editor. The next year saw editor O. W. Hyman turn the Tar Heel into a six-page semi-weekly. Two years later, lack of funds changed it again into a weekly.

Wartime Editor W. H. Stephenson holds the record for the shortest editorial term—one week. He was elected in the spring of 1918 to take office in the fall, but during the summer he enrolled in aviation school in New York. His first—and last—editorials were mailed to the paper in early September.

The next week the Athletic Association replaced him with Forrest Miles, who immediately gave the paper a military character and initiated small type in order to cram six pages of material into four pages of type.

Within the month, Uncle Sam also snatched Miles away, and Managing Editor Thomas Wolfe (Look Homeward Angel . . .) was faced with the job of editing the weekly. Wolfe, desperate for staff members, held a write-in-25-words-or-less-why-you-would-like-to-be-editor contest and thereby filled the vacant staff positions. Miles returned in January and reclaimed his position. But Wolfe, who enjoyed the job, ran for editor in the spring and took office in October, 1919. He enlarged the editorial section, crusaded against campus thievery, and campaigned for the return to a semi-weekly printing.

Wolfe's successor, Daniel Grant, made the Tar Heel into a semi-weekly and enlarged it to the present size of 17x23 inches. In the same year the paper helped found the N. C. Collegiate Press Association, and for the first time the words "official organ of the Athletic Association" were removed from the nameplate.

In 1922 the Tar Heel moved from Durham to Chapel Hill for printing purposes and the paper was released from the control of the Athletic Association. The paper was henceforth published by Student Government under the auspices of the newly-formed Publications Board.

Walter Spearman, (now a UNC journalism professor) inherited a tri-weekly paper and added the first regular sports page in 1923. He led an editorial fight against the rival Yellow Journal—a scandal sheet circulated by Sigma Upsilon literary fraternity.

Spearman relinquished his position in April, 1929, to Glenn Holder, (who left school one month later due to participating in the Yellow Journal) only to edit the paper again during Holder's absence.

Spearman's second term saw the transition to a daily paper and the addition of that word to the nameplate.

Voted in by a 666-148 student body vote, the debut as a daily came during the three days of commencement instead of waiting until fall, as a tribute to visiting alumni and departing seniors.

Holder returned in September, adding telegraphic service to the Tar Heel.

In 1943 the Tar Heel once again assumed a military character and was returned to weekly status. When Walter Damtoft was called into military service during his first month as editor, Kat Hill was elected to finish his term and become the first female editor of the paper in its first 50 years of publication.

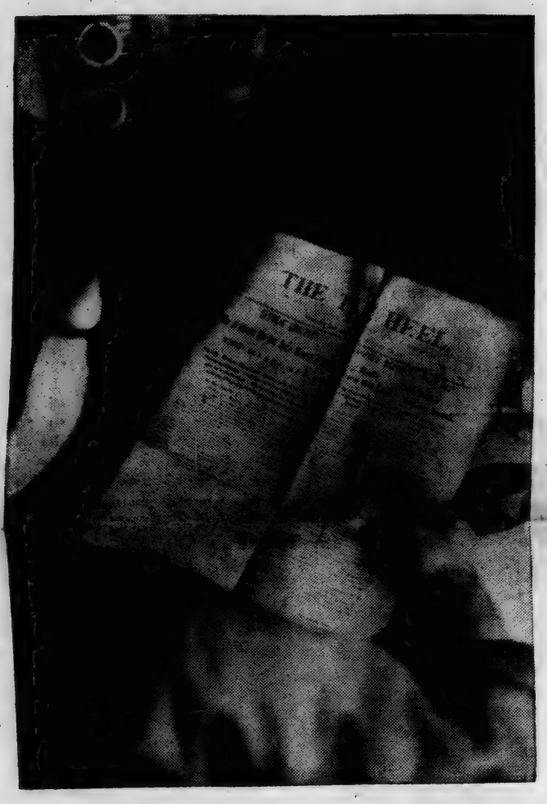
The following year Editor Horace Carter joiner the Navy, leaving another coed, Muriel Richter, to assume the editorship.

A freshman, Robert Morrison, was elected editor two years later and still holds the record as the youngest Tar Heel editor. Although defeated for re-election, he returned the paper to a daily and published the first "extra" edition (occasioned by Franklin Roosevelt's death).

During the war years, when staff turnover was greatest, one staff member found himself defeated for editor on four different occasions.

Graham Jones (now the Governor's press secretary), in the spring of 1950 became the only editor to flunk out of school while editing the paper—and return the following fall to graduate with a Phi Beta Kappa key.

Roy Parker, not Jones, edited the paper that fall, adding comics and a syndicated column.



The first and last peacetime female editor of the Tar Heel was Miss Glenn Harden, daughter of former staff member John Harden, who was elected to the post by a 2-1 majority in 1951.

The Tar Heel stepped into one of its major controversies of the past decade when the Supreme Court desegregation decision of 1954 was handed down. In line with the policy of previous DTH editors, Charles Kuralt (now with CBS-TV) editorially supported the decision in the face of considerable criticism.

In 1956 came the most controversial fight in which the Tar Heel ever became embroiled. Co-Editors Louis Kraar (now with Time magazine) and Ed Yoder (now with Greensboro Daily News) conducted a hard campaign against the University hiring "big-time coach" Jim Tatum. Tatum's friends struck back hard—they organized the first "recall" election in the Tar Heel's history in an attempt to get rid of the editors, but Kraar-Yoder won the election.

(A year-and-a-half later the Tar Heel saw its second recall election—this one successful. Neil Bass was accused of libeling certain members of the faculty and student body and making malicious and untrue statements. Doug Eisele won the recall.

Curtis Gans became editor in 1958 and was succeeded by Davis Young the following year. Jonathan Yardley (now with the New York Times) took over in 1960. Wayne King assumed the editorship the following year with Chuck Wrye and Jim Clotfelter taking over last May.

SPORTING NEWS, CAROLINA STYLE—In 1896 The Tar Heel carried baseball news, and a lot of it. While a DTH editor puts out today's birthday edition, he reads how the '96 Tar Heels made out on the diamond. In its beginning, the paper was a weekly issued by the Athletic Association. —Photo by Jim Wallace

Women Trustees To Watch Fashion Show By Students

Seven women members of the UNC Board of Trustees arrived yesterday for a two-day visit. Their visit, which is sponsored by UNC coeds, is designed to give them a picture of the life ota woman student at Chapel Hill.

Today they are scheduled to tour Dey Hall at 10:45 a.m. and then meet with graduate and faculty women in Cobb Dormitory. At 12:30 p.m. they will attend a luncheon in the North Room of Lenoir Hall, to which all women students have been invited. A student fashion show will be held at that time, featuring UNC coeds modeling campus attire. A tour of the School of Public Health will conclude their visit.

Last night they dined in Spencer Dormitory, attended a program presented by campus women's organizations at Consolidated University President William C. Friday's house and attended a dormitory house meeting.

UP to Endorse Legislators

A special University Party committee has been formed to interview students interested in seeking UP endorsements for Student Legislature in the Spring Elections.

Members of the committee are Bill Davis, Peggy Stevenson, Faryl Sims, Spencer Barnes, John Ulfelder, Bob Spearman, Gerry Good, and Chairman Bo Edwards.

The committee will hold interviews this week in the following places:

Tuesday—4-6 Roland Parker 2 and 8-9 Woodhouse Lounge; Wednesday—3-5 Roland Parker 2 and 8-9 Woodhouse Lounge; Thursday—4-6 Roland Parker 2; Friday—3-5 Roland Parker 2.

Rowan To Speak At UP Meeting

An address by Ford Rowan on "Has the University Party Emerged as the All-Campus Party?" and the election of a new Vice-Chairman will be the major items on the agenda at the UP meeting tonight at seven o'clock in Carroll Hall.

Rowan's talk will dwell mainly on whether or not the UP has fulfilled an avowed desire to become a truly all-campus party.

Another item on the agenda will be the discussion of a motion to be introduced for the University Party Executive Committee concerning the nomination procedure for the party's spring convention.

Roy Rabon Is Prize Winner For Writing

Roy Rabon, a February graduate of UNC from Marion, was among the winners named today in the William Randolph Hearst Foundation's third annual Journalism Awards Program.

Rabon, who placed twelfth in the competition, will receive a William Randolph Hearst Foundation Scroll.

The Hearst Foundation is awarding $40,900 in scholarships and grants to winners in the program this year. The foundation is now conducting writing competition in "Spot News" among the 48 American Association of Schools and Departments of Journalism in the United States.

Student Articles Appear In New Methodist Magazine

Westminster Fellowship of University Methodist Church announced yesterday the publication of the first issue of "New Wine," a journal of Christian opinion. The topic of the first issue is Sex.

Included in the magazine are "The Crisis of American Masculinity," by Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.; "The Moral Disarmament of Betty Coed," by Gloria Steinem, and "Miss America and the Cult of the American Girl," by Harvey Cox. "The Moral Disarmament of Betty Coed" is reviewed by students Bill Lowrance and Diana Harmon.

A Student Forum on "Sex at Carolina" and discussions of "As others would like to see you" written by Carolina students is another part of "New Wine." Included are the opinions of John Mitchner, Donna Bailey, Cecil Collins, Ken Toppell, Buzzy Stubbs, and several others.

Copies are on sale at Kemp's, and at Y-Court in the mornings and Lenoir Hall during lunch and dinner February 26 through March 1. The magazine sells for 25c.

Honor Council Puts Student On Probation

Three students were found not guilty, and one student was put on definite probation for two semesters in cases tried by the Men's Honor Council last week.

In the first case a student said the accused took part of the Psychology 26 final exam with his notebook open on the desk beside him. He said the defendant had left the exam with his quiz and notebook. He did not see the defendant actually copy from his notebook.

The defendant admitted having his notebook open and having left the exam, but denied that he had referred to the notebook during the exam. He was found not guilty.

In the second case two boys were reported for collaborating on a Sociology 62 final exam. Their professor had noted similarities near the end of their two quizzes.

The two boys had studied together using the same notes and the same underlined passages in the text. There were numerous contradictions between the testimony of the professor and that of the two boys. They were also found not guilty.

In the third case a freshman pleaded guilty to a plagiarism charge. He admitted taking and copying the theme of another student and turning it in as his own. He later turned himself in to the Attorney General.

He was found guilty and sentenced to definite probation for two academic semesters. Under this sentence he cannot participate in extra-curriculars or officially represent the University in any way. Any further violation of the code, while under this sentence, would result in his suspension. He also received an automatic F in the course.

In the last case a student reportedly saw the defendant looking over the shoulder of a student in front of him during a quiz. The student said the defendant appeared to be cheating, but that he was not at all certain about it. There were no similarities when the papers were compared, and the Council found the defendant not guilty.

France Again Stops British Entry In ECM

BRUSSELS (UPI) — France used its veto a second time Monday to dash British hopes of joining the European Common Market. Officials said the new veto probably will kill further moves by other members to permit British entry.

The French opposition came on an obscure legal point but this only served to underscore the strength of President Charles de Gaulle's feeling that Britain is not ready to join the six-nation bloc.

The new French move was made unexpectedly after the council of ministers of the six common Market nations meeting here had switched its agenda to avert a head-on clash with France in the wake of De Gaulle's original veto of British membership last Jan. 29.

French Voice Opposition

At Monday's meeting — first such gathering since the French torpedoed Britain's application, the French delegation said the European Parliament, which meets in Strasbourg, France had no right to ask the market's council of ministers to keep up contact with Britain.

The French also said the Strasbourg assembly had no right to ask the market's executive commission to draw up a balance sheet covering the aborted negotiations on British membership. Such a request had been made by the European parliament.

The new French challenge came one hour after West German Economics Minister Ludwig Erhard held talks with Council President Eugene Schaus on reviving negotiations with Britain. The meeting appeared to be more than coincidental.

The French viewpoint was opposed by West Germany, Belgium and The Netherlands.

Dirksen Reports 4 Americans Died In Cuba Invasion

Howell Hall At 8

Otelia At Center Of Meet Tonight

Mrs. Otelia Connor, commentator on the contemporary scene, will speak tonight in Howell Hall at eight o'clock, sponsored by the Graham Memorial Current Affairs Committee.

After speaking, Mrs. Connor will receive questions relating to her views and opinions.

The widow of a Durham tobacco executive and mother of a former UNC student, Mrs. Connor now resides in Chapel Hill and often associates with the student body of the University. She has made her views and opinions know through the editorial letters in The Daily Tar Heel and other North Carolina newspapers.

"Mrs. Connor is one of the most interesting people that I have met," said Neal Jackson, organizer of the program. "She is truly a remnant of the old south as it was in its prime. She is outspoken, but she usually has a solid basis for her opinions. I think many people would feel as I do if they had the opportunity to meet her."

Alumni Lose Match But Cart Off $2700

A sum of $2,700 was won by three UNC alumni contestants before they were defeated by Mundelein College Sunday on the TV quiz show "Alumni Fun." The money was won during two appearances on the show, and will go to the Alumni Annual Giving Fund.

Representing Carolina were alumni Vermont Royster, editor of the "Wall Street Journal," Richard Adler, Broadway producer and songwriter (wrote "Damn Yankees" and "Pajama Game"); and Clifton Daniel, assistant managing editor of the New York Times.

They failed to answer two questions: the first when they failed to identify the Great Lake Niagara Falls flows into (Lake Ontario); and the second, they failed to name the three presidents of the twentieth century who carried their vice presidents with them to a second term (Eisenhower, Wilson, and Franklin D. Roosevelt).

The winning team from Mundelein College, a Catholic girls' college in Chicago, were Mercedes McCambridge, actress and academy award winner; Toni Gilman TV personality and actress; and Geradine Stutz, president of Henr Bendel, a New York specialty store.

"Alumni Fun" is taped in New York and carried on the ABC television network. It has the same producers as "College Bowl," its undergraduate counterpart.

Carolina has been the sixth university to appear on the show. Others were George Washington, Tulane, Texas (appeared three times), Ohio State, and Kansas (which was defeated by UNC last week). The UNC contestants were coordinated by J. Maryon Saunders, Carolina alumni secretary.

Bandmasters To Meet Here Next Month

Two hundred bandmasters of the United States and Canada will meet in Chapel Hill, Durham and Greensboro for the 1963 convention of the American Bandmaster's Association and will preside at the meetings and at several of the musical events attending the convention.

Herbert Hazelman of Greensboro will be in charge of arrangement for the central arrangements. The King Cotton Hotel in Greensboro is headquarters for the meet. Concerts and sessions also will be held at the University of North Carolina and Duke University.

Paul Bryan of the Duke University Music Department will be host to the bandmasters there.

While in Durham, the 200 ABA members attending will hear a concert by the Duke University Band at 1:30 p.m. in the auditorium on the Woman's College Campus. That night at 8 the group will attend a concert in Chapel Hill by the UNC Symphonic Wind Ensemble.

Both concerts will feature many of the most famous bandleaders in the United States and Canada as guest conductors.

Invitations

The Order of the Grail has extended the deadline for placing orders for graduation invitations in order to allow all seniors to obtain them. Invitations will be on sale for the final time Wednesday from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. in Y-Court.

Dormitory Spotlight: Everett

(This is another in a series of articles on UNC dormitories, sponsored by the dorm presidents and the Communications Committee.)

"ROGAH."

Nickname of the dorm paper and all its first athletic teams, ROGAH has been a symbol of unity and success for Everett dormitory this year.

Everett is first in the all-dorm contest by 190 points, ranking high in all departments. They have over 700 points total and hope to break 1000.

The dorm is fourth in intramurals and is being considered for the Walter Rabb participation award. Everett has entered four basketball, four volleyball and two football teams, and have won the wrestling title.

Editor Jeff Byrum has columnists and reporters on each floor for the dorm paper which comes out every two weeks.

Under the leadership of President Sam Shapiro and IDC Representative Jim Fullood, Everett men have kept up a scrapbook and quiz files. They have a dorm sweetheart and a page in the annual to show dorm activities.

Dorm members usually sit together at Carolina football and basketball games. They had a homecoming display and a "Beat Dook" float this fall.

Everett won a tape recorder as first prize in the Marlboro contest. It is used by students taking speech courses.

Social Chairman Jack Bunch organized a combo party last fall at the American Legion Hut with Lewis and Avery dorms. He plans three events for this spring: an outdoor party for the lower quad, a dorm beach weekend, and a party with a girls' dorm.

Republicans Press Issue 'For History'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen said Monday that in the interests of "historical accuracy" he is preparing a report on the ill-fated Bay of Pigs invasion attempt and indicated he will lay it at the White House door.

Dirksen said he and his staff have verified reports that four U. S. pilots were killed in the invasion attempt.

— Czechoslovakian Ambassador Milovan Ruzek, who hanlles Cuban diplomatic matters here, delivered to the State Department denying that Cuban planes attacked a U.S. shrimp boat last week in international waters. The Cuban note said "there was no attack" and that the planes merely flew past the vessels while looking for another boat.

—Sen. Kenneth B. Keating, R-N. Y., one of the leading GOP critics of administration Cuban policy, said it would be "unfortunate if the debate on Cuba degenerated into a name-calling political brawl" but said efforts to silence critics would not "serve the national interest."

— Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said Republican critics of President Kennedy's Cuban policy know that "under certain conditions he is prepared to take certain drastic actions." Mansfield made the statement when asked about reports that Dirksen had warned Kennedy Republicans would continue their attacks on Cuban policy.

—Sen Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., just returned from a trip to Quantanamo Bay, said the United States should step up efforts to "strangulate the economy of Cuba by employing our free world friends to cut down on trade with Cuba. . . ."

—Sen. Hugh Scott, R-Pa., called for a total quarantine of Cuba except for food, an action that apparently would require U. S. interception of Soviet ships. He said this would "get rid of the Russians" on the island.

—Rep. Stanley R. Tupper, R-Maine, who also returned from a visit to Guantanamo, said he did not believe Soviet missiles were stored in Cuban caves because there were no roads leading to the caves.

Dirksen said his information about American pilots killed taking part in the Bay of Pigs invasion was developed by the Republican staff investigating the 1961 invasion. He said he assumes the information is known to the administration.

The GOP leader said he would make a report of his findings to Senate Republicans at a meeting next week and would deliver a Senate speech after that. He said he began assembling data on the Bay of Pigs invasion after a statement on the matter by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy.

JFK Willing To Drop Tax Reform Idea

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy declared Monday that he is willing to have Congress jettison his tax reform proposals if they are going to stand in the way of a $10 billion tax cut needed to avoid a recession.

The President told the American Bankers Association that he "quite obviously" did not want his reform recommendations to delay the tax reduction to the point where it might not be sufficiently effective this year. He made the statement in a question and answer session. In a formal speech to a symposium on economic growth sponsored by the bankers, he warned of a recession "in the not too distant future" if Congress rejected his tax reduction program.

The President branded talk against his program as being "heated . . . partisan . . . exasperated . . . rash."

His original proposals to Con-

The Rialto Picketing: Vendetta Or Crusade?

In a move that perhaps is becoming all to characteristic of integrationists in this area, the Youth NAACP chapter in Durham, supported by the chapter here, are planning at the time of this writing to undertake a vendetta under the guise of a crusade.

Integrationists — and we're not sure that's really what they are, since they seem to be trying to stifle orderly, peaceful and effective integration — will tonight hoist their pickets outside the Rialto Theatre in Durham.

The reason, ostensibly, is that the theatre is segregated and the NAACP quite rightfully is asking that it be integrated.

If that were the sole reason, we would support the pickets wholeheartedly; would, in fact, be willing to raise one ourselves. But because we sincerely believe the picketers are being motivated by a very poor evaluation of the situation, and because we believe the picketing will actually retard the integration process in Durham, we will cross the picket line in support of the management.

We stand unalterably in favor of the Negro in his fight for human dignity. But we oppose the current picketing of the Rialto because we believe it is not the fastest, easiest and most importantly, the most moral means of achieving it.

Secondly we believe the decision to picket the theater was made as much in anger and false piety as in deep moral conviction.

The complicated set of facts, as we understand them, are these:

The manager of the Rialto, Miss Maggie Dent opened the theatre several months ago on a segregated basis. The reason for opening the theater under such a policy was that she signed a contract for equipment rental which contained a Jim Crow clause. She put her signature on the contract for two reasons.

1) It was impossible to open the theatre without signing it. She might have chosen to refuse to open at all under a segregated policy, if not for the fact that she felt it better to obtain the theater while she could, and integrate as soon as possible.

2) She hopes to be able to integrate as soon as the owner of the equipment completes a court battle which involves another theatre under his ownership. Although the case to be considered has no direct legal relationship to Miss Dent's own, she has good reason to believe she will be released from the clause after the case is settled.

The case comes to its first hearing March 8. Miss Dent has promised verbally to integrate as soon as she is released from contractual commitment.

As proof of her good faith, Miss Dent can offer her own record of integration activity involving the local theaters here. In addition, she now employs a Negro accountant at the Rialto, one of the first white-owned businesses in the state to do so.

The NAACP, nonetheless, has chosen to picket until the theater folds.

The net effect of this action, as we see it, will be to accomplish nothing more than to drive Miss Dent out of business, thus closing the theatre, not integrating it. The NAACP has chosen to picket Miss Dent's theater rather than any other in Durham (all are segregated) because hers is the weakest financially, and because her clientele, due to the nature of the fare offered tend to be integrationists. Because of this, the NAACP believes the pickets will be effective against Miss Dent when they have failed against other Durham houses.

To us, this takes the form of a vendetta rather than an honestly motivated desire to obtain equality for Negroes, which, after all, is what every integrationist supposedly seeks.

Do these pickets want equality or do they want revenge! We have to admit anybody's guess is as good as ours. But until we are convinced that the pickets are as sincere in their motives as they must be in order to gain not only rights but respect, we must support Miss Dent. In the final analysis, what we are supposed to be fighting for is integrated businesses, not closed ones. (W.K.)

Campus God

For seventy years the Tar Heel has been a part of the Chapel Hill student environment. Often it has been unpopular, nearly always controversial, occasionally irresponsible, more often constructive and well-meaning, but never has it been insignificant.

The Tar Heel at times has been under the control of the Athletic Department and the fraternity bloc —but it lived and prospered even then. In 1929, in typical rebellious action, the Tar Heel expanded operations to become a daily, while the economic and political world of America crumbled. Editors have failed out of school, been drafted or been recalled, but the Tar Heel keeps going — somehow.

Tar Heel editors include one former Senator (Dr. Frank Graham) and a gas station attendant.

Part of what the Tar Heel is, (and what makes it great, in the prejudiced view of its editors), is this historical tradition and the coexistent tradition of an ornery independence. No one is safe from its barbs, from chancellors to student legislators, from coaches to magazine editors — all fair comment is fair and in fact, necessary.

The editors often assume the role of campus god — for lack of any other vaguely responsible element to fill the vacuum. But always the editors, more than anyone else, are aware of their own shortcomings and thus willing to temper their barbs with understanding, their criticism with praise where deserved, and to look at the campus and students with some pleasure, though definitely with cynicism. COSMIC RAYS
By Kenan Professor of Physics Everett D. Palmatier

We are interested in identifying the chemical composition of these little fellows in outer space, cosmic rays. They are one of the few examples that man has of something that comes far beyond the environment of the earth. Since these cosmic rays hang around in your apparatus for about a billionth of a second, you have to move rather quickly to identify their fingerprints.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has supported us with a feasibility study of this type of work for the last three or four years and we have run into the usual problems that people in this field have encountered.

* * *

You have to use apparatus weighing under 10 pounds. It has to fill a volume of about this size. It has to operate on power about one-fiftieth of what one of those light bulbs takes; you have to be able to drop it from six feet, and it still goes on working. These are usual problems; we have a rather unusual one in the center of our apparatus. We have a little device. It has gas and very high pressure. It is very explosive. You have to have a window in the chamber and to be able to see in through this window at this very high pressure, to see what is going on.

PERSONALITY AND GENIUS
By Prof. Harold G. McCurdy, Dept. of Psychology

First let me say that my research is not representative of my department; my colleagues are more scientific. I try to deal with what science is said not to be about: Individuals, considered as unique personal worlds.

I approach this topic by means at everyone's disposal — self-observation of others, biography and literature, with occasional resort to elementary statistics and simple experiments. I made a special issue of the importance of something quite intangible, namely the self. This I regard as the indispensable center of every personal world.

* * *

I like to probe the fundamental properties of these worlds, which seem to me fully as complex and extensive and charged with power as anything studied by physics or chemistry; but more mysterious, and not reducible to the terms of physics and chemistry. I oscillate between general theory and particular individuals. I have done a book on Shakespeare, as an astronomer might do one on a distant galaxy.

I have done a comparative study of geniuses; the resulting newspaper publicity brought me a pile of manuscript material produced by a child literary genius, which I am working on. I have begun studying certain religious mystics canonized by the Roman Catholic church. In these and other studies I have been concerned with the nature of human excellence.

As I said, my colleagues are more scientific than I, and more practical. Let me illustrate their work by one sample. A team of them is now engaged in studying the development of the academic skills and motivations of North Carolina school children, Negro and white, and the effect of special educational devices, such as teaching machines, on their intellectual abilities. This is an ambitious, long-term, co-operative project, utilizing the latest phychometric, clinical and experimental techniques.

TAR HEEL HEALTH HAZARDS
By Dr. John Cassell, School of Public Health

One of the major research interests has focused on the problem of culture change and the health consequences, of course, of culture change. In particular we are interested in that volume of culture change that occurs consequent on rapid industrialization and urbanization, and North Carolina, of course, is a most useful place for such a study, being a state undergoing rapid industrialization.

It is an accumulating body of evidence that suggests that the patterns of disease change very dramatically under the impact of urbanization. The diseases that throughout all antiquity have been the major killers and cripples of mankind seem to disappear and diminish. Tuberculosis would be a good example. The reasons for this diminution are somewhat obscure but are not necessarily related to the activities of medical science.

These, in turn, are being replaced by some of the others that you might call modern epidemics: Heart disease, cancer, certain forms of cancer, arthritis, diabetes, perhaps the mental disorders.

* * *

The objective of many of our studies is to try and document the phenomenon in North Carolina, as well as other states.

The aim is to try and find some of the reasons for this which are becoming more apparent, with the hope that utilitive intervention can allow industrialization and urbanization to take place without harmful consequences for health.

MOSQUITOES
By Kenan Professor of Botany John N. Couch

For many years I have been interested in fungal-insect relationships. During World War II I received from Georgia some larvae of the malarial mosquito which contained hundreds of brown, oval bodies.

What were these bodies? They had already been seen by the leading authorities on worm eggs and fungal spores but an answer as to their nature was not forthcoming. Meanwhile, I received living larvae and was able to induce these brown bodies to germinate. Miraculous to relate, they germinated just like those of the well-known fungus Allomyces and their nature was solved. This was enough to fire the imagination! A fungus that killed mosquitoes and produced thick-walled resting spores! Could this fungus, which has been called Coelomomyces, be produced in quantity and the resting spores spread in the larval habitats for the biological control of harmful mosquitoes??

I asked for more parasitized larvae from Georgia and received hundreds of them. Eleven different species of the fungus were found, all new, on 11 of the common mosquitoes. The disease proved to be fatal to infected larvae. Furthermore each fungus kills only certain mosquitoes and does not harm fishes and other forms of aquatic life.

Here was a fungus, which, if grown in larg equantities in artificial culture or in mosquito larvae, could be ideal for biological control of mosquitoes. Our experiment in infecting mosquito larvae reared in the laboratory have, so far, not been successful but others in Africa and the Tokelaw Islands have been.

* * *

Success depends, I believe, on the introduction of a highly virulent species of Coelomomyces to which our native mosquitoes have not developed an immunity. Such species are found in Malaya and India. During the past 15 months I have been receiving many parasitized larvae from India by air, but so far the fungus has not come through alive. This problem will be solved. And do not be surprised if, when you visit our new botany building, you see part of one of our new greenhouses being used for rearing mosquitoes.

POLYPHONIC HYMNS
By Kenan Prof. of Music Glen Haydon

In the past few decades great strides have been made in the study of the music of the Renaissance, the period in the history of music when the fundamental principles that have governed the composition of music for more than three centuries were worked out in theory and practice.

The important style genres such as the Mass, motet, chanson and madrigal have been extensively investigated. But the polyphonic hymn has hitherto not been subjected to a comprehensive study. This fact was first brought forcibly to my attention in the spring of 1951 when, in the course of doing some work in the archives of St. John, Lateran, in Rome, I came across a manuscript containing a complete set of hymns for the church year by Costanzo Festa, a well-known Roman composer who was an immediate predecessor of the illustrious Giovanni Palestrina.

* * *

The edition of the Festa hymns has been followed by the preparation of a similar set of hymns by the Florentine composer, Francesco Corteccia, which is now in the process of being published. In the meantime a collection of some 40 sets of hymns has been assembled in our microfilm archives. This massive collection of music is gradually being transcribed into modern notation and will provide the basis for the writing of the definitive history of the subject.

STATISTICS
By Prof. Walter L. Smith, Dept. of Statistics

I am a member of the Statistics Department. The common idea is that in this department we are solely concerned with the acquisition and tabulation of bigger and bigger tables of figures: Accident statistics, labor statistics, and so forth.

This is, actually, quite a false picture of the activities of my department. In fact, my colleagues and I are primarily concerned with developing new methods for drawing valid inferences from numerical data and in developing mathematical theories which help us to understand the causes of the random variations which occur.

For example: How much of an apparent increase in the yield of a crop is due to the new fertilizer and how much due to climatic conditions? How does one extract from the recordings of tracking instruments, always subject to minor erratic influences, sufficiently precise information to predict the picture path of a missile?

* * *

One of my own fields of interest is the theory of congestion. Do you know whenever a string of jobs arises and there is a limit to the date at which they can be dealt with, bottlenecks occur and the system becomes congested, an elaborate mathmatical theory has been evolved for dealing with such phenomena?

Many mathematicians have contributed to it; but many questions remain unanswered. One surprising discovery is that when chance ambitions are present it is no good to provide just enough effort to meet the average requirements because, if you do, really enormous waiting lines will sometimes result.

The theory has been applied, for instance, to questions of A/C slacking at airports, availability of hospital aids and the management, of outpatient departments the flow of traffic in cities and the design of telephone exchanges.

Reports from six more professors will be in Wednesday's DTH.)

Room Needed For Athletics

Athletic facilities at the University of North Carolina are not only inadequate, they are disproportionately inadequate.

Not to create any misunderstanding, this university is better off than most in North Carolina. But that isn't really saying much since UNC is also the largest.

Woollen Gymnasium, for example, is slightly larger than the gym at Davidson College, a small liberal arts school near Charlotte. But with less than 1,000 students, Davidson's enrollment is only one-ninth as large as Carolina's. And they complain about it being crowded.

This school's space problem is most acute now with intramural basketball going strong, though it's no great shakes at any other time. A quick look around Woollen Gym on any afternoon, to see students leaning against the walls or standing outside the court lines waiting to break into a basketball game, tells the story. There's just not enough room.

And what's the administration's solution? A good guess is intramurals. But unfortunately that plan has a few shortcomings which even make the situation worse.

Since before Christmas the courts have been dominated every afternoon by the contestants. And although we're told that dormitories are being represented, the array of Greek letters suggests they aren't.

But no one denies the importance of intramural athletics. For many it's a valuable and integral part of their activities here. For those few from each dorm or fraternity who make the team, that is. For all too many, intramurals mean: "Sorry. This court's reserved. You'll have to play somewhere else."

We'd like to ask — Where else? The Tin Can is also being used.

Of course, the best answer would be an addition to Woollen Gym, or better yet, a coliseum. But since that seems to be asking too much, why not keep the present facilities open at night for intramurals, and leave them free for general student use during the afternoons. It would cost the administration the same amount to hire officials at either time, and would certainly help the situation.

A View From The Hill

Armistead Maupin, Jr.

Last week in Harlem the Reverend Adam Clayton Powell preached on "The Joy of Living."

The topic, we must admit, was well chosen.

The pastor has just returned from a three-week jaunt to Puerto Rico where he had built a $45,000 home. During his absence, Powell's fellow solon Senator John Williams of Delaware made several remarks about the activities of the Negro Congressman that were enlightening, to say the least.

Senator Williams made specific reference to Congressman Powell's junket to Europe last summer — at the taxpayers' expense — when Powell and two women staff members went abroad "to study the European Common Market." The "study", which included a grand tour of Parisan resorts and nightclubs, came to an abrupt end when Mrs. Powell (Oh yes, there is a Mrs. Powell) got news of the project. Incidentally, the Congressman's wife, who rarely leaves her home in Puerto Rico, is on the government payroll. She draws $12,000 a year for no apparent reason, other than the fact that she is married to the Congressman.

There's another little thing about Reverend Powell. It seems he doesn't like to pay income taxes — $41,015 worth, to be specific — a debt which has accumulated over the past seven years. And, oddly enough, the Treasury Department has shown no indication that it is even trying to collect the money.

As a matter of fact, the federal government (through the Housing and Home Finance Agency) has gone so far as to award Powell and four associates an $11 million loan for apartment projects in Washington, New York, and Newark. The loan, we are told, will go towards the purchasing of property valued at $8.5 million and to make "certain improvements" not exactly specified.

In addition, Powell's firm has been granted a quarter-of-a-million dollar loan for some sort of venture designed to improve the morals of the youth of Harlem. When Senator Williams commented that Powell knew more about "adult delinquency" than juvenile delinquency, Bobby Kennedy felt called upon to make a judgment, which he does quite often these days. "Those connected with the project," said the Attorney-General, "are substantial citizens and are approaching the problem in a dedicated manner."

Of course.

And the fact that Powell is chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee makes him even more substantial. This committee, it should be noted, is the one which will handle some of the key pieces of New Frontier legislation — including the so-called federal aid to education. In the light of this fact, it is not difficult to understand why the administration has tried to diligently sweep the pastor's little extravagances under the rug.

Reflections

News item:

Whiskey sales in Orange County's four ABC outlets were down $102,254.10 for the six months preceding December 31, according to the semi-annual report of the auditor presented this week.

The comparison is with the corresponding half year of 1961, which of course was prior to the opening of stores in adjoining Alamance and Person Counties.

Sales in the July through December period totalled $1,049,553.20 and net profit was $132,640.20, the latter a drop of $5,924.63.

Statistics by stores indicated a decrease of $33,176.60 in gross sales at the Hillsboro store, an increase of $39,912.45 at the Chapel Hill store, a decrease of $125,325.25 at the Carr store and an increase of $16,235.30 at the Interstate-85 store near the Durham line.

U.S. Urges Russians To Accept Plan

GENEVA (UPI) — The United States urged Russia Monday to accept its proposal for fewer onsite inspections under a nuclear test ban and hinted it might make even more concessions if the Russians showed any real desire to bargain.

Chief U. S. Delegate William C. Foster said the United States had proved its own willingness to give and take on conditions for a fool proof nuclear test ban treaty and challenged the Kremlin to do the same.

Foster, speaking before the 17-nation disarmament conference, accused the Russians of stalling all progress toward a test ban by flat refusal to bargain on the number of on-site inspections to be allowed each side. The issue is the only major one remaining to be settled.

Foster asked the Soviets to give "serious considerations" to last week's U. S. offer to reduce to seven the number of one-site inspections that could be held annually on Soviet territory to police a ban. The United States previously had insisted on eight to 10 inspections annually while Russia has held firm on its maximum offer of three inspections a year.

– Tax Reform May Be Dead –

gress called for a gross tax reduction of $13.5 billion over three years. The government would recover more than $3 billion of this through reform measures designed to tighten loopholes and correct inequities.

Only last week Democratic congressional leaders said the administration planned to continue its fight for the over-all cut-and-reform package which would bring about a net tax cut of $10.3 billion.

But Kennedy, in his remarks Monday, made clear that:

—He is convinced that income taxes must be cut this year to minimize the threat of a new recession;

—The tax reforms, while desirable, are not vital in his judgment just now, and he will therefore sign a tax-cutting bill even if it contains little of no tax reforms.

Kennedy told the bankers that he would prefer to "err on the side of a large enough tax reduction" and thus would want the tax cut even if the offsetting reforms were not enacted into law. There never has been much doubt that most of the revenue-boosting tax reforms would fall by the wayside in Congress. They have stirred sharp opposition from groups that would be affected.

Kennedy told the bankers that he thought a tax reduction to the $10 billion would result in at least a $30 billion stimulus to the economy.

Cats Joins Chicks At Cobb Gutter

By KENT ROGERS

A mother cat has turned a storm drain near Cobb dorm into a nursery for her two young kittens.

The mother, a black and white cat of uncertain species, set up housekeeping during the weekend, and from all indications intends to stay.

Her kittens seem to be about one week old. Their eyes are open, and they are strong enough to scratch unwary reporters.

The drain has a flooring of leaves and a solid roof of steel. It is near the sidewalk joining Cobb and the Circus Room.

The girls from Cobb have been seen feeding the three cats, and a few have talked of adopting the cats.

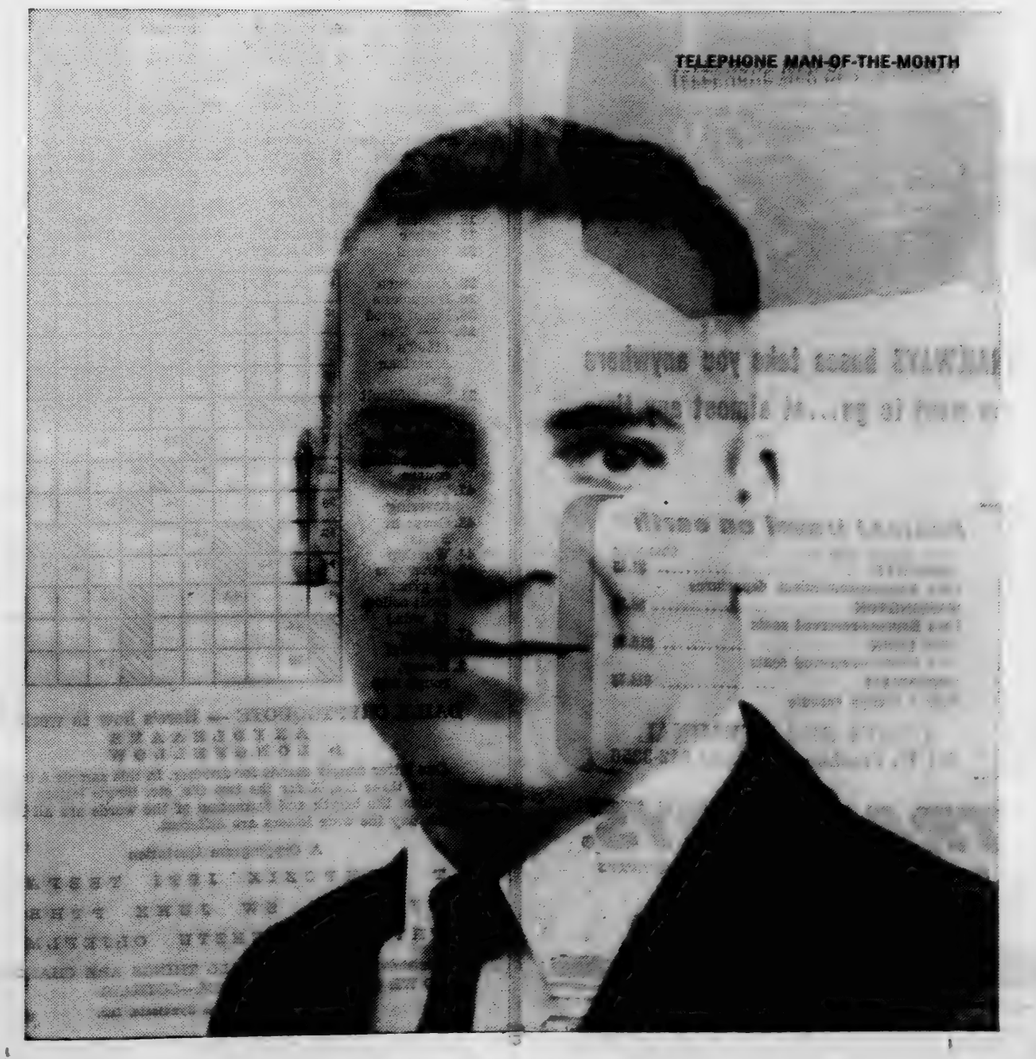
THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: BILL BELFORD



Bill Belford (B.A., 1960) got off to a fast start with the C&P Telephone Company in Washington. After a brief training period, he was put in charge of six salesmen handling the needs of 3000 business customers. Under Bill's leadership, his group added nearly $50,000 in additional revenues per month. Later, Bill was promoted to Assistant Sales Manager and assigned the job of organizing a special sales group. Again, success.

He was then loaned to the Executive Department to do a special study on wages and working conditions in the community. The thoroughness of this survey influenced his promotion to Personnel Supervisor, his latest step up!

Bill Belford and other young men like him in Bell Telephone Companies throughout the country help bring the finest communications service in the world to the homes and businesses of a growing America.

Wrestler Record Is Recipient Of Award

Gene Record, senior history major from Marblehead, Mass., is this week's recipient of the Athlete of the Week Award from the Student Athletic Association.

Record, in his seventh year of wrestling, has compiled a 6-5-1 record this year while his team has won one and lost ten. He has pinned four of his opponents among the six wins.

Gene wrestles in the 177 pound weight class now. He won third plase last year in the ACC Championships held at Raleigh, competing in the 167 pound class.

Record, who was Captain of the Brooks Prep. School team for two years before coming to Carolina, has served as Captain this year and is a modest, soft spoken athlete with great determination.

Record made the following statement for the DTH: "Our team record this year is not representative of our team's potential. We have been hurt by the loss of outstanding wrestlers this year and have been plagued by injuries. We hope to show our real strength this Friday and Saturday in the ACC Tournament at Charlottesville. We will have another shot at Maryland and a chance to retain our second place standing in the ACC."

The Tar Heels travel to Charlottesville Thursday for the Annual Atlantic Coast Conference Wrestling Tournament.

Winston Men Lead Murals

By STUART BALL

Two Winston teams coasted to victories last week and will face each other in the finals of the Dormitory White division in the Intramural Basketball playoffs.

The Winston Offs and Waterboys eliminated all other opposition as they secured victories over the Stacy Stars and Navy DD's respectively.

The Offs were anything but off as they topped the Stars by a 46-21 score and dominated the play. Tom Wood led all scorers with 21 points and nearly outscored the entire Stacy team. The Waterboys whipped a Navy detachment 35-21 and displayed a balanced attack. Ron Hooper's 12 points led the winners.

The finals will be played Wednesday evening at 7:30 on the varsity court in Woollen Gym.

In Fraternity Blue action ATO advanced to the semi-finals by beating DU 47-32. Roger Penland paced the winners with 20 points, and Larry Jenkins's 13 points was tops for the losers.

Kappa Sig notched a first round victory over the Phi Gams with a 34-21 win. Clayton Burns and Jim Speight paced the winners with 11 and 10 points apiece.

SAE and the ATO Buckeyes advanced to the semi-finals of the Fraternity White division and met each other in an evening contest last night. SAE took a 30-25 win over TEP, and ATO edged the Phi Delts 23-20 to gain the semi-final spots.

Whittle Stars As Trackmen Clip Roosters

By LASZLO BIRINYI JR.

Heath Whittle led the Indoor track team to its fourth victory of the year Saturday against South Carolina, 79-29.

Whittle, who has been pole vaulting 14 feet almost every week, experimented with a lighter pole and finally cleared 14' 6". This height was a new school record. Whittle said, "I felt real good, and I feel reasonably sure that I can clear 15 feet."

Other Carolina victories were recorded by John Pleasants, broad jump; John McNinch, 60-yard dash; Jim Brown, a double winner in both the high and low hurdles; Bob Hart, 600 yard run; Bob Bennett, 880; Jerry Stuver, mile; and John Huffman, high jump.

HEATH WHITTLE

Al Rose captured a first in the two mile run for USC.

In addition, UNC won both the mile and two mile relays.

Many of Carolina's top runners took the meet as an opportunity to work toward the ACC Championships and switched to other events. Charlie Little, the outstanding miler, ran the two-mile instead; Bob Bennett, another miler, switched to the 880; while Carmine Lunetta, the undefeated two-miler ran the mile against USC.

The UNC frosh also won beating the USC frosh, 55-10.

Carolina's next meet will be the ACC Indoor Championships which will be held in Chapel Hill, March 7.

USC "Hottest Team" Says Smith Of Foe

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

South Carolina, a sticky customer in last year's tournament and a bother to UNC in two previous games this season, will face North Carolina in the opening game of the ACC Tournament Thursday.

The Gamecocks, who had tied with Maryland for the league's sixth spot, won the draw Sunday for the right to meet UNC in the 2:00 afternoon game. Maryland will play Wake Forest in the other day game at 4:00.

Thursday's first round will be completed that evening with Duke against Virginia at 7:30 and Clemson against N. C. State at 9:00.

The winners of the day games will meet at 9:30 on Friday night while Thursday night's victors will clash in the 7:30 semis on Friday.

"Hottest Team"

UNC Coach Dean Smith yesterday called South Carolina "the hottest team in the conference" in regards to improvement from January to February.

"We have tremendous respect for South Carolina," Smith said. "In a way, I am glad they got the draw because we know we will have to play one of our better games to get by. We can't afford to relax against anybody."

The Tar Heels have beaten South Carolina twice this year, but the results have not been impressive. Carolina won 75-65 at Columbia, S. C. early in the season and just recently edged the Gamecocks at Charlotte, 78-74.

"We have had no trouble with Maryland this year," Smith noted. "But they would definitely have been tougher on the boards against us. South Carolina is more our size.

"Every first-round game is usually tough. I think maybe Wake Forest has the easiest assignment. They are big and have easily handled Maryland."

Smith went on to say that this year, as always, the pairings could pit an All-Big Four semi-final match-up.

"No Relaxing"

"Nobody is going to be able to take it easy this year," he said, "Not even Duke."

"Virginia has given them two good games so far and will definitely be up for the tourney. And of course the State-Clemson match will be a close one. Our boys are ready, but we are not looking past South Carolina."

In addition to the pairings Sunday, the ACC Committee also commented on TV, referees and uniforms.

In addition to the pairings and the announcement of no TV, ACC fathers also commented Sunday on referees and uniforms.

The five officials chosen are Charlie Eckman, Dick Cooke, Hal Grossman, Jim Lennon, and Leonard Wirtz.

Duke, UNC, Clemson and Maryland will wear white uniforms and sit at the north end of the court, while the four other teams will wear visiting uniforms at the south end.

ACC TOURNEY PAIRINGS

THURSDAY: 2:00 — North Carolina vs. South Carolina. 4:00 — Wake Forest vs. Maryland. 7:30 — Duke vs. Virginia. 9:30 — N. C. State vs. Clemson.

FRIDAY: 7:30 — Thursday night's winners. 9:30 — Thursday afternoon's winner.

SATURDAY: 8:30 — Friday's winners for Championship.

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Frenzied Campus Covered With It

By Etadin Moladnu
and S. Chloss

It started a little after nine o'clock in the morning — breakfast time or a little later. It just slipped up, sort of unexpected. We had expected rain, and we had gotten a little rain, but the rain just about died down before it began.

Its effect was very little until the temperature started dropping. It would hit the ground, or your overcoat, or your nose, and it would melt right away. But soon, the mercury supply dwindled and It was with us on a permanent basis.

An official calibration at nightfall showed that we had about four-and-a-half inches of It. Weather people said that it would quit by early Wednesday morning, but that more coldness was coming.

A junior transfer co-ed gleefully exclaimed, "This is just fabulous. I can't believe I'm seeing it for the first time in 20 years." To this young lady from Miami, the weather in Chapel Hill is quite a mysterious thing. And you know, she's right.

It was greeted with enthusiasm by almost everyone, especially Chapel Hill school children who got out of school at 1:15 yesterday and didn't have to report today. But UNC students weren't so lucky. School trudges on through the slosh and slush and many students decided that today was just the day to take the "first of my three cuts."

The Lower Quad had its annual fight with It and the Greeks in big fraternity court were battling for all they were worth.

Two major meetings were cancelled and many committee meetings were postponed because of the snow. Talks by Mrs. Otelia Conner and state Sen. Charles Strong were called off and the University Party was forced to postpone its meeting.

The Chapel Hill police reported they had the usual rash of phone calls and minor accidents. The most bothersome one, according to police, was the major traffic jam caused by a transfer truck which had slid into a side-ways position in the road.

Campus police seemed calm about the whole matter and reported they had no unusual reports about anyone throwing snow balls at Chancellor Aycock.

Paper Strike Negotiations Broken Off

BULLETIN

NEW YORK (UPI) — Mayor Robert F. Wagner said Tuesday publishers and striking printers had broken off last-ditch talks in the prolonged New York newspaper strike. Wagner said he would announce Wednesday what his next step would be.

NEW YORK (UPI)—Publishers and striking printers met Tuesday in a final effort to come to terms without having to resort to President Kennedy's third-party formula for ending the 81-day-old New York newspaper blackout.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner said he would wait to see if the two sides could settle the dispute by themselves before he adopts the role of an independent third party and recommends a non-binding settlement.

Kennedy proposed "independent determination" by a third party as a means of restoring operations at the nine newspapers affected by the strike. Several non-striking unions urged Wagner to take the role.

The printers opposed any binding settlement as a form of compulsory arbitration and wanted Wagner to continue as a mediator. The publishers indicated they were discouraged over previous city hall talks and that they wanted a binding settlement by some third party.

Strike leader Bertram Powers, president of Local 6 of the International Typographical Union (ITU) said:

"We presume that if we don't reach an agreement . . . that the mayor will then make public a settlement to the parties, which we know will not be binding and to which we do not object."

Local NAACP Will Picket Art Theater

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

The UNC chapter of NAACP voted Monday night to co-operate when the Durham youth chapter hoists their pickets againt the Rialto Theater beginning March 1. Pickets will be up each week night from 4 to 9 p.m. and on weekends from 1 to 9 p.m. The UNC chapter will take charge of the pickets each night from 7 until 8.

The Durham youth group said they decided to picket the Rialto after its manager, Miss Maggie Dent, failed to integrate the theater after indicating she would. Both groups said they were not picketing against Miss Dent personally, but against a segregated theater.

The Rialto is an art theater, catering primarily to the university communities.

Miss Dent said yesterday, "Picketing the Rialto is a senseless action because it cannot possibly get the theater opened on a non-racial basis at this time.

"I always wanted the theater—the first one with a real art policy in the triangle area—to be open to anyone who wanted to see the kind of films shown here. Anyone who knows me at all knows that. Unfortunately at the last minute, I had to open it differently.

"From most people I have had understanding and tolerance of the situation. I regret that a few others will not wait a few short weeks which could see a change in the situation as it now exists.

"Only a closed Rialto can result if the picketing is successful in its aim. Picketing the Rialto at this time cannot open it on an integrated basis."

Miss Dent said she feels that personal feelings have entered the matter. "Since other theaters in Durham, all segregated, are not being picketed, I can only believe the real purpose for the picketing is to destroy the Rialto because I accepted a temporary compromise to be able to open it at all."

But Kellis Parker and Mrs. Marion Davis, speaking for the campus chapter of the NAACP said jointly, "We cannot and will not let personal feelings creep into our actions." Parker added, "As far as Negroes are concerned, the Rialto Theater doesn't exisit, and we are just trying to be treated as human beings." Both the Durham youth chapter and the UNC chapter have stated several times they were not picketing Miss Dent, but were "picketing to achieve human equality."

Count Basie, Tokens To Play For Germans

Count Basie and his sixteen-piece jazz orchestra and the folksinging group, the Tokens, will be featured at the Winter Germans Concert here, March 8, Germans Club president, Dexter Rumsey announced yesterday. The concert will be Friday, March 8 at eight o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Basie and his orchestra have received world-wide acclaim as a foremost jazz band. They have played before many European audiences and have made several Royal Command performances. Recently Basie received the Downbeat magazine award as outstanding jazz musician.

The Tokens specialize in doing folksinging numbers. Their record of "The Lion Sleeps Tonight" sold three million copies and headed the best-selling list for several months.

IDC Advises: Duck Snowballs, Fights

The IDC yesterday requested all IDC representatives to "be especially careful" of snowball fights during the current snowfall. Students were especially warned not to throw snowballs at coeds who might be passing by dorms.

Goal Of West Is Free Cuba, Dean Rusk Says

Soviets Can't Be Accepted On Island

HOUSTON, Tex. (UPI) Secretary of State Dean Rusk said Tuesday the goal of the American hemisphere must be to "return the Cuban people, under free leadership, to their rightful place in the American family."

Addressing the Texas Daily Newspaper Association, Rusk also said the administration hopes to work out a multilateral nuclear force with NATO countries. He said the U. S. attitude on how it should be done "will depend in large part upon the attitude of our allies."

Reiterating U. S. policies on Cuba, Rusk said a Marxist-Leninist regime there is "incompatible with the commitments of the hemisphere and with the obligations of Cuba itself."

"Cuba will not be permitted to use any of its arms outside of Cuba," Rusk declared. "A Soviet military presence on that island cannot be accepted."

"Castro is learning that the path on which he has embarked has no future for himself or the Cuban people, except the future of increasing misery and frustration.

"The hemisphere is again unanimous that the object must be to return the Cuban people, under free leadership, to their rightful place in the American family. And policies and actions, taken by many countries throughout the free world, are being directed to that necessary result."

As for North Atlantic nuclear defenses, Rusk said the present concentration of nuclear power in the hands of the United States "may not fully meet European requirements."

But for European countries to develop separate, nuclear forces, he said, would increase the risk of war, make disarmament more difficult and rob Western defenses of the "unity of strategy and direction."

The third alternative Rusk said, is to organize a multilateral nuclear force "in which the European countries and the United States would share on a basis of equality."

Fall Dean's List Counts 218 In A&S

Mulligan Gives Jazz Fest At 8

Gerry Mulligan and three members of his famous jazz quartet will appear in Memorial Hall tonight at 8, sponsored by Graham Memorial.

Recently, Mulligan has been acclaimed by "Downbeat" magazine as "the one U. S. musician with a legitimate claim to a connection with the bossa nova and just about the only one who had not made a bossa nova album."

A latin contemporary said of Mulligan's connection with the bossa nova, "Bossa nova has a jazz influence. Gerry Mulligan had a great influence on us. You could call bossa nova 'cool samba,' and somebody did call it that in Brazil. The authentic Negro samba is very primitive. They use maybe 10 percussion instruments and maybe four or five singers. They shout and the music is very hot and wonderful. Bossa nova is cool and contained, on the other hand. It tells the story, including the lyrics, trying to be simple and serious and lyrical."

"When you cool down the obvious," said Mulligan, "you can say more melodically and harmonically. That is the connection between the bossa nova and West Coast jazz. It's kind of wonderful."

Mulligan has also been a leader in the small band movement and a unique small band instrumentation—trumpet, trombone, alto saxophone, baritone saxophone, French horn, tuba, piano and drums—as well as the integrated, loosely swaying ensembles that were as important as the solos.

He also started another upheaval by organizing a pianoless quartet composed of his baritone sax, a trumpet, bass and drums. Almost immediately the piano became unpopular and innumerable quartets, which attempted the same deceptively simple mobile counterpoint and soft, melodius movements, sprouted wih every conceivable combinaion of instruments.

Gerry Mulligan first gained acceptance as an arranger, though his fans know him primarily as a baritone saxophonist. He has been writing for big bands since he was 16, and now has 20 years' experience at it. In the '40's he wrote for the Claude Thornhill band. Then in 1949, he and Gil Evan, Miles Davis, and John Lewis organized an experimental band. They made a series of single records for Capitol, launching the era of so-called "cool jazz."

Mulligan went on to form a series of groups, including a sextet and several quarters—the latest revision of which includes Mulligan on baritone; Bob Brookmeyer on trombone; Bill Crow, bass; and Gus Johnson, drums.

I.D. cards will be reuired for admission tonight.

Student Union Gets Backing Of Trustees

The Visiting Committee of the University Board of Trustees recommended Monday that the trustees support the construction of a student union building, an undergraduate library and air-conditioning for the Wilson Library at UNC.

In its annual report, the Committee said that a student union should be considered a "high priority item among the Capital Improvement needs at the Chapel Hill campus." The Committee said that a student union is "the center and laboratory for the development of student leadership, and the availability of such training on the Carolina campus has been one of its finest assets through the years."

The Committee also urged that the budget request for library purposes be appropriated by the General Assembly. The need for a fully air-conditioned library to promote full use of the library and to protect books and documents from damage and deterioration was cited by the Committee.

The Committee commended the University for its efforts to establish a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree and urged that an "adequate University theatre" and additional personnel in areas of the performing and fine arts be supported by the trustees. They endorsed the strengthening of applied science in the existing science departments of UNC.

At the conclusion of the report, the Committee said they shared "the quiet but deep concern of the administration, faculty and students that UNC does not have the financial support available to other distinguished Universities."

Nikki Plans Major Speech On Red Policy

MOSCOW (UPI) — Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev will deliver a major address Wednesday which may contain new warnings to the West as part of an apparently hardening Kremlin line.

The Soviet Foreign Ministry announced that Khrushchev will speak at a pre-election rally opening in the Kremlin's Palace of Congresses. The new hard line appeared to be part of Soviet efforts to patch up differences with Communist China.

Soviet Defense Minister Radion Malinovsky warned last week that any attack on Cuba would trigger World War III and devestate the United States and its allies.

Diplomatic sources said Khrushchev may echo Malinovsky's warning now that time apparently has healed any political wounds he may have suffered in the withdrawal of Soviet missiles from Cuba last October.

His speech is timed two days after U. S. Ambassador Foy Kohler met Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko. Their discussion was not made public but there was speculation it touched on removal of Soviet troops from Cuba.

The premier is expected to air such issues as the nuclear test ban talks, the Franco-German friendship treaty and U. S. nuclear forces in Europe.

The speech, which will be broadcast abroad, will be made to voters from Moscow's Kalinin electoral district where Khrushchev is running for deputy to the Russian Federation Supreme Soviet.

UNC Glee Club Repays Debt For Recording

The Men's Glee Club has repaid the $500 which it borrowed from Student Government last spring.

The loan, which was above the normal Glee Club budget, was arranged to finance advance payments on a long-playing record, "Hark the Sound," which the Glee Club recorded last spring and has been selling this year.

Good response to the record has made it possible to repay the loan earlier than was expected. Sales are now above 1,000, reports sales manager Dennis Sweeney. The record has already made a profit.

The Glee Club for this semester plans its customary spring tour. According to tour manager Whit Joyner, the tour will consist mostly of appearances in Virginia. No dates have been set.

Before going on tour, the club will appear in the Music Department's Tuesday Evening Series. The program will consist of choral selections from noted operas.

Scientists Doubt Russian Claim Of Reviving Lizard

NEW YORK (UPI) — Moscow Radio reported Tuesday Soviet geologists had revived two prehistoric lizards which hibernated in the frozen wastes of Siberia for 5,000 years, but a U. S. scientist said there must have been "some sloppy scientific observation."

Dr. Charles M. Bogert, of the American Museum of Natural History, not only expressed skepticism at the Moscow report but also cast doubt on reports of fish surviving after being frozen in ice for years and toads being found alive after being sealed in walls for a century.

The Moscow Radio report said that because of the Siberian lizard discoveries, Russian scientists now believe it may be possible to send men on long space flights while frozen in a state of anabiosis, or suspended animation.

The broadcast identified the lizards as four-toed tritons and said one was found a a depth of 25 feet underground and another at 13 feet. It said they had revived and eaten flies and berries out of scientists' hands before dying a few weeks later.

" 'Triton' is the old name for newts," Dr. Bogert said. "It is an expression that has not been used in scientific circles in the last 50 or 60 years. A newt is a salamander. All living salamanders have four toes. Triton comes from Greek mythology.

"My guess is that these lizards reported by Moscow either fell into the excavation or went down a rodent hole. Salamanders are active right down to the freezing point but at a couple of degrees below that they die. I do not know where the permafrost extends where they were found. I am doubtful it would be freezing at 13 feet. You could estimate by our recent cold snap here.

"Some salamanders can be frozen for prolonged periods and revived.

I talked with a palentologist at lunch and he even doubts that fish can be frozen and restored. So many of these stories turn out to be based on sloppy scientific observation."

An Accepted Party And Some Belated Comment

Without a lot of undue self-consciousness and fuss, in a pleasantly relaxed and casual manner, the Delta Kappa Epsilon social fraternity recently played host to an integrated group of Model UN Assembly delegates.

The occasion was none other than one of those fabled, fun, fraternity parties. As far as we can tell, there was no special effort on the part of anyone to arrange social situations. The DKE's and the delegates just danced, drank, gabbed, and relaxed.

Indeed, the whole affair seems most significant because of the attention which it did not receive. It was set up, carried out, and heard about as nothing so very special. Aside from the fact than an exclusive social organization chose to open its doors to a group of non members from over fifty different schools, and chose to dig into their own coffers to provide music and booze, nothing about the party has received much comment.

We believe that the fact of the party itself is a cause for more than a little elation, but we hold that the manner in which everyone concerned has quietly, indeed almost nonchalantly, taken note of the social integration is cause for wholesale favorable comment.

And yet, in a very real sense, we must recognize any such comment as a violation of that very silence which we feel merits praise. Any mention of the "quiet acceptance" seems to twist itself into an attention-getting device which on too many occasions has ruined favorable events or intentions.

Surely, in too many instances well intending, unfortunate souls have drawn attention to particular events and situations, hoping to highlight or set off a noble example, they wake up to a clamor of dissenting opinion which must destroy any previous notion of a climate of settled acceptance.

We, obviously, hope that such will not be the case. Slight comment is extended in a clumsy effort to hold up one of those "noble examples," nothing more is intended.

Perhaps the party is indicative of more than relaxed or enlightened group of Carolina Gentlemen, we do not know. Perhaps such an event could shed light on both past and proposed collegiate integration, we cannot say. And, indeed, there may never be another similar event on this campus.

But, in any event, on the weekend just past, one of the campus' largest and most respected social fraternities opened its doors to a group of delegates from colleges across the nation; the fact that they were of various races and colors apparently bothered no one concerned, and that seems to be enough said. Our Proud Southern Heritage

Only eighty-seven years ago Reconstruction ended, and the South once again took the reigns of government. It brings to mind a speech made by one of America's greatest men, if not the greatest:

Fourscore and seven years ago our grandfathers brought forth the beginnings of a new South, conceived in hatred and dedicated to the Doctrine of White Supremacy.

Now we are engaged in a civil rights war, testing whether this Nigger or that Nigger, so conceived, shall stand or the South endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to burn a cross as a final answer for those who here refused to knuckle under that the South might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we must dedicate — we must consecrate — we must hallow — the South. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here to put the Niggers in their place, must be remembered. The world will little note nor long remember what's been said here, but it must never forget the Niggers' place here. It is for us the white southerners to be dedicated to the unfinished work which they who fought here before us have thus far so nobly advanced discrimination.

It is for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us — that from our honored past we take increased devotion to the white man's cause so the Niggers wil pay full measure for their disrespect — that we here highly resolve that these Niggers shall not have won the war — that the South, under God, shall have a new burst of glory and that government of the whites, by the whites and for the whites, shall not perish from the South.

—Jeffrey Jones

Porpoises

Scientists tell us that porpoises have intelligence potential almost as great as that of human beings.

Their brains are almost as large, they communicate with a language of their own, they react quickly and with insight to human training, they band together in families and communities and can use limited reason to solve simple tests. In short, we can be replaced.

And therein lies a juicy parallel for segregationists and extremists of most kinds to get all hot-eyed and bothered over.

Previously, white supremacists have had only Negroes, Indians, Catholics and Jews to discriminate against and secretly fear. Now they got porpoises.

Can you imagine the University of Alabama giving Dr. William C. George of UNC a $3,000 grant to prove that whites are biologically superior to porpoises?

Of course there are many implications in the porpoise problem, but the most pressing is painfully obvious:

How would you like your sister to marry a porpoise?

Research — Its Human Consequences

(Editor's Note: We present the last six of 12 brief talks given by faculty members of UNC at Chapel Hill to the midwinter meeting of the North Carolina Press Association. The first six appeared Tuesday.

TAR HEELS OF 10,000 YEARS AGO

By Prof. Joffre Coe, Anthropologist

This year North Carolina is commemorating the 300th anniversary of the granting of its Charter to the Lords Proprietors by King Charles II of England — but we cannot say that this marks the beginning of North Carolina history. Neither can we use the birth of Virginia Dare on Roanoke Island in the year 1587 as a point to mark the beginning of Carolina history.

Ten thousand years earlier, other human beings were living on this land. They lived as small family groups along the banks of the rivers and on the shores of the sounds and the sea. In many ways these first Carolinians were similar to our own ancestors who, at that time, had only recently emerged from their caves in Western Europe.

This was the time when Britain was still connected to the continent, and the great glaciers of the north were covering all of Scandinavia and most of Canada.

* * *

For the past 25 years the Research Laboratories on Anthropology have been trying to gain an understanding of this vast pageant of human events that is also part of our heritage. We have learned man ythings about these people. Today, we can trace their pathways through 10 millenia. Yet our task is far from complete. We have gained an outline. Now we must write the chapters.

As we look to the future we find that time and progress are not our allies. Progress we must have, but in achieving it we also destroy our archaeological resources. Our primary effort, therefore, must be directed toward salvaging these prehistoric documents. It is not unreasonable to move the books from a library before you tear down the building.

AID TO DEPENDENT CHILDREN

By Prof. Daniel O. Price, Institute for Research in Social Science

The study of the Aid to Dependent Children program has collected information in 42 states and the District of Columbia from nearly 6,000 families with about 17,000 children. The final report of the first part of the study is completed and being published at the present time. You will all be receiving news releases regarding the publication of this volume in the near future. However, further analysis of the data will continue during the next 18 months.

* * *

In the study and in the further analysis of the data, efforts are being made to shed some light on such questions as:

How did a family receiving Aid to Dependent Children attempt to help itself financially?

How many children receiving ADC assistance leave school before finishing high school or before 18?

What are the reasons they give for leaving school?

Of those who do finish high school, how many go on for further education beyond high school?

How many of the fathers and mothers of these families grew up in homes that received welfare assistance?

Illegitimacy is always a question that is raised when ADC is discussed even though more than 80 per cent of the children assisted are legitimate. Special study is being made of the factors associated with illegitimacy and of the consequences for a child of being illegitimate.

Although one-third of the families were still in dire need when their cases were closed, we are studying the ways in which the rest of the families achieved sufficient income so that they no longer had to depend on welfare assistance, because rehabilitation of financially dependent families must be one of our goals. We must make a distinction between poverty and financial dependency and make a greater effort to reduce financial dependency rather than just alleviate poverty.

SHAKESPEARE AND THE CENSORS

By Prof. Ernest Talbert, Dept. of English

As many of you know, Shakespeare's "Richard II" came to the attention of the authorities when it was performed on the eve of the revolt of the Earl of Essex in February of 1601. Yet the actors were performing within 10 days of their examination by the Privy Council, and Shakespeare's drama must have been authorized by the official censor some five years previously.

The question is how something that Essex's supporters considered to be good propaganda could have passed the censor's eye and could have been considered harmless by the harsh examiners inquiring into the activities of a group of rebels. The answer lies in the fact that all political propagandists work with and from current commonplaces. That was as true in Shakespeare's day as in ours—as the pamphlets of the Catholic right, the Puritan left, the Anglican middle-way, and the speeches in Elizabeth I's House of Commons show.

* * *

What Shakespeare did was to balance conflicting ideas against one another—a technique not entirely unfamiliar to modern readers and writers of editorials. Utilizing the emotional appeal that made those commonplaces useful to propagandists, Shakespeare bridged the conflicting political commonplaces of his day and thereby increased the depth of his characterization and the edge of his poetry, while avoiding the dangers liable to result from censorship. The demonstration of this fact is part of a larger study of the way in which Shakespeare worked with the emotions of his contemporaries, especially those who had seen at least some of the 697 non-Shakespearean dramas that we know were performed immediately before and during the years when Shakespeare wrote his plays.

UNIVAC NEWS EDITING

By Prof. Wayne Danielson, School of Journalism

Stuart Sechriest and some of the Computation Center people and I are studying some of the ways in which high-speed electronic computers can aid or assist the modern newspaper in its job of keeping the public informed.

We seem to be finding two things: (1) Computors can perform automatically many of the backshop production tasks now done by men and linotype machines. They can hyphenate and justify copy. They can make corrections upon receipt of instructions from an editor. They can add new leads to old stories. They can put out a tape capable of operating line casting machines, or they can print out a clean copy of the edited and corrected stories.

* * *

(2) Computers can also be used some day, we think, to improve the basic product in several ways. With their immense memories, they can provide the reporter with a library service which will be fast and complete. This should mean that today's events can be put into their historical context more easily. They can—again with an editor's guidance—solve the news hole problem in a variety of ways, emphasizing different news items each time. The editor can select the "edition" which he finds most pleasing. Finally, because of their great speed, they can enable newspapers—if they want to—to get back into the race for presenting the important news—in a complete form—when it is still news.

FLORENTINE RESEARCH

By Kenan Professor Emeritus B. L. Ullman of the Department of Classics

I have been working on an important man you never heard of, through no fault of yours. A former law student like yourself, Mr. Chancellor, Coluccio Salutai was Chancellor of Florence for 31 years, until his death in 1406. He made his position very influential; one of his successors was Niccolo Macchiavelli. But he was far more important for what he did in developing the humanistic Renaissance. We all know of Petrarch's leadership in this field, but few know about the part played by Coluccio. He encouraged young men to engage in humanistic pursuits and lent them books from his large library.

He made Florence the cutural center of the 15th century. In other words, the Renaissance in the form it took would scarcely have developed, and our modernworld might have had a different shape, so to speak. He brought the great Greek teacher Chrysolores to Florence and encouraged his disciples to study under him. Some of them at Coluccio's suggestion, produced translations of Greek authors into Latin; one translated Ptolemy's Geography, a work whose influence on Columbus and the voyages of discovery has not been adequately investigated.

* * *

In searching for valuable manuscripts that once belonged to Coluccio, I have had some of the thrills of a detective. Over the years this search, extending from Italy to Paris, London, Oxford, New York, and Chicago, has netted some 110-120 fish, as I call them. One was caught over a bottle of French wine in the Union Club of New York—during the prohibition era, and that's a good place for me to stop.

BLEEDING DISEASES

By Kenneth M. Brinkhous Dept. of Pathology

As a pathologist, I am interested in what goes wrong in basic biology that results in disease. Our research in the Department of Pathology has been directed toward throwing light on such questions as these: Why does blood remain liquid while circulating, and why does it clot when removed from the body? Why do some people bleed abnormally? Why do some clot abnormally, as in coronary thrombosis?

These questions—bleeding and clotting—are but two sides of the same coin. Nature has done a wonderful job of hiding the answers to these apparently simple queries. A group of us—pathologists, biochemists, internists, dentists—have been searching for some of the answers. Much time is spent looking into unusual situations provided by nature—as the boy with hemophilia. Today one of our group will be found working in the hospital blood bank, trying out new methods for preservation of blood. Another may be at the Francis Owen Laboratory at University Lake, testing a new plasma fraction on hemeophilic dogs.

* * *

Still another may be studying the ultrastructure of a clot, magnified thousands of times with an electron microscope. Then again, one of us may he in Ashe County collecting blood from Mr. Stuart, onetime farmer and itinerant preacher, whose name is known world-wide for Sturt disease. Or in the summer it may be a medical student at Morehead at the Institute of Fisheries, collecting blood from a shark which clots poorly. Much remains to be done, but I believe it's fair to say that both bleeders and clotters are better treated today because of our efforts.

Still More Bad Habits . . .

To the Editors,

After my column appeared on gum chewing, I had a letter from a prominent business man in Durham, saying how it irked him to see people chew gum and pick their teeth in public.

But that is nothing to how repulsive it is to see any one pick his nose in public. I had to share a lounge in Graham Memorial yesterday with a student who was picking his nose and flipping his finger on the carpet. He kept it up, I guess, for ten minutes. Finally I got up and said "When you clean your nose you should use a hankerchief." He said he didn't have one. So I left him some clean tissues. I don't know if he used them.

I wish I wasn't so squeamish. But it is a job for somebody. And since no one else will take it on, it looks like I am it.

INFANTILE BEHAVIOR

* * *

It was a rainy night. I put on my coat to go to my car to drive from Durham to Chapel Hil. One of my friends said "If I met you down town in that coat, I wouldn't speak to you!" I hadn't objected to the long coat as it kept the rain out of my boot tops. But my friend said I had to cut it off, which I have done.

Of course she was fooling about "not speaking." By no stretch of the imagination would she resort to an infantile type of behavior because she was nipped over some trifle. I recently said that I liked men, in general, better than women. Men have been out in the world so long, as bread-winners, that they learned, that knowing when to laugh was worth a million dollars to them. Women are going out of the home to work in ever increasing numbers, but they have a long way to go to catch up with the men in the vital matter of controlling their emotions. If this emotional instability is a biological trait they may never catch up with the men.

Women Hit Kerr Action

To the Editors,

It is most disturbing that Representative John W. Kerr, Jr., of Warren should have implied in his question to Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy of A & T College that student participation in the sit-in movement could affect the appropriation of funds to that school. It is shocking that his comments were couched in language indicative of behavior patterns so antiquated and unjust as to be an embarrassment to the Legislature of the State of North Carolina.

It is revealing that he considers the presentation of budgetary requests to the Appropriations Committee by the Acting President of a state supported college, to be "begging." This attitude can only discourage growth and development of colleges and universities in our State.

The Chapel Hill-Durham branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom considers Mr. Kerr's position insupportable.

—Mrs. Maryellen Bowers, Chairman Chapel Hill-Durham branch Women's International League for Peace and Freedom

Identify With Military?

To the Editors,

For some reason it strikes me as being rather humorous that probably some years ago some poor clod got out of the Army and came to Carolina (on the GI Bill) and having no warm civilian jacket to wear was forced to wear an old field jacket, which might very well have been extremely embarassing for him, and that probably some eccentric student, wishing to be non-conforming, decided to get one also, and that he was probably followed by other students who also wished to be non-conforming, an that they were followed by other students who wished to be conforming.

Or can it possibly be that many students at Carolina just have a subconscious desire to identify with the military without being totally involved.

Too Much Integration

To the Editors,

The Methodist Church being in favor of integration is about all I can stand. Would you do me the favor to discontinue sending the Tar Heel to me.

—Jesse Benton
Danville, Va.

Letters Welcome

The editors of the Daily Tar Heel gladly accept letters from students and other members of the University community.

Letters must be free from libel, in good taste, and limited to 300-500 words. They should be typed, double spaced, if possible. Letters on any topic are welcome.

All letters become the property of the Daily Tar Heel, and may be published unless the writer requests otherwise.

No anonymous letters will be printed, regardless of subject matter or worth. Every letter writer should include his signature with a campus address that can be verified.

is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Conference's Big Three May Find Tourney Rough

By ED DUPREE

If the Atlantic Coast Conference's big three—Duke, Wake Forest and UNC—are expecting an easy time of it in the opening round of the conference basketball tournament, they shouldn't.

The kingpins posted a combined record of 29– against the league's other five teams, but each of the remaining five took its turn at pushing the leaders to the limit during the regular season.

Duke's Blue Devils, ranked second nationally, averaged 17.7 more per game than their opponents in these ten contests—a pretty healthy margin. But several times the Dukes had good cause to be worried.

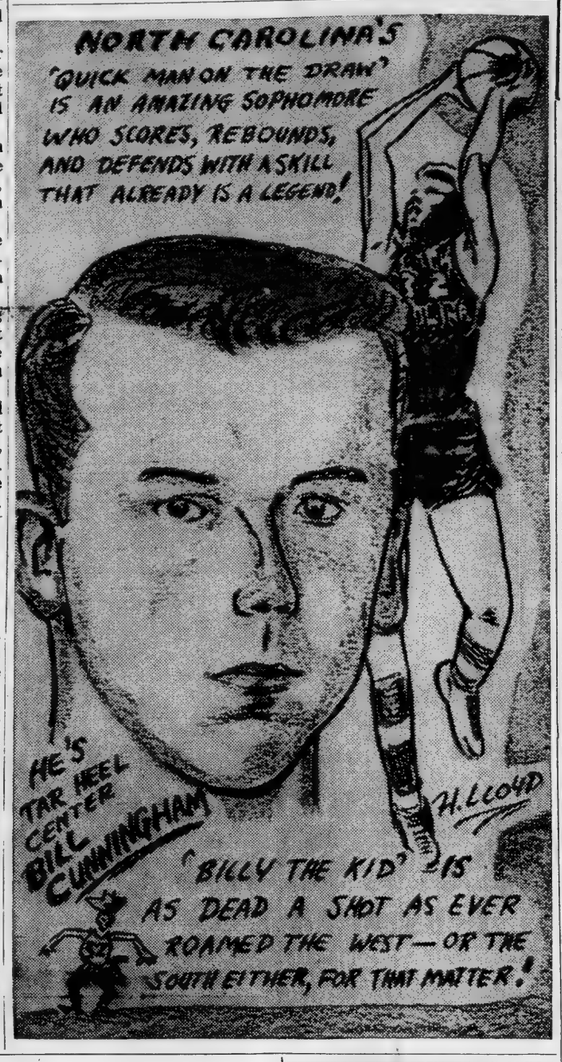
N. C. State proved to be Duke's peskiest single-game foe in the team's second game at Raleigh. State's slow-up control game resulted in a squeaking 56-55 Duke triumph. The Blue Devils also had narrow wins over Virginia (79-74) and Maryland (76-70). Vic Bubas's men defeated each of these teams handily in the games played at Duke Indoor Stadium—and they'll be away from Durham tomorrow.

Wake Forest's win margin against the weaker teams was 10.7 per game. The biggest troublemakers for the Deacons, defending ACC champs, were Clemson, Virginia, and N. C. State. Clemson defeated them, 71-70, in a mid-season surprise. Virginia came close, 78-73, and State lost, 66-58.

North Carolina's third place Tar Heels were often involved in tense games with the lower echelons, but like Duke, the Tar Heels won all ten games.

In Chapel Hill, Dean Smith's men were pushed into overtime before topping N. C. State, 67-65. Later, at Raleigh, Carolina won again in a slow contest, 68-63.

Virginia gave UNC a big scare at Charlottesville before bowing, 86-81. At Charlotte, South Carolina lost only, 78-74.



The Tar Heels averaged beating the lower teams 10.6 a contest, but several of the games won by safe margins were close until late in the game

One oddity is that Duke handled its closest pursuer easier than it did the State, Clemson, Maryland, South Carolina, and Virginia group. In the two conference games Duke topped Wake Forest by 31 and 13.

In a non-conference outing at Greensboro Duke was victorious by 26.

In tomorrow's first-round action North Carolina meets South Carolina at 2 p.m. followed by the Wake Forest-Maryland clash at 4.

Duke takes on Virginia in the night opener at 7:30 and host team N. C. State meets Clemson at 9:15.

Shaffer Named All-Academic

UNC's Charlie Shaffer was named yesterday to the first annual All - Atlantic Coast Conference Academic basketball team.

Other first team members are Jay Buckley and Buzzy Harrison of Duke, Richard Carmichael of Wake Forest and Jim Brennan of Clemson.

Carolina's Bryan McSweeney placed on the second team along with John Key and Pom Sinnock of N. C. State, Fred Schmidt of Duke and Phil Carlson of Maryland.

To qualify, aplayer needed a "B" or better average.

LOST

A small brown suitcase was lost near Winston dormitory at noon on Saturday. If found it should be returned to Bill Axselle, 312 Winston.

Liston Poses, Sprains Knee, Delays Fight

MIAMI BEACH (UPI) — Sonny Liston's sprained knee forced a six-day postponement Tuesday of his April 4 heavyweight championship rematch with Floyd Patterson.

Al Bolan, general manager of Championship Sports, Inc., promoter of the bout, said the fight would be staged at the Miami Beach Convention Hall April 10.

Bolan announced the decision after talking with Liston's adviser Jack Nilon.

"I know it costs money to move the fight back, but it took Sonny too long to get where he is and we're not going to put him into the ring until he's right," Nilon said.

Liston sprained his right knee last Thursday while swinging a golf club to pose for a magazine photographer.

"I call it a sprained knee," Nilon said, "but we're lucky it wasn't a lot worse injury. A little more and it could have meant an operation."

The hammer-fisted champion's adviser scoffed at reports that Liston was stalling the fight in order to have more time to reduce his weight.

"What weight problem?" Nilon asked. "Sonny weighs 222 right now and has six weeks to go to trim off another eight pounds.

"Anyone who doesn't believe he has a slightly torn ligament in the knee, I've got the X-rays to prove it," Nilon said.

Nilon and Liston have made no secret that they want to get out from under Championship Sports, Inc., the promoting organization run by the Bolan brothers, Tom and Al, as soon as possible because they feel they can make more money on their own.

"No one wants to get this fight over with as quickly as Sonny and me," bristled Nilon.

"But I'm not going to let Sonny go into the ring until he's ready and right now I don't care if it takes until September."

Phils' Brown Well

CLEARWATER, Fla. (UPI)—Paul Brown, 21-year-old pitcher who was sidelined part of last season by hepatitis, has regained his health and the Phillies think the young righthander will help their thin pitching staff this season.

Billy, Heyman Lead All-ACC

The 1963 All-ACC basketball team selected yesterday by the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Association has a Yankee flavor to it. Only one of the 10 men selected is from a southern state.

Jeff Mullins, Duke's prized junior from Lexington, Ky., is joined by nine basketballers from above the Mason-Dixon Line on the star team.

Mullins' teammate, Art Heyman, and North Carolina's sophomore, Billy Cunningham, were unanimous choices in the voting. Heyman has been named unanimously to the first team for three consecutive years.

A pair of senior guards, Wake Forest's Dave Wiedeman and UNC's Larry Brown, rounded out the first team.

The second team is as follows: Scotti Ward of South Carolina, Gene Engel of Virginia, Jim Brennan of Clemson, Jerry Greenspan of Maryland and Ken Rohloff of N. C. State.

Cunningham, Heyman and Brown are from New York; Wiedeman, Engel, Greenspan and Rohloff are from New Jersey; Ward is from Indiana and Brennan is from Pennsylvania.

The voting:

Heyman (158), Cunningham (158), Mullins (156), Wiedeman (124), Brown (112); Ward (107), Engel (75), Brennan (51), Greenspan (50), Rohloff (24).

Six Frosh Swim Records Topped

By BILLY HATFIELD

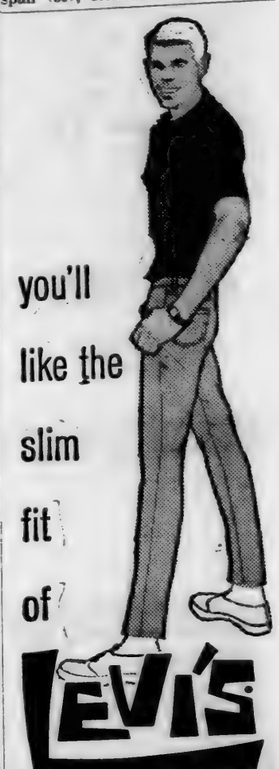
Six records were broken in the ninth annual freshman invitational swimming meet Saturday with Maryland, N. C. State and UNC taking almost all the honors.

Carolina's Rick Forum won the 200-yard breaststroke in record-breaking time of 2:22.4. Forum also won the 100-yard breaststroke and was second in the 200-yard individual medley behind Green of Maryland.

Nullymeyer of Maryland and Gavaghan of State each broke two meet records. Nullmeyer swam the 200-yard freestyle in 1:51.4 and the 100-yard freestyle in 49.9 seconds—both new records.

State's Gavaghan won the 200-yard butterfly in 2:03.3, then proved his versatility by swimming the 500-yard freestyle in record-snapping time of 5:13.

The sixth record was set by Duke's Hitchcock who was judged the winner in a dead heat with Lampe of Maryland. His time in the 50-yard freestyle was 22 seconds flat.



UNC's Fred Lipp pulled up one-tenth of a second short of the record in the 100-yard butterfly (56.1 seconds) and took a second in the 200-yard butterfly.

Cincy And Duke Remain One-Two

NEW YORK (UPI) — Cincinatti, the nation's No. 1 major college basketball team, appears a cinch to finish the regular season with a single defeat to Wichita but things look a lot tougher for second-ranked Duke.

The Bearcats added victories over North Texas State and Tulsa last week to run their season record to a gaudy 21-1, and as a result were named No. 1 Tuesday by 33 of the 35 coaches who comprise the United Press International rating board. The ratings were based on games played through last Saturday.

The other two first-place votes this week went to Duke, the Atlantic Coach Conference champion which now must prove its right to play in the NCAA tournament by winning its own conference playoff starting Thursday.

Meanwhile, Cincinnati plays Xavier (Ohio) and St. Louis in its two remaining games, but already has clinched the Missouri Valley Conference title and the automatic NCAA tourney berth that goes with it.

Loyola of Chicago and Arizona State U., ranked third and fourth, respectively, also are safe, since they both already are in the NCAA tourney—Loyola on an at-large pass and Arizona State by winning the Western Athletic Conference title.

Fifth-ranked Illinois and sixth-ranked Ohio State are engaged in a close fight for the Big Ten Crown, but the result of that tussle won't be decided for at least another week. Ohio State advanced from a seventh-place tie to sixth this week in one of four changes.

Mississippi State, the Southeastern Conference leader, moved up from 11th to seventh. Wichita slipped from sixth to ninth. Stanford fell out of a seventh-place tie to eighth and New York U. advanced from 12th to 10th.

Falling out of the top 10 and making way for Mississippi State and New York U.'s advance were Colorado, from ninth to 13th, and Georgia Tech, from 10th to 12th. However, Georgia Tech appears in line for the SEC berth in the NCAA tourney, since Mississippi State more than likely will pass up the berth if it wins the league title because of racial difficulties.

Stanford currently is leading the Big Six race, Wichita already has accepted a bid to the National Invitational Tourney, and New York U. has accepted an at-large bid to the NCAA carnival.

Texas, the Southwest Conference champion and an NCAA tourney team, tops the second 10 grouping which includes five other teams scheduled for post-season play — Colorado State U. (14th), Texas Western (15th), Oregon State (19th) and St. Joseph's (Pa.) (20th) in the NCAA and Providence tied with Auburn for (16th), in the NIT.

Mickey Mantle May Sign Soon

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (UPI) — Slugger Mickey Mantle of the New York Yankees was all set Tuesday to sign his 1963 contract for an estimated $90,000.

Mantle had two brief conferences with club General Manager Roy Hamey Tuesday and went through a light workout on the field, even though he had not yet signed. The Yankees have a rule against unsigned players taking part in the drills, and Mantle's presence was added proof his signing was near.

GM Spring Weekend To Feature 4 Preps

Bob Rerden, president of Graham Memorial, yesterday announced plans for the GM-sponsored spring weekend which will be held here April 26-28.

Rearden said that, "The Activities Board is planning a week-end with enough continuous entertainment for everybody that wants to do anything. Also, the week-end will depart from past tradition in that students may date off campus and take their dates to everything without any charge."

So far, plans include "The Four Preps" Friday night in Memorial Hall, with a combo party afterwards at GM.

Saturday afternoon will be "An Afternoon of Folk and Jazz," on the lawn in front of GM, featuring the "Harlequins" and "Ambassadors" from Duke, as well as several other groups. Saturday night GM will sponsor five different combo parties around the campus, with the locations selected so that they are all convenient to each other.

Plans for Sunday are not definite yet, and will be announced later.

The week-end will also feature special Free Flicks. "Butterfield 8" will be shown Friday night, and "The Buccaneer" on Saturday. Dates will also be admitted to the Free Flicks.

Sloan, Lassaw To Judge Show

Dr. Joseph P. Sloan, Director of the Ackland Art Museum and Mr. Ibram Lassaw, visiting professor of art at Duke University, will judge the art exhibition currently being gathered at UNC's new School of Public Health Building.

The exhibition, to run year long, will be composed of works by North Carolina artists. More than seventy state artists have indicated their intention to submit pieces for the exhibition, and well over 100 artworks—paintings, drawings, collages, sculpture — have already been received for the showing.

Due to the enthusiastic response, school officials have extended to March 4 the deadline for receiving additional work at the Dean's Office in the new building.

The judging will take place on March 16; it will be conducted as would a juried art show. At that time, the piece judged to be first will be set aside for purchase by the School of Public Health. Other pieces will be given public display according to the judges' evaluation of their merit, those selected as best being accorded the most prominent locations.

HILLEL COUNCIL

Hillel House will hold an open Student Council meeting tonight at 7 p.m.

Outdoor Drama Conference Set

The nation's first "Outdoor Drama Conference" for anyone interested in any phase of outdoor drama will be held here Friday and Saturday, March 22 and 23, it was announced today by William Trotman, director of UNC's newly created "Outdoor Drama Institute."

The conference will be held in conjunction with the annual try-outs for three of North Carolina's outdoor productions, "The Lost Colony," performed at Roanoke Island; "Horn in the West," performed at Boone; and "Unto These Hills," performed at Cherokee.

The conference will look at the present state of the outdoor drama and will discuss fresh ideas for the future development of the outdoor theatre.

Topics for discussion will include: architecture and theatrical design for the outdoor theatre; the symphonic drama as a medium for the playwright; directing and staging the oudoor play; the actor in the open air; and the management and promotion of outdoor theatre.

Among those attending and participating in the conference will be Paul Green, Pulitzer Prize winning playwright, originator of the symphonic drama medium and author of plays including "The Lost Colony"; Kermit Hunter, most prolific writer for the outdoor stage including the scripts of "Unto These Hills," and "Horn in the West"; John Cauble, general manager of a new show, "Home Is the Hunter," to be produced at Harrodsburg, Ky. this summer.

Also, Gene Wilson of the University of Alabama, new director for this summer's production of "Horn in the West"; Elizabeth Welch, Salem College, speech expert and associated with "The Lost Colony" for many years; John Ehle, special assistant to the Governor of North Carolina, UNC associate professor, writer, actor and novelist David Weiss, University of Virginia, prominent designer of outdoor theatre; and Arthur Cogswell, architect who was winner of the North Carolina 1962 American Institute of Architects award.

The conference will begin with registration in the Green Room of the Carolina Playmaker Theatre on the UNC campus from 12 to 2 p.m., Friday, March 22. Seminars will begin immediately afterwards.

Of the conference, Trotman said, "We are attempting to bring together the top people in outdoor drama from across the country. We hope, through seminars and discussions, to create some real excitement and enthusiasm about the dramatic form which Paul Green originated in America with "The Lost Colony." We need to analyze what has transpired during the years since 1937 when the Roanoke Island show was first produced, and, most of all, we must be about the business of stimulating new talent to carry on the movement as it progresses into other states across the country."

Bridge Winners In National Tourney

Winners of the UNC division of the National Intercollegiate Bridge Tournament held Sunday were:

North-South, first, Kent Massie and Bill Neustadt second, Ray Cox and Wayne Godsey; and third, Bob Pustilnik and Frank Sanders. East-West winners were: first, Peter Ruth and Michael O'Donoghue; second, Mel Fox and Dennis Winner; and third, Hughes Hoyle and Tom Reid. Ruth and O'Donoghue had the highest score overall.

These scores were sent to the National Association of College Unions in order to determine national and regional winners of the tournament.

Training Program Planned For New Council Members

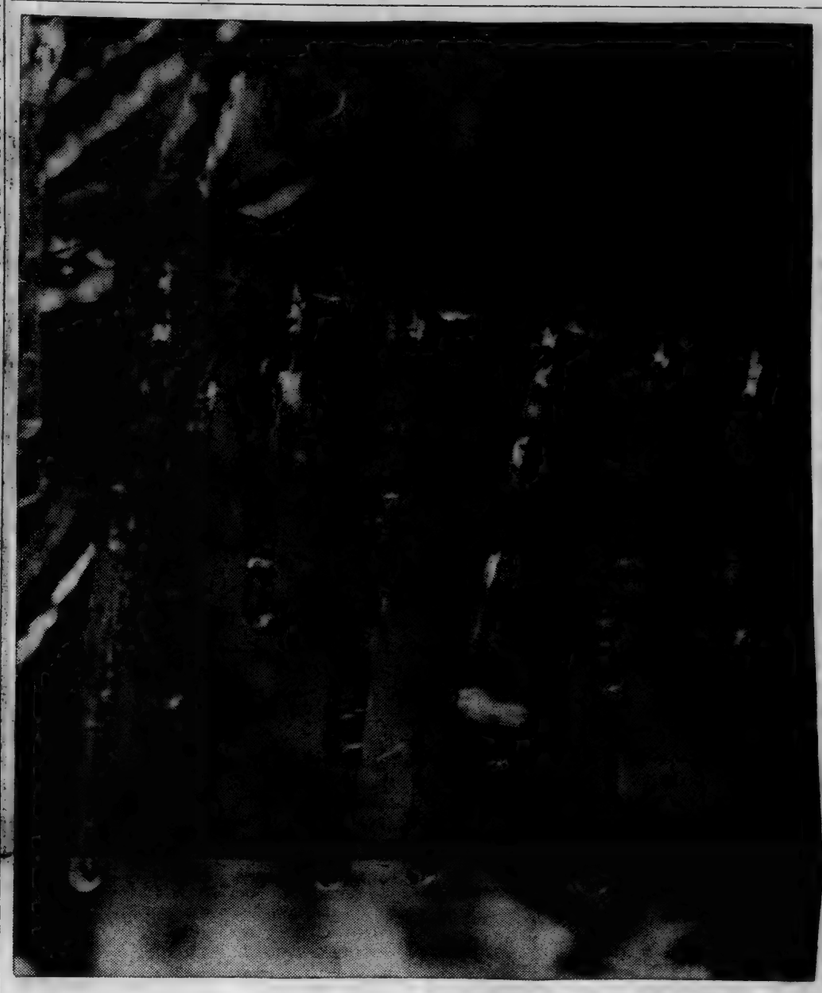
A new four-point program for the training of Honor Council candidates was announced yesterday by Honor Commission Chairman Tony Miller. The program, which begins Monday night, will last about three weeks and is compulsory for all students who want the endorsement of the Honor System Commission for the April 2 spring election.

Monday night at 7 p.m. all candidates will meet in 203 Alumni where the chairman of the Honor System Commission will address them and outline for them their program of study. The President of the Student Body, or someone representing him, will address the group and explain the purpose of the Honor System and the basic tenets behind it. Copies of the Student Constitution and the Men's and Women's Honor Council procedures will be given to all the candidates. The final written test will be based on the material in these documents.

In a meeting a week later, the Attorney General will explain the function and mechanics of the Attorney General's staff. A copy of subpoenas and staff reports will be given out. All candidates will be expected to know the function of these procedures.

The following week the Chairman of the Men's and Women's Honor Councils will divide the group in order to explain to their own council candidates the function and responsibility of council members.

A final test will be given about two weeks before the election. The candidates will be responsible for all the material that was distributed to them, in addition to the contents of the talks given by the Attorney General and council chaidmen. A passing grade of 85 on this test has been set by the Honor Commission.



This program will end early enough to allow un-endorsed candidates to present a petition to the Elections Board Chairman in order to get their names on the ballot.

All meetings are compulsory for candidates interested in getting endorsed by the Honor System Commission. Present members of the Honor Councils are exempt from this program.

Khrushchev Threatens U. S. With Nuclear War If Castro Is Attacked

Compromise Possible On Berlin Issue

MOSCOW (UPI)—Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev warned Wednesday that U. S. invasion of Cuba would be met by a Soviet thermonuclear attack that would crush the West the first day. But he coupled the warning with a hint of compromise on Berlin.

Khrushchev extended the defense pledge to Red China, North Korea, North Veit Nam, East Germany and all other Communist nations although he acknowledged that the "imperialist camp is armed to the teeth."

In an 87-minute radio-television speech to the nation Khrushchev said Soviet armed forces would "rout out" the imperialists if they attack Cuba—an implication the Russians would fight on Cuban soil.

"The President of the United States pledged himself not to attack Cuba and we agreed to withdraw strategic missiles and IL28 bombers from Cuba and did withdraw them," Khrushchev said.

"But this does not mean that we have abandoned heroic Cuba to the big sharks of American imperialism. We gave the Cuban people our word, the word of a brother, that the Soviet Union would come to Cuba's assistance and we shall not leave her in the hour of need."

Khrushchev previously has spoken of a pledge by President Kennedy not to invade Cuba but the United States does not recognize such a pledge because it did not win the right of on-site inspection in Cuba to make sure all offensive weapons were withdrawn.

Rules Out Concessions

Khrushchev vowed that Russia would keep up its military might as long as a threat exists and said Western insistence on using inspection for espionage purposes ruled out any further Soviet concessions on the question of a nuclear test ban.

Khrushchev made these other points:

—The enemies of Communism should realize that disputes such as that between Communist China and Russia will be overcome.

—The Soviet Union is ready to sign a disarmament treaty now but the imperialists are hampering success by building up NATO.

—The Soviet Union will make no more concessions to the West to write a nuclear test ban treaty.

—France is fraternizing with the revenge-seeking West Germans and any war brought by the revenge-seekers will turn against France.

—NATO and the Warsaw Pact powers should sign a treaty of non-aggression but the West fears this would be a serious moral victory for the Communists.

—The tension in Central Europe is brought by the lack of a peace treaty recognizing two Germanies; Russia will continue to seek a treaty.

—The Soviet Union's industrial growth is coming along to the point where "we are treading on the heels of the United States."

If Requests Are Met

Professor's Pay In State May Near National Average

Salaries paid Tar Heel college faculty members will be at or near the national average for similar institutions if the proposed state budget is adopted, Board of Higher Education Director Dr. William C. Archie said yesterday.

Dr. Archie made the comment as he reviewed for reporters the board's biennial report, an exhaustive roundup of things as they are and as they should be in state higher education institutions.

He said specific figures would not be accurate because of supplementary funds used.

In arriving at salary recommendations for the coming biennium, Dr. Archie said the board surveyed the national averages for institutions similar to those in North Carolina and then recommended increased state funds to bring institutions here up to that average.

A growth factor of 6.5 per cent was also figured in.

In the case of the University of North Carolina, for instance, the institution was compared with other members of the elite Association of American Universities.

UNC was found to be 25th from the top of 31 reporting members of the association. An average salary being paid by the institutions was determined, and an appropriation to bring UNC to this level was recommended.

Teacher colleges in North Carolina were compared with teacher colleges in other areas.

To bring colleges in the state to the national average for similar institutions would require the $7 million plus recommended for salary increases, Dr. Archie noted.

The Board of Higher Education and the Advisory Budget Commission have recommended the money be appropriated in a lump sum to the institutions involved, to be distributed in salary increases as the institution head sees fit.

This means, said Dr. Archie, some professors might receive big raises while others might get little or none. An institution which found it had to pay $18,000 to keep a particular professor could do so if it so chose.

The fact that funds to bring institutions in this state to the national average for similar colleges and universities does not mean the state institutions would equal the best salaries paid at top colleges and universities.

The attempt being made is to reach the national average, which means that several institutions would still be well above the salaries that UNC, for instance, will be able to offer.

Students Owe $27.5 Million

By GLENN KEEVER
Raleigh Times Staff Writer

Tar Heel college students, present and future, are already committed to pay off more than $27.5 million in funds that have been borowed to finance college buildings.

With interest figured, the total will run even higher.

Most of the funds that have been borrowed have been used to construct dormitories, but the list of projects also includes some married student housing, some fraternities and a portion of a gymnasium.

The biggest debt at present belongs to State College, which has pledged student fees and rents to the tune of $9.4 million. The University at Chapel Hill has also borrowed heavily to the tune of $7.8 million.

The new state budget—which proposes several new dormitories on a 100 per cent self-liquidating basis—would hike the debt at both institutions.

The question of just how much the students should be expected to pay in the way of school buildings has already created an issue over the new budget.

The colleges—inhearings before the Joint Appropriations Committee—have contended that more self-liquidating projects will price college out of the reach of many students.

All of the institutions have been requesting that the state pay at least half of the new dormitories that are planned, and even this would add to the total that students are expected to pay.

The Board of Higher Education has adopted the attitude that students should pay for the dormitories and student union buildings that are needed but that state appropriations should be increased in other areas so that the total cost to the student for a year at college can be held to approximately the same as it is now.

The borrowing for self-liquidating projects a state higher education institutions is now limited to UNC, State, Woman's College, East Carolina, West Carolina, Appalachian, A&T, Winston-Salem Teachers and N. C. College at Durham.

We'd Like To Abolish It, But Nobody Cares Anymore

Sure, it is an old issue, it has all been said, and nobody cares any more.

Don dormie, Suzie sorority, or Matt the frat rat, they've all had their fill. They—the campus in general just couldn't care less, not even Manly Madras. In fact, we'd even go so far as to suppose that your friendly, phony politician will have more trouble generating a line of hogwash to sling on this problem than any other situation in which he will shortly feign all manner of sincere concern.

Our noble student body is stuffed to the gills with too too much of that clever, insightful comment on the bad, sad state of the UNC student Honor System.

And yet, to borrow a phrase, ain't that a shame.

* * *

It seems a shame, in a very real sense, because people still cheat, and in another sense, because apparently some of the faculty still do care. But, alas, whether a remnant remains or not, the sorry state of our hallowed Honor System is essentially a dead issue.

* * *

Under the chairmanship of Walter Dellinger, throughout the past year, great strides have been made along the lines of communication; supposedly, hopefully, the student body has been made more aware of what the Honor Council does and how it does it.

With the publishing of regular reports, and with a general program of increased campus publicity, the Council had hoped to gain an initial bit of attention, which would, after being directed to the actions of the Men's Council, steer itself on to an increased awareness of what the Honor System itself was all about.

There was the gallant assumption that the student body probably cared, or that, perhaps, they would care if they knew anything about the system under which they were expected to operate.

Ain't it a shame. Nobody cared any more.

* * *

After all, our system is a matter liable to student concerns. At least it is in so far as friends and neighbors occasionally leave school because of proven violations of the system.

If for no other reason, we ought to sit up and take notice of a program which allows for the ejection of one swell buddy, merely because he violated the purity of his neighbor's paper.

But, take notice, that much we fail to do.

If we would not be bothered to turn in a student who cheats, it is doubtful that we would be bothered by a virtual demise of any understanding which used to suggest that we should.

It is doubtful that the student body in general would be bothered by the elimination of our present system; indeed, it is doubtful that the majority of the student body would ever become aware of its elimination. Who could possibly care any more?

As we see it, any wailing lament that might be forthcoming from the abolition of our system would come only from those who admittedly profit most from the present setup, that is, those who find cheating relatively easy when no one will turn them in.

Who else could possibly care any more? (CW)

"To Clothe All Naked Animals"

Chapel Hill is chock full of screwballs, but it seems that the rest of the world is one up on us.

Working out of New York City is a new initial society, the SINA. . . . The Society for Indecency to Naked Animals. Its purpose?

Article IV from SINA's Constitution reads:

"Be it resolved that the members of SINA shall devote their time and energy to clothe all naked animals that appear in public, namely, horses, cows, dogs and cats, including any animal that stands higher than four inches or is longer than six inches."

A Mr. Clifford Prout, Jr., who claims the title of president of the 38,794 member society, has designed bikinis for stallions, half slips for cows, boxer shorts for certain small animals and knickers for bulldogs.

* * *

"Decency Today Means Morality Tomorrow."

* * *

"Protect our children from the sight of naked horses, cows, dogs and cats."

* * *

"Animals should conduct themselves much like people—particularly where natural functions are concerned—if decency is to triumph over immorality in this world."

* * *

It's hard to believe that such a person and such a cause exist . . . but both do. And according to a report in the San Francisco Chronicle, they have 400,000 dollars to work with.

Still don't believe it? Mr. Prout will be on campus during the month of March to organize a student SINA Chapter.

Men Of 2,000 A.D.—Our Generation

There can be no doubt that our generation has been born into an exciting age. Baring a catastrophic misuse of its wonders, we will be witnesses to the most fantastic discoveries ever in man's search for an understanding of his world and his cosmos. We are lucky enough to live at one of those two or three times in history when man's progress elevates him to a level at which suddenly a whole new world unfolds before him, a world once far beyond his comprehension, and understanding. Historians of a thousand years hence may place our generation beside that of the 1500s which beheld the discovery of the New World, and that of the 1750s which watched the transformation from feudalism to industrialism.

But in a way we are even luckier than the contemporaries of Columbus or James Watt, because the benefits of the new age, which we see crowned, will be enjoyed by us all. Whereas men of the early 1500s and the late 1700s could stand aghast at the achievements of a few contemporaries, they did not receive individually the fruits of these achievements, unless in the case of the industrial age the fruits came in the form of misery and exploitation.

Our age, however, has been made possible by an overall complex of prosperity, and material well-being for more individuals than ever before. Technological breakthroughs, the nourishment of prosperity, are occurring in a society whose people can hope through a fair opportunity for an improvement of their material lot to experience the joys provided by these achievements. We can look forward in our lifetimes to seeing greater strides than ever imagined towards the elimination of misery and starvation, first in our own country, and then elsewhere, of racial prejudice, and its pernicious effects, of greater international understanding as a gift of easier communication.

In the United States especially life will become palpably easier and more glamorous. Would-be prophets speak of the twenty-hour work week, and the inconceivable riches in store for all. It is the rightful reward of a nation with a tradition of hard work, and frugality, a nation which has pulled itself up on its own by facing its problems unflinchingly and head on.

For the individual destined to live in this easy world, the implications are enormous and foreboding, for the flowing future brings with it a hidden and inevitable danger; the gradual erosion or originality, of individuality, of self-development. Slowly we are becoming slaves of our passion for material comfort at the expense of spiritual growth. The meaning of life is taking on a strictly material nature, for we have been liberated from the hardship of life which forced our forefathers to find solace in the fundamental gifts to man: the beauty of nature, the beauty of family solidarity, the beauty in the contemplation of the individual's place on earth. All these are being killed by our prosperity, the enemy of sensitivity and the father of underdevolped men.

What are college men concerned about today? They are seeking a comfortable and secure future, in which material well-being and status in the community are their only goals. These motivate their every action. They make a cold analysis of the opportunities which will achieve their purposes: a major in business, law school, or perhaps a graduate degree as a credential. From these various preparations they will move into a community, and through adherence to a set pattern of behavior gradually their limited goals will materialize into the longed-for realities. The image is clear; a comfortable house on a hill, membership in the respected citizens club, a cute family, and eventually, a retirement replete with the hedonistic pleasures provided for them by the pension or retirement plans they were smart enough to invest in earlier.

But one might ask: "What breed of man will our child of prosperity be," Will he be a man or character, of moral toughness and courage, a man to envy and emulate? Will he be sensitive to the wants of others? Hardly. We can expect rather that our contemporaries in thirty years will be soft of character, egocentric, and desireous of sensuous pleasure as the sole and self-satisfying end. There will be no more stopping in the woods on a snowy evening, but rather only a stopping at Joe's steam bath before returning to a well-heated split-level. Contemplation of the full meaning of one's existence will be a lost art, trodden into non-existence under the heavy footsteps of the pleasure machines. There will be no more Dostoyevskys, only the J. D. Salingers to amuse us about the hypocrisy of our societal behavior.

Is there any hope then for the men of 2000 A.D., our generation? In broad terms, it seems that men are doomed to a greater human flabbiness as prosperity increases and disseminates. This is the inevitable partner of the improvement of the human condition.

But although we must realize that in our new age we can never achieve a fullness of life in the way that our hard-pressed ancestors did, we can fight the stream which ensures that our life will have no fulfilling meaning at all. Our emphasis must be on a conscious effort to further ourselves as whole individuals. Whereas our ancestors were deepened through the challenges of life, we must deepen ourselves through an active effort of the mind and character. Obviously, our development as individuals will be artificial and forced in comparison, but it is the only opportunity that remains for us.

And for those who are desperately wondering about what they will do upon graduation this is important. The choice of a profession can not be motivated solely by the passion for wealth, or status, and through them happiness. These are natural goals which all of us desire in varying degrees, and there is nothing inherently wrong with them as such. But in order to achieve fulfillment, we must accompany these desires with the desire to find a profession which considering our various abilities will develop us spiritually as whole men. It must further our intellectual and aesthetic appreciation of the basic beauties of life, and heighten our sensitivity to the world in which we live.

John Stuart Mill expressed it best of all: "Capacity for the nobler feelings is in most natures a very tender plant, easily killed, not only by hostile influence, but by mere want of sustenence; and in the majority of young persons it speedily dies away if the occupations to which their position in life has devoted them are not favorable to keeping that higher capacity in exercise." Without these nobler feelings, the danger is great that we may look back on our lives with remorse in thirty or forty years, and ask, "What have I done with my life? What of value is meaningful for me? What kind of person am I?"

State's Pride Not Justified

If you relied only on the North Carolina press for your information you would have to conclude that North Carolina is a shining island of progress and prosperity in a Southern sea of poverty, ignorance and squalor.

North Carolinians have a curious kind of inverted provincialism. Rather than take joy in the over-all advance of the South toward its proper place of might among the regions of America, they had rather gloat over their supposed superiority to the rest of the South. North Carolinians make deprecating jokes about Georgia or Mississippi in the same fashion that New Yorkers make them about the whole South.

Not only is this attitude unworthy, it is also not entirely justifiable in the facts. The entire South is undergoing an economic revolution, racing towards material equality (or perhaps superiority) to the rest of the nation. This revolution is quite as evident in Montgomery, Ala., as it is in Greensboro, N. C.

The Gulf Coast area between Tampa and Corpus Christi has had a burgeoning of prosperity far in excess of that of North Carolina's vaunted Piedmont. North Carolina has no great ports like Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Jacksonville, Tampa, Mobile, New Orleans or Galveston.

It has Charlotte but it has no industrial or commercial cities of the magnitude of Richmond, Atlanta, Birmingham, Memphis, Houston, San Antonio, Dallas or Louisville. North Carolina has nothing to compare with Oak Ridge, Huntsville or the Savannah River Atomic Energy Project.

It is well known (ask Harry Golden) that Southern cities are the best places to live for purely human considerations (perhaps even if you are a Negro). But that does not mean that North Carolina cities are any better than the others. Any forthright raveller will tell you that the people are quite as cultured and hospitable in Baton Rouge, Little Rock, Jackson, or Augusta as they are in Greensboro or Raleigh, and maybe more so than in Durham or Charlotte.

It is fashionable in the capital and editorial offices to condemn the illiberal politics of other Southern states. (There is no Tar Heel in Washington who is a 'liberal" as either senator from Alabama.) The Byrd "machine" of Virginia is decried, but Virginia has better schools, lower taxes and quite as happy a population as North Carolina. Also its public men, while they may be more conservative, quite frequently are more intelligent, articulate and statesman-like than those of North Carolina. The same may be said, God forbid, for South Carolina.

Another popular idea is that segregation is driving industry quaking from the Deep South, while North Carolina's "moderate" policies lure it in. (Jackson, Miss., has had the highest industrial and commercial growth rates of any city in the country for two years running.)

North Carolina is inferior to Virginia, West Virginia, Georgia, Florided, Louisiana and Texas in per capita income. It is inferior to these same six states in per capita expenditures for education.

It's hourly average wages for industrial workers are below those of these six states plus Arkansas, Alamaba, Tennessee and South Carolina. Its average weekly unemployment compensation payments are $20. Arkansas and South Carolina have $22. Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee pay $23. Texas and Georgia have $24 and Louisiana $30.

Its population percentage increase between 1950 and 1960 was inferior to Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana and Texas. North Carolina's farms are among the lowest in value in the Union.

North Carolina's illegitimacy rate among both whites and Negroes is higher than in any other Southern state except Tennessee and Virginia, and for whites is double that of Mississippi.

If any of these things are measures of the progress of a state it may be well for North Carolinians to become a little more humble toward their fellow Southerners.

Letters Welcome

The editors of the Daily Tar Heel gladly accept letters from students and other members of the University community.

Letters must be free from libel, in good taste, and limited to 300-500 words. They should be typed, double spaced, if possible. Letters on any topic are welcome.

All letters become the property of the Daily Tar Heel, and may be published unless the writer requests otherwise.

No anonymous letters will be printed, regardless of subject matter or worth. Every letter writer should include his signature with a campus address that can be verified.

On UNC Costs: Face Reality

Greensboro Daily News

The apprehension of President William Friday over rising dormitory rents at the Consolidated University of North Carolina — and we are sure that the same situation applies to other state-supported colleges — is understandable in the bearing which they have upon educational costs and the inability of many North Carolina families to meet these costs.

It should be a state policy to put as few stumbling blocks or hindrances as possible in the way of its young people who seek an education and the development, through them, of the state's most valuable resource.

The Daily News' reaction is that the university and higher education in general fared unusually well in recommendations of the Advisory Budget Commission. This is particularly true in "B" and "C" budget items which have been difficult to obtain in the past. On the surface the proposal that dormitories be placed on a 100 per cent self-liquidating basis appears to put no undue burden on students and their families, as President Friday estimates that a $30 annual increase in rent would be required. That, incidentally, would be straight across the board and not confined to the students of a given dormitory. An increase of $2.50 a month should be absorbed without difficulty.

But President Friday points out that this is only one item in the steadily rising costs of higher education and that it is the total cost which disturbs him and may keep boys and girls away from the university or other affected institutions. What bothers the U. N. C. president most is establishment of a state policy of 100 per cent self-liquidation. He foresees grave consequences, and to forestall them he would have the state reduce the self-liquidation requirement to 50 per cent. There is much to be said against the 100 per cent policy and the tremendous amount of money which would go into interest instead of into building if, say, a portion of the construction costs could come from the surplus.

But, along with this worry, should go recognition of the realities. We are confident that the General Assembly will stay largely, if not wholly, within the framework of the present fiscal pattern. It is not going to vote any new taxes; in fact, it is likely to eliminate or reduce some levies. Nor is it going to call for a referendum on any bonds. That means its capital outlay expenditures will come from the surplus and the $22,000,000 in bonds which may be issued by the Legislature itself. If, therefore, the dormitory proposal is altered, with the state assuming 50 per cent of the costs, offsetting readjustments will have to be made elsewhere. The university may reduce its dormitory requests, in terms of units, or revenue estimates may be revised upward. Estimates for the next biennium are admittedly on the conservative side.

The problem is one for educational, fiscal and legislative leaders to work out. But whatever is done must be done within the pattern already set and with a balance which applies not only to the state's budget but to other services, facilities and responsibilities which have to be met along with university needs.

UNC Lifts ACC Tourney Curtain

South Carolina and its 3-2 "come and get me" offense present the 1963 ACC Tournament's first obstacle to North Carolina today.

The Gamecocks, who will probably play their highly-successful slow down game, and the Tar Heels meet at 2:00 in the opening game of Raleigh's annual basketball circus.

Wake Forest and Maryland follow the two Carolinas' teams to the stage at 4:00 before Duke-Virginia and N. C. State-Clemson take over at night.

For UNC and USC, this afternoon's contest will be the same first-round match up that took place in last year's tourney, South Carolina surprised the Tar Heels then by prematurely ending their season, 57-55.

This year, the Gamecocks have continued pecking at UNC's pride by refusing to play patsy in two regular-season games.

Early in the season, Carolina beat the Roosters 75-65 in a close one at Columbia, S. C., and just two weeks ago the Tar Heels turned the trick, this time at Charlotte by just 78-74.

Gamecock Coach Chuck Noe has molded a dangerous club this season out of what some people called hopeless material early in the year.

Led by slick guard Scotti Ward and deadeye forward Ronnie Collins (the most underrated player in the league), South Carolina plays precision offense, always with an eye to the clock.

Although only 4-10 during ACC's regular season action, USC has thrown scares into the top three teams in the league and beaten the remaining two clubs ahead of it in the standings.

In addition to Ward and Collins, Coach Noe will probably start 6-4 Bob Haney at center, 6-3 Bill Yarbrough at one forward and 6-0 Terry Lucansky at the other guard. Jimmy Collins is the Gamecocks' sixth man and the one they call on to play the pivot in their stalling game.

UNC Coach Dean Smith, who earlier this week called South Carolina "the hottest team in the league," is anticipating no picnic against his first opponent.

Billy Cunningham, Carolina's star sophomore and a unanimous all-ACC choice this week, will be participating in his first tourney action. As has been the case all season long, it is Billy who must carry the scoring burden for the Tar Heels if they are to get by this first hurdle.

With Cunningham in the starting lineup will be Larry Brown (Carolina's other all-ACC performer) and Yogi Poteet at guards and Bryan McSweeney and Charlie Shaffer at the forwards.

Mike Cooke, Ray Respess and Billy Galantai (if up to par) are the UNC firemen.

This afternoon's winners will play the second semi-final game on Friday night at 9:30. Tonight Duke-Virginia and State-Clemson victors will play at 7:30 Friday.

ATO Groups Advance To Mural Final

By STUART BALL

Two ATO teams advanced to the championship round of the Fraternity Blue and White leagues as action neared an end in the Intramural Basketball playoffs.

The ATO Blue leaguers whipped a tough Sigma Chi detachment 40-31 in action earlier this week. Roger Penland and Watts Carr led the winners with 11 and 10 points respectively. Lee Sherrill was high man for the game scoring 12 points in a losing cause.

In Fraternity White league action the ATO Buckeyes continued their march with a close 31-25 win over SAE. Joe Turner paced the Buckeye attack with 10 points while SAE's Dan Batten stuffed in 14 points.

The win by the Buckeyes means a meeting with the Sigma Nu Reds next week in the finals.

Sigma Nu kept pace by defeating the Chi Psi Psychos 36-22. Roger James led the Nu's with 12 markers and Fred Seely led Chi Psi with 10 points.

In the only other games played this week Kappa Sigma topped Beta 41-31. Again it was Clayton Burns and Jim Speight who led in victory. Burns hit for 19, and Speight accounted for 10 points. David Henry was high for Beta with 10 points.

Due to many conflicts and the ACC Tournament, the Intramural Department has not scheduled activities today and Friday. A full schedule will resume Monday.

Chisox Star Gets Contract Of 25 Grand

SARASOTA, Fla. (UPI)—Floyd Robinson, top run-producer for the Chicago White Sox last year, ended his brief holdout siege Wednesday and signed his contract at an estimated $25,000. It represented a raise of approximately $10,000.

With the capitulation of Robinson, the only unsigned White Sox player is Juan Pizarro, the star lefthanded pitcher who still is relaxing unconcernedly in his native Puerto Rico.

TAMPA, FLA. UPI

Third baseman Gene Freese of the Cincinnati Reds is determined to prove that the right ankle which he broke last spring is as good as new.

And the way he's bouncing around the training camp here, he's almost made a believer out of Manager Fred Hutchinson already.

Companies Recruit Here Next Week

The following companies will recruit on campus next week:

Monday, March 4 — Pet, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.; The Phoenix of Hartford Insurance Companies; The Citizens & Southern National Bank; General Foods Corporation; Corning Glass Works.

Tuesday, March 5 — The Warner Brothers Company; Arthur Young & Company; Thomas J. Lipton, Inc. (summer also).

Wednesday, March 6 — Consolidated Millinery Company; Reuben H. Donnelley Telephone Directory Co.; Southern Bell Telephone, Western Electric, & American Telephone & Telegraph Co. (Group Meeting — Tues., March 5 — 3:00 p.m.); Carnation Company.

Thursday, March 7 — Southern Bell Telephone, Western Electric & Telephone & Telegraph Co.; Carnation Company; First Union National Bank of North Carolina; Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration; J. B. Ivey & Co.; Cadillac Motor Car Division.

Friday, March 8 — Ashland Oil & Refining Company; The Springs Cotton Mills; Jefferson Chemical Company, Inc.; Tennessee Valley Authority.

Students desiring interviews should contact The Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall.

Koufax 'In Groove'

VERO BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — Sandy Koufax, the No. 1 question mark of the Los Angeles Dodgers, is beginning to erase some of the doubts.

The fireballing left-hander, sidelined by a finger injury during the second half of 1962, pitched 30 minutes Wednesday on the sidelines for the second day in a row and plans to throw batting practice Thursday.

Koufax, who was to have taken it easy during the early stages of spring training, now is ahead of his own schedule.

"I think I'm in a better groove now than I've ever been at this time," said Koufax.

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (UPI) —All but two men on the roster of 39 were on hand Wednesday for the Washington Senators' first full-scale workout. The absentees were first baseman Rogelio Alvarez and outfielder Nelson Gardner.

Alvarez, a Cuban, is being held up by red tape but was expected in camp momentarily. Gardner is on his way from his home in Sacramento, Calif.

Morehead Here Saturday

Will Announce Winners Of Scholarships Here

John Motoley Morehead, 92 year old graduate of the University of North Carolina and chairman of the foundation bearing his name which provides valuable all-expense-paid scholarships to students for study at UNC, will arrive here Saturday, for the awarding of 1963 Morehead Scholarships.

Winners of the 1963 Morehead Scholarships will be announced Tuesday, March 5, on live broadcasts by various television stations throughout the state at 5:30 p.m. Hugh Chatham of Elkin, a trustee of the Morehead Foundation, will present the Morehead Scholars to Morehead and to the television audience. Morehead will then present the scholars on behalf of the Morehead Foundation to UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock.

A total of 72 male high school seniors from Noroth Carolina high schools and selected preparatory schools are currently undergoiong interviews with the Morehead Foundation's Central Scholarship Committee. The finalists will then be interviewed by the foundation's Board of Trustees on Monday and Tuesday, March 4 and 5.

Winners of the Morehead Scholarship receive all-expense-paid scholarships covering four years of study at UNC. The scholadships are worth $5,100 for N. C. residents and $6,800 for non-residents, allowing foro the tuition differential.

Each of the young men appearing before the Morehead Scholoarship Committee who does not receive a Morehead Scholarship will receive a North Carolina merit tuition scholarship to the University of North Carolina.

Top Actresses To Head Cast Of Bagnold's 'Chalk Garden'

One of the most distinguished casts ever assembled on The Carolina Playmakers stage was announced this week for Enid Bagnold's "The Chalk Garden." The play will run in the Playmakers Theatre March 13-17.

Marion Fitz-Simons, Louise Lamont and Josephine Pettis — a trio of veteran professional and Playmakers actresses—were cast in major roles. Foster Fitz-Simons will direct the production.

Mrs. Fitz-Simons, the wife of the director, will play Mrs. St. Maugham, the grandmother. She toured professionally with the Borgny Hammer Ibsen Company and played major roles in productions with the Nantucket Yacht Theatre, Asheville Summer Theatre and The Carolina Playmakers. Mrs. Fitz-Simons plays the female comic lead each summer in "Unto These Hills" at Cherokee. She last appeared on the Playmakers stage as Mrs. Gant in "Look Homeward, Angel."

Mrs. Lamont, who will play Madrigal, the recently imprisoned governess in "The Chalk Garden," appeared on Broadway with Tallulah Bankhead in "Her Cardboard Lover" and with Fred Stone in "You Can't Take It With You." She has played numerous other major roles in Chicago, New York and with the Provincetown Theatre. Her roles with the Playmakers include Sadie Thompson in "Rain" and the title role in "The Matchmaker."

Mrs. Pettis, a native of Sydney, Australia, will play Olivia. She has appeared in many leading roles at Petit Theatre du Vieux Carre in New Orleans, in summer stock at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and on television in New Orleans. Mrs. Pettis recently acted in "One More Waltz" and "The Matchmaker" with the Playmakers.

Mary Lindsay Spearman, a 16-year-old Chapel Hill girl, will appear as Laurel. She appeared as a dancer in "Guys and Dolls" and as Pearl in "Tobacco Road" here earlier this season. Miss Spearman received the Junior Playmakers highest acting award this past summer.

Larry Randolph, a UNC graduate student from Ft. Smith, Ark., will play Maitland, the manservant. An alumnus of the Erie Playhouse in Erie, Pa., he has appeared here in "Guys and Dolls," "Renegade" and "The Matchmaker."

"THE CHALK GARDEN" — Louise Lamont as Madrigal, the mysterious governess, and Mary Lindsay Spearman as the eccentric Laurel, gaze out onto the garden in Enid Bagnold's "The Chalk Garden." The Playmakers production of the biting comedy will run March 13-17 at the Playmakers Theatre. Tickets become available to season ticket holders March 4, and to the general public on Thurs., March 7, at the Playmakers business office and at Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $2 each.

Others in the cast are Elizabeth Tennyson of Chapel Hill, a veteran of Goodman Memorial Theatre in Chicago; Graham Pollock of Gatesville, a "Lost Colony" actor; Abby Hurwitz of New Rochelle, N. Y.; and Elanya Sundbeck of Chapel Hill, Playmakers actresses.

Director Fitz-Simons is choreographer of "Unto These Hills" and staff director of The Carolina Playmakers. His recent productions here were "The Matchmaker" and "Under Milk Wood." He is the author of "Bright Leaf," the best-selling novel which was made into the motion picture by the same name.

"The Chalk Garden" was called "a sidelong, elegantly savage play" by Time Magazine. Miss Bagnold, the playwright, also wrote "National Velvet."

Tickets for the witty, suspenseful play will be available to the public on Thursday, March 7, at the Playmakers business office (214 Abernethy Hall) and at Ledbetter-Pickard. Tickets will be available to season ticket holders Monday. All seats are reserved at $2 each.

'Won't Tolerate' Soviet Action In Hemisphere

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States served notice Tuesday that it will not tolerate Soviet combat operations in the Western Hemisphere, not even any attempt to put down an uprising against the Castro regime in Cuba.

The warning was sounded by Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara when he was asked at a news conference what the government would do if Soviet forces in Cuba should be used to quell a revolt.

"I think that this administration indicated before that we will not accept operations in this hemisphere, combat operations by Soviet military personnel," the secretary replied.

On other points, McNamara said:

—It is too early for any report on movement of Soviet troops out of Cuba in accordance with Moscow's promise to remove "several thousand" by about March 15. Earlier, the State Department denied a published report that Russia had told the United States it planned to keep some forces in Cuba indefinitely.

—Contrary to some speculation, there was no "photo gap" during a period of several weeks just before the missile showdown with Russia last fall. McNamara referred to six U2 flights he said were made Sept. 5, 26 and 29 and Oct. 5, 6, 7 and 15. He said he did not discuss these flights in his television report on Cuba because they did not deal with specific missile sites.

Ordered All-Out Check

McNamara's news conference statements came as Rear Adm. Vernon L. Lowrance director of naval intelligence, said he ordered all-out scrutiny of Cuba late last August when he became "increasingly apprehensive" about the nature of the Soviet buildup. Lowrance told the Senate preparedness subcommittee that "reliable coverage of Cuba is a difficult problem." But he said U.S. intelligence efforts uncovered existence of the Soviet offensive missiles and bombers because "we take nothing for granted."

The admiral said his suspicions were aroused in late August and September with the introduction of surface-to-air missiles, patrol vessels and cruise missiles. He said he then ordered "no stone unturned" to determine the nature and extent of the Soviet buildup.

The possibility of finding offensive weapons was constantly considered before, he said, but earlier arms shipments were viewed primarily as aimed at bolstering Cuba's defenses against invasion.

Subversion Potential Serious

Lowrance said he now considers Cuba's potential for subversion in Latin America a "serious threat."

His testimony was echoed in a session of the House foreign affairs subcommittee on Latin America, where the U.S. ambassador to the Organization of American States (OAS) said Communists are "turning more and more to outright violence."

Ambassador deLesseps S. Morrison said repeated election and propaganda failures, plus the embarrassing plight of the Cuban economy and mass exodus of Cuban eefugees have forced Communist suoversives "into the open."

McNamara told his news conference there was no policy consideration involved in switching Cuban reconnaissance responsibility from the Central Intelligence Agency to the Strategic Air Command (SAC) last October just a day or two before Russian missiles were detected on the island.

He said the shift was ordered because the number of flights had increased to the point where the CIA was unable to handle the job.

Educators Explain Program To Boost Higher Education

RALEIGH (UPI)—Higher education spokesmen explained a bill today which would "encourage and promote" education beyond the high school.

The educators appeared before the Joint Committee on Higher Education. Senate Chairman Robert Lee Humber said a public hearing on the bill will be held in the "very near future."

Proposals in the measure include a system of comprehensive community colleges; updating three existing junior colleges and "re-defining" the consolidated university.

Dr. William Archie, director of the Higher Education Board, said the bill's three principal parts were results of "deliberations on the crucial issues" facing higher education.

Dr. Archie said by 1970 there will be 31,000 additional students whose higher education needs will not be met by existing state or private colleges. "This vast and unfilled need," he said, "is what drove the commission on."

And he added that this need was made more urgent by the people's failing on the bond issue of 1961." Dr. Archie said if the General Assembly approves this bill "for the first time North Carolina would have a solid system of higher education for every capable boy and girl."

Thomas J. Pearsall, who was chairman of a special study committee of the UNC trustees, explained the controversial name change of N. C. State College. He said frankly it was a "very worrisome problem . . . but they couldn't keep the same name, because college ought to come out."

He said the trustees did what the legislators do: Compromised on the name "N. C. State, the University of North Carolina at Raleigh."

UNC President William C. Friday explained proposals to make all three units of the university co-educational; to give a new definition of higher education; and to broaden the undergrad programs on the three campuses.

Maj. L. P. McLendon, chairman of the higher education board, explained parts of the bill relating to existing junior colleges at Asheville, Charlotte and Wilmington. He said it is "economically speedy and wise" to "utilize to the maximum" these existing facilities.

Then Dallas Herring, who will direct the new program, explained the major part of the bill, which sets up the machinery for a system of community colleges. He said Rep. Clyde Harriss has called these new schools "the workingman's university."

And Herring said the new network of schools is designed to "reach the blue collar people." He said the community colleges offer the "opportunity for the state to reach more than the 31,000 students expected to be applying" to colleges by 1970.

YACK INTERVIEWS

The Publications Board will hold interviews for the position of editor of the 1964 Yackety-Yack on Tuesday from 3-5 p.m. in the Grail Room of GM. All interested candidates are urged to see the current editor Louis Legum before the interview date.

SP ENDORSEMENT

Information concerning Student Party endorsement of candidates for Student Legislature positions in the spring elections can be obtained from Phil Baddour, either at 319 Lewis or in the Student Government offices in GM.

BEANBIRDS

The Beanbirds will meet Monday at 8:30 p.m. in the back room of Spero's.

TOURS SCHOLARSHIPS

All applicants for the Tours Scholarships to France should sign up this week for their interviews at the YMCA office.

SCIENCE INSTITUTE

The Department of Geology will conduct an Institute in Earth Sciences during the first Summer School Session June 10 to July 19.

The National Science Foundation has awarded UNC a grant of $40,000 to conduct the institute to improve the subject matter competence of junior and senior high school teachers. This will be the third year the institute has been offered at UNC.

The institute is an outgrowth of the work of the North Carolina Curriculum Study Committee. About three years ago, the committee recommended that a course in earth science be taught at the ninth grade level.

Staff members of the institute will be Roy L. Ingram, professor and chairman of the Department of Geology and director of the institute; Associate Prof. Walter H. Wheeler; and Paul E. Lovingood, visiting assistant professor of geography.

LOST

One pair of black frame glasses in a brown leather case was lost last Friday night at the Junior Class Combo Party at the Homestead.—Jim Wilson, 258 Ehringhaus (968-9034).

COMMUNCATIONS COMMITTEE

The Communcations Committee will meet Monday afternoon at 4:30 in the Student Government offices on the second floor of GM.

STUDENT CENTER

The Presbyterian Student Center on Henderson St. invites students to "drop in" anytime after eight o'clock this evening for bridge, critbage, chess, ping-pong, etc. The Center will provide refreshments.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

The Carolina Christian Fellowship will have a supper meeting upstairs in Lenoir Hall tonight at six o'clock. Mr. Welcome Detweiler will speak on "The Holy Spirit and His Place in the Life of a Christian."

HILLEL HOUSE

Dr. Bernard Boyd will open the spring lecture series at Hillel House tonight at 8 p.m. with a talk on "The Relevance of the Bible for Modern Man."

Post Publisher Bucks Group, Will Print Now

NEW YORK (UPI)—Mrs. Dorothy Schiff, publisher of the New York Post, resigned from the New York City Publishers' Association Thursday and announced that the Post would resume publication on Monday.

Mrs. Schiff called a special news conference to announce why she was breaking away from the publishers of the eight other newspapers either struck or shut down in the 83-day-old New York newspaper blackout.

"I think the strike has gone on long enough," she said.

Mrs. Schiff said the Post would resume publication under the terms of its old contract with striking Local 6 of the International Typographical Union. That contract ran out Dec. 8 when the union struck.

"I don't see any immediate settlement of the strike in sight," Mrs. Schiff said.

Bertram Powers, president of the striking printers union, was present at Mrs. Schiff's news conference.

President's Civil Rights Message Outlines Action

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy sent Congress a special message Thursday urging passage of civil rights legislation that won praise from liberals of both parties but drew hot Southern opposition.

In his first direct request for anti-discrimination legislation on behalf of Negroes, Kennedy asked for bills that would protect Negro voting rights, provide federal aid for school districts trying to desegregate and broaden the operations of the U. S. Civil Rights Commission.

He said the new laws are needed to protect Negroes from "the cruel disease of discrimination."

Sen. Kenneth B. Keating, R-N. Y., who has accused Kennedy in the past of dragging his feet on civil rights, commented: "Although there are some notable omissions, this is the President's strongest message on civil rights to date."

Notes Leadership Needed

The New York Republican said, however, that Kennedy's "eloquent words will have to be matched by determined leadership" if any civil rights legislation is to be enacted.

Another Republican, Sen. Clifford P. Case of New Jersey, also said Kennedy's proposals did not go far enough but predicted civil rights legislation could be passed "if the administration and the leadership of both parties in the Congress put their back into the effort."

Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., leader of the Senate Southern bloc, said Kennedy has never urged Negro leaders "to make any effort whatever to improve themselves so that they will be more acceptable to other citizens who may have certain standards for their associates."

"I suppose," the Georgian added, "that the potential power politics involved prohibits such a suggestion."

Williams Raps Message

Rep. John Bell Williams, D-Miss., said the message was "an insult to every American citizen of whatever race."

"The whole kit and caboodle," Williams declared, "is nothing more nor less than an attempt to turn the government over to the NAACP. The Congress should ignore it."

Speaker John W. McCormack praised the message as "an eloquent expression of the "rights of all Americans."

This message is still additional evidence of the Democratic party's leadership in defending the rights of all of our people," McCormack said.

Republican members of the House Judiciary Committee said the proposals did not go far enough. They included Reps. William M. McCulloch, Ohio; John V. Lindsay, R-N.Y., and Clark MacGregor, R-Minn.

In the politics-laden message of 6,000 words, Kennedy said more progress on civil rights had been made under his administration "than in any comparable period in our history."

Answer To Criticism

This was an apparent answer to criticism from some Negro leaders and liberal Republicans' such as New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, a possible GOP candidate for president in 1964.

In the field of Negro voting rights, Kennedy proposed legislation providing:

—Temporary referees to make it possible for Negroes to vote in state or federal elections while their voting rights law suits are pending in the courts.

—A requirement that voting suits "be accorded expedited treatment in the federal courts" as a further step toward avoiding "the usual long and difficult delay" in such litigation.

—A ban against requiring Negroes to meet different standards than whites in applying to register and vote.

—A legal "presumption that the applicant is literate" if he has completed the sixth grade—unless state officials can prove that he has failed his voting literacy test.

Kennedy also proposed bills to View Of Campus Politics:

Dynamically Unimaginative

To most students campus politics is an enigma wrapped in a mystery enveloped in a labyrinth of nonsense.

Campus politics and the resultant brand of student government is respected by some students who know it well and understand it — for that reason; and is respected by others who do not know it well — for that reason. But for the great mass who have only a fleeting acquaintance with the political world of bus bills and honor systems, let us say it does make a difference to the student body who is elected, and on what platform they win. It matters because the student's money will be spent, because the student's activities for the next yetr will be planned, and because his academic, social and cultural life will come within the influence, such as it is, of student government. And it matters which people are elected, because there IS a difference between the candidates.

* * *

CAMPUS politics, for good or bad, is based on the two-party system. Within these parties are several shades of opinion and several brands of potential candidates, as well as the difference between the parties themselves.

Within the University Party are two more or less distinct groups — the Old Greeks and the New Greeks. The Old Greeks, with little attempt at subtlety, favor continued absolute fraternity domination of student government, with its resulting Greek control of executive committees, legislature, Orientation, honor councils and other SG functions.

The New Greeks favor winning elections. And that means a basic admission that dorm men are human.

The remnants of the "third party" ISP has the potential of being a permanent Don't Care Fringe Group — a healthy addition to the campus political scene.

* * *

Within the opposition Student Party are two groups, even more distinct than those in the UP. These groups could be called the Traditionalists and the Know-Nothings.

The Traditionalists believe in a liberal tradition, with its roots in the 1940s and 1950s and orders on tap from Raleigh and points North and West.

The Know-Nothings have one belief which they constantly reiterate: student government is too ignorant and incompetent to act in any manner at any time — and thus, it is safer to do absolutely nothing.

* * *

THIS, we admit, is a bleak choice for the students. But it is not absolutely hopeless.

The New Greeks within the UP and Traditionalists within the SP both have able candidates and respectably-sane programs — if they can squeeze the candidates past the orgy of party nominations and their programs past a dynamically-unimaginative student government.

* * *

THE UNIVERSITY Party is given a choice between Larry McDevitt and Bob Spearman for the presidential nomination.

McDevitt is heir apparent for the Old Greeks. He is a Beta and a nice guy (really.)

Spearman is the New Greeks' man. Despite the political handicap of intelligence, Spearman is given a good chance to get the nomination.

Ford Rowan, the New Greeks' candidate for the UP vice-presidential nomination, is laboring under the illusion that student government can be made into a rational instrument for the student's welfare.

The Student Party is dependent more than anyone dares to admit on the decision of the handsome, intelligent, smooth-talking vice-president, Mike Lawler. He is the Traditionalists man-on-the-spot and the Chosen One by all alumni and faithful of the Student Party Way Of Life, and would be a very strong presidential candidate.

Per usual, the know-Nothings have no candidates and are reluctant to support anyone else's candidates and so will vote against everyone.

If Lawler doesn't run the SP has a mass of oblivion from which to choose. It would be difficult to single out the most mentally-oblivious in such a vast selection.

* * *

AND THUS the choice: between Tradition tempered with Nothingness, on the one hand, and Greekishness tempered with Less-Greekishness, on the other. In other words, the parties hold little hope.

But then what is a campus political party but a collection of outstanding or non-outstanding individuals? What makes up a great political tradition on campus, but a series of intelligent programs implemented by outstanding student leaders? There are several outstanding candidates this spring, if they can get by the organized mediocrity inherent in campus politics. (JC)

Federal Aid's Friends & Foes

Collegiate Press Service

WASHINGTON — The friends of President Kennedy's new aid-to-education program are once again killing its chances of becoming law.

It may seem ironical — but it's nothing new. Internecine strife between groups backing increased federal aid to education have killed similar programs before.

Kennedy's sweeping new omnibus education proposal would assist American education from the first grade to the post-graduate level, through construction loans, matching funds and student loan plans.

Opponents of federal aid to education are this year relaxing while the measure's proponents kill its chances. Once again, the apparent cause of death will be the church-state dispute: the administration program would give $1.5 billion to assist public elementary and secondary schools, with no aid to go to private schools at the same level.

The main antagonists in the dispute are the National Education Association (NEA), which considers the administration plan near-perfect, and the National Catholic Welfare Conference, which asserts the program is unfair to parents who pay public school taxes as well as extra tuition to send their children to parochial and private schools.

Backers of the administration plan assert that federal aid to private and church-supported schools violates the Constitution and the traditional doctrine of separation of church and state — while the opponents hold that the administration's way of doing things would discriminate against Catholic and other taxpayers who also pay to support private schools. These opposing views are held by a sufficient number of Congressmen to block passage of the legislation entirely, as indeed happened in the last Congress.

There are some indications that the two factions may compromise to get some of the legislation through Congress, but the groups have yet to settle on a suitable agreement. Kennedy's program would give indirect benefits to private schools — but these are called inadequate by Catholic spokesmen. One feature of the plan would make construction loans for specialized cassrooms and laboratories available to private schools, and another portion of the program would extend the "forgiveness" of National Defense Education Act loans to teachers in private schools.

Since the two opposing factions have yet to settle on a compromise, Washington educational circles and lobbyists are giving increasing support to a "salvage job" on the program, to get through what can be gotten through this session. In other words, colleges and universities are hopeful that legislation benefitting both sides will be divorced from the omnibus bills and passed.

Kennedy On Youth Problems

Greensboro Daily News

Greensboro has learned from its mayor's committee something of the local problems of youth — their mixed precocity and restlessness. There is, then, all the mode reason to study attentively President Kennedy's message to Congress on Youth. For if there are "teenage" problems here, they would appear to be currents in a national tide of change that has put youth — not for the first time — out of kilter with our society.

Like previous papers on mental health and education, the President's is a popourri of hard statistics, arguable conclusions and debatable prgrams. But whether or not Congress passes the programs or agrees with the conclusions, it cannot dodge the hard statics. They point up a serious national problem. Juvenile delinquency is still rising fast:

In the last decade juvenile delinquency cases brought before the courts have more than doubled, and arrests of youth increased 86 per cent, until they number almost 1,000,000 arrests a year in 1960, 15 per cent of all arrests.

Mr. Kennedy, far from throwing up his hands in puritanical horror or joining J. Edgar Hoover in advocating harsh treatment of the average minor offender, believes that juvenile crime is related to other changes in the economy and society. Employment, for exampe, is a growing worry for American youth between the school-leaving age of 16 and 24. Youth between 18 and 21 (only 7 per cent of the laboring force) already account for 18 per cent of our unemployment. And with the number of youth expected to appear on the labor market in the Sixties twice the number that appeared in the past decade, this chronic unemployment promises to increase. These young people flow from everywhere into an already flooded market. The birth rate is up, of course. But traditional absorbers of the labor pool are failing — farms for instance: "It is not likely," writes the President, "that more than one out of every 10 boys now living on farms will find full-time work in agriculture."

Here, in deceptively cold figures, lie the potential roots of more juvenile crime. Mr. Kennedy believes that "the malady . . . is a lack of opportunity," leading to "youthful frustration, rebellion and idleness."

This may put it too simply. Greensboro's own committee discomfortingly concluded that it is often just those who enjoy the greatest "opportunities" who are most bored and frustrated. What works for the predatory packs of the Manhattan streets may not work elsewhere; and vice versa.

Clearly, however, until someone discovers that magic social elixir that will revive youthful idealism and imagination throughout the ranks of American youth, prematurely jaded and shallowly precocious as they are now, strictly economic tragedies can be fought by economic means. Mr. Kennedy places several proposals for Peace Corps-like and neo-C. C. C. organizations on Congress' doorstep. Congress may not wish to pass them all. But all bear careful thought. And Congress certainly cannot avoid the scrutiny of youth problems to which the President's excellent message summons it.

Letters Welcome

Right Wing: 'Boring'

Reactionary Likes Nobody But Self

From The Village VOICE

(A news story)

Noel E. Parmentel, Jr. is easily bored. And when he is, he does something about it. He talks to himself. He doesn't talk to other people, because he finds most other people boring.

When he does talk to himself, however, he does not, like a good reactionary individualist (he has no patience with respectable euphemisms like conservative), go off into a corner and do it. He talks to himself in magazines and before audiences—a practice which seems to indicate a concern for the social welfare of other people that could lead to the most dangerous kind of right-wing revisionism.

Parmentel recently talked to himself before the Greenwich Village Young Americans for Freedom in a room in the Hotel Earle conveniently adjacent to the bar. The occasion was billed as "An Evening with Noel E. Parmentel, Jr." There was some delay in opening the proceedings while someone went out for a tape recorder. Parmentel's lawyer, who was in the audience, would not let his client speak without one. Finally a dramatically becowled Rosemary McGrath, Village YAF chairman, introduced Parmentel as "a political commentator and social critic" who has written for Esquire, the Saturday Evening Post, National Review, the Nation, and Common Wealth.

Parmentel rose to his considerable height and moved on shambling feet (which he later identified as clay) to a table at the head of the room.

'No Black Robe'

"Unlike my friend Bill Buckley," he drawled, (Parmentel is a native from Algiers, Louisiana), "I will not read you an article of mine from Esquire Magazine. Unlike Bill Rusher, I have no black robes to put on, and unlike Norman Mailer, I have no scatological poetry to read."

(A southern college has complained that William Buckley, editor of National Review, agreed to speak there for a substantial fee and then got up and read an article he had written for some publication. William Rusher, publisher of National Review donned black robes at Hunter College recently, where he played a Supreme Court Justice in a mock trial of the school prayer case.)

Parmentel then went on to inform anyone who cared to listen that "the right wing has become generally a bore to the American voting public." (Parmentel is a self-confessed and staunch right-winger.) "God knows what's goin' to happen to us now — we've managed to bore the American public and each other. We've done this by being boring, stupid . . . and . . . dishonest and by encouraging fools, knaves, and hicks. . . ."

MISSED ITS CHANCE

The right wing, Parmentel observed, missed its chance in 1960, when, "Americans had right-wing aspirations . . They had tried Eisenhower and got eight more years of socialism." The American people were embarrassed by the Russians, a bunch of "Asiatic barbarians," getting ahead of them in space, he asserted, and they "were fed up with socialism." In 1960, Parmentel said with some nostalgia, "we had a good candidate (Barry Goldwater) and some support." Goldwater, he contends, should have fought it out in the primaries then. "I don't think anybody could beat Kennedy in '64. . . . Now the nomination is worth nothing. In '68 he'll (Goldwater) be a tattered old property."

As for GOP Senator John Tower, a Texas conservative, Parmentel "once thought he could make it, but I don't anymore. He muffed the Billie Sol Estes bit." Tower, according to Parmentel, dropped his pursuit of Estes when a right-winger told him to lay off because Estes is a John Birchite (which, says Parmentel, he is). Evidently Parmentel viewed this hot-potato treatment of Estes as bad strategy because now he doesn't think Tower "has anywhere to go at all."

Nor, in his opinion, has the entire right wing. "The right wing missed the boat by fomenting this quarrel with Nelson Rockefeller," which Parmentel thinks is pointless since "Rockefeller has no politics."

'DREARY BORE'

The right wing does have a magazine, Parmentel conceded — National Review. "Its frantic search for respectability has become a bore, it's become a dreary bore." Bored with National Review, he went on to YAF. "Now the YAFs. Aren't they a fine bunch of young people? Draft-dodgers, slackers. Two of their leaders were recently dragged into the U. S. Army kicking and screaming. I think it will do them a world of good."

"I wish the right wing well," Parmentel said graciously, "but I deplore its antics." He was asked about one of its latest antics — going into food stores and adorning items such as Polish hams with cards informing prospective purchasers that they were produced in a Communist country.

"If I were a grocer and any of those creeps came into my store . . . I'd give 'em warning and then give 'em grape shot. Those silly people from Yonkers. . . ."

He regards such activities as invasions of privacy. He also regards sit-ins as invasions of privacy. He is also opposed to public libraries. He thinks they are "an extension of socialism and an attack on individualism." He is for General Walker. Indeed, he admires him. The general, says Parmentel, is "an honest man" "who has been treated badly by fools and knaves down in Washington." But if the right wing had an army, Parmentel would prefer to have it led by General MacArthur.

"Our home is in the Republican Party," he said of the right wing. That's the "only place we can make our influence felt" in the country. "The Conservative Party is a divisive force. We have to grow up and realize this is a two-party country and its always goin' to be a two-party country." And "we can mark off the Democratic Party, including the Southern Democrats — they're socialists in my opinion."

How does the right wing cease to be boring? Someone asked, getting back to the main topic of the evening.

"Bores are born, not made."

"What do you think of the left wing?"

"Liberals per se are bound to be bores . . . although some of my best friends are liberal . . . I had some hopes for the right wing, but it's beginning to act like the left wing."

"How can we stop being boring?"

"Clean house."

"What do you mean by bore?"

"Listen, sweetie, if you don't know what a bore is, I can't help you."

"What's wrong with being a bore?"

"I like bores," Parmentel rejoined.

Discussion then switched to the liberals' control of the communications industry.

"Liberals are always going to control the communications industry because they've got all the talent," Parmentel said simply.

Some in the audience protested that it only seems that the liberals have more talent because they set the standards in the communications field.

Parmentel didn't buy it. "There just isn't much talent on the right, and I'm afraid there isn't going to be any . . . The left is always going to come up with more talent than the right . . . Talented people seem to go that way; I don't know why, but they do."

As for defense, he's all for it. He's opposed to . NATO but not to unilateral precautions. "I'm for arming to the teeth. . . . the dirty bomb, I'm for the dirty bomb."

He does not, however approve of using armed might against sovereign states like Mississippi. He is for Meredith's right to go to Ole Miss and he is for the state's right to stop him. But he is against the federal government enforcing Meredith's individual right against the state's right.

Someone asked if there wasn't a basic contradiction in his logic. He wouldn't admit there was, and since he doesn't believe in public education anyway, he didn't see that it mattered much.

"What do you think of Thomas Jefferson?" was the next question.

"I think he was a good architect."

At that, a woman in the audience who thought that all the time Parmentel had been talking to her and the others in the room, not realizing that he had just been amusing himself, rose and demanded with outrage in her voice:

"Can I ask if there is anyone in this audience who takes this man seriously? . . . Obviously he doesn't believe in anything . . ."

She walked out and everyone agreed that the left wing hasn't much capacity for self-criticism.

On the House Un-American Activities Committee, Parmentel said: "I don't think they have the right to investigate anybody. . . . That isn't my America that needs creeps like that. It doesn't need a bunch of people who pry into the private political thoughts of presumptively loyal American citizens . . . I think they're a bunch of cheap, tacky, self - serving politicians. They're eight rate and I think they ought to be abolished."

On the threat of Communism, particularly at home: "There aren't any more Communists. Mao Tse Tung is the only Communist."

On Robert Welch: "Welch is honest and this is resented by the right wing, which is run by phonies." He added that Welch is honest but mistaken.

"What," someone asked, "do you think of the Supreme Court, laughingly, as the interpreter of the Constitution?"

"I think of the Supreme Court laughingly. Whizzer White is my favorite. Mr. Justice Whizzer."

On the U. N.: "I want to give Red China a seat in the U. N.— ours."

Parmentel, presumably having managed to dispel his own boredom, stopped talking. The tape recorder was turned off. Everyone went home congratulating himself on the capacity of the right wing to laugh at itself.

European Study Program Changed

The Institute of European Studies has announced new admissions procedures and application deadlines for its academic year programs in Vienna, Paris, and Freiburg, West Germany.

Application periods for all three programs will open officially on Monday, March 4 at IES Headquarters, 35 E. Wacker Drive, Chicago 1, Ill.

Deadlines for applications have been moved from June 15 to June 5 for the programs, beginning next August and September. The Institute's admission committee will review all applications simultaneously after the deadline and mail notices of acceptance or rejection June 15.

Institute officials said the changes were made because applications from qualified students have climbed beyond the capacities of the programs. To continue accepting qualified students as applications are received would entail rejecting some better qualified students who applied closer to the deadline date, they said.

However, students with good reasons for seeking advance notice may petition the admissions committee for a decision before June 15.

The Institute's program at the University of Vienna combines English-taught liberal arts and general studies courses, intensive German language instruction, regular German-taught university courses for those competent in German, and supplementary lectures and seminars. It is open to juniors and sophomores. There is no language requirement.

The "Das Deutsche Jahr" program is conducted for juniors only at the University of Freiburg. It stresses political science, philosophy, literature, history and German. All courses are taught in German. Tutorials have been added to aid U. S. students in preparing for classes and examinations.

The Paris Honors program admits outstanding juniors and a few sophomores. It emphasizes contemporary European studies and offers qualified students opportunities for study at the University of Paris and other Paris schools. All classes are taught in French.

Each program includes two field-study trips in Western Europe with Institute lecturers.

UNC Professor Back After Teaching 'Arabized' Course

Egyptian businessmen are learning about executive training techniques used by American executives, but they are learning it in a new program which recognizes culture differences and thus "Arabizes" the course materials studied.

UNC professor of accounting Harold Q. Langenderfer has just returned from Cairo, Egypt, where he has been teaching groups of Egyptians executive management training courses.

Langenderfer spent a great deal of time researching actual Egyptian business problems to use in in classes. Such "Arabizing" of cases produced effective results in classes where the study of problems of American business companies would not be meaningful.

Prof. Langenderfer's Cairo headquarters was the Egyptian National Institute of Management Development, a newly-organized governmental institution established to give management training courses to Egyptian executives.

The courses are much the same as those taught in many American executive training programs, such as UNC's Executive Program which operates each year at the UNC School of Business Administration. Business companies send their executives to these programs for courses in business organization; principles of management; finance; marketing management; economic fluctuations; business policy; and managerial accounting.

By no small coincidence, Egypt's National Institute of Management Development is using some of the tricks of the trade used in the UNC Executive Training Program. The director of UNC's program, Prof. Williard J. Graham, was one member of a three-man team which went to Egypt in 1958 to inspect the need for a management training program. This team, financed by the Ford Foundation, reported that the need was there and suggested what might be done to train Egyptian executives.

The Egyptian National Institute of Management Development has since grown into an organization which soon will have its own full time staff of native Egyptians.

Russell's Charge Of Anti-Semitism Denied By Nikita

MOSCOW (UPI)—Izvestia Thursday published charges by British philosopher Earl Bertrand Russell of officially encouraged anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union and Premier Nikita Khrushchev's blistering denial of them.

Publication of the letter exchange between Lord Russell and Khrushchev in the official organ of the Soviet government was a virtually unprecedented public airing here of the entire question of anti-Semitism.

Russell apparently was referring to Soviet press reports of executions and death sentences given persons accused of such economic crimes as speculation and embezzlement.

The Western press has pointed out that many of those sentenced to death had what appeared to be Jewish names.

Referring to the Western reports to his reply to Russell, Khrushchev called them "a crude falsehood, a malicious calumny on the Soviet people and our country."

Khrushchev, whose letter was published in London last Sunday, admitted that some of these executed had been "of Jewish nationality."

"This is qualified in the West as a manifestation of anti-Semitism," he wrote. "I must frankly admit that I am surprised by such an inference. It is a deep delusion.

"The bourgeois press in the West has been raising a clamor again on the question of so-called anti-Semitism on the USSR.

"I feel I should tell you that it is a crude falsehood, a malicious calumny on the Soviet people and on our country."

Khrushchev said the death sentence had been given in accordance with "the morality of the new Socialist society."

Students Oppose Three-Man Rooms Favor New Union

Carolina students showed that they are in favor of a new Student Union but at the same time are opposed to three man rooms according to a poll conducted by the University Party last week.

Two hundred students were asked how often they used the Student Union, if they felt its facilities were adequate, and if they felt UNC needs a new Student Union.

In reply to the first question, 31 per cent answered that they use the present Student Union often, 54 per cent sometimes and 15 per cent never. Of the students, 83 per cent felt that the facilities of Graham Memorial were inadequate at the present and therefore felt that a new Student Union was needed.

Dorm residents were asked if they had ever lived in a three-man room, and, if so, did they feel that it was harmful to their adademic life. The poll also questioned the students' feeling toward the proposed increase in room rent.

It was found that 63 per cent of the students interviewed have lived in a three-man room and 75 per cent of these students felt that it was harmful to their academic life. In response to the proposal of increased room rents 63 per cent answered that they were opposed to the hike.

Tar Heels Down Gamecocks, 93-76

UNC Meets Wake In ACC Semifinals

By HARRY LLOYD

RALEIGH—It will be North Carolina versus Wake Forest in the ACC semifinals tonight at 9:30.

The Tar Heels won the right to advance up the tournament ladder yesterday afternoon by eliminating South Carolina, 93-76, in the opener.

A slightly limping Billy Cunningham scored 28 points in what appeared to be an easy victory for UNC. Scrappy South Carolina decided to run with the Tar Heels instead of slowing down the game.

and still managed to keep the margin close.

The Gamecocks, who finished in a six-place tie in the regular season, led once in the ball game. That was when Ronnie Collins hit on a jumper to make the score 3-2.

But then Yogi Poteet and Cunningham hit on jumpers, Bryan McSweeney and Larry Brown on lay-ups, and the Tar Heels had a seven-point lead. South Carolina managed to cut the lead to two points at 20-18, but their methods proved costly.

They were fouling Cunningham, and then matching Cunningham's foul shots with field goals of their own. Cunningham scored eight straight UNC points in one stretch, but in the same period the Gamecocks made 13 points.

With the lead chopped to two, UNC again scored four baskets in a row due mainly to their fast-break offense.

The biggest first-half lead was 13, reached first at 43-30 and then again at the end of the half, 49-36.

The Tar Heels were hot from the floor in both halves. In the first period, they hit on 22 of 38 shots for 57.9 per cent, but topped that figure in the second period by making 18 of 29 for 62.1 per cent. The game mark was 59.7.

The Gamecocks for the game made 29 of 80 for 36.3 per cent.

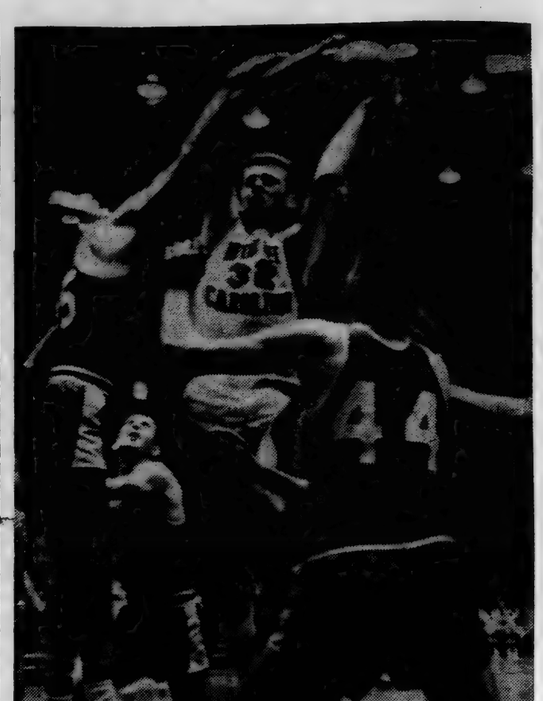
The second half showed little advantage to one team or the other, and UNC's biggest lead was a 17-point margin at the end. South Carolina managed at one point to cut the lead to eight, at 65-57, but their threat was short-lived.

South Carolina center Bob Haney, not the high score during the season, scored 23 points, as did sharp-shooting Scotti Ward. Ronnie Collins had 16 for the losers.

Charlie Shaffer and Yogi Poteet were second for the Tar Heels with 18. Bryan McSweeney had 13 and Larry Brown scored 12.

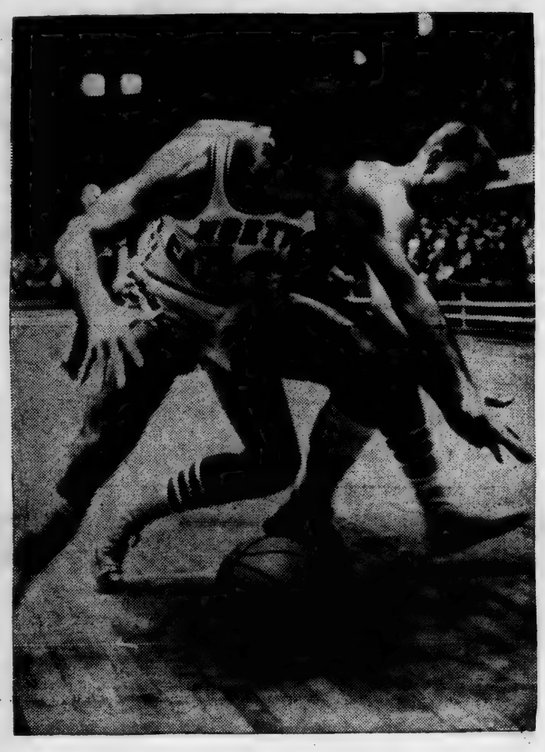
But Brown was perhaps responsible for more points than any player on the court as he came up with 13 assists, a new Reynolds Coliseum record. The old mark was 11, held jointly by Jackie Murdock of Wake Forest and John Maglio of N. C. State.

Cunningham, who hit on 11 of 18 shots, scored six free throws and pulled down 13 rebounds, played despite a painful leg bruise aggravated earlier in the day.



He returned to Chapel Hill after the game for treatment, but is expected to be ready for today's game.

The Tar Heels held a wide rebounding edge, 48-35, but were also found guilty of 21 errors as against nine charged to South Carolina.



Scoring totals:

South Carolina—Haney 23, Ward 23, R. Collins 16, Yarborough 7, Grich 4, J. Collins 3, Gorsage 0, Lucansky 0.

UNC — Cunningham 28, Shaffer 18, Poteet 18, McSweeney 13, L. Brown 12, Respess 4, Cooke 0, Callahan 0, B. Brown 0.

Wake Forest Blasts Cold Terps, 80-41

RALEIGH—Wake Forest's defending ACC basketball champions made mincemeat out of Maryland yesterday in the most one-sided contest in the history of the league's basketball tournament.

The Deacons pulled away from a low-scoring first half lead of 34-21 and embarrassed the Bud Millikan-coached Terrapins, 80-41. The 39-point margin was the largest ever in the annual tourney.

Maryland's 41 points was also the lowest total ever scored by a team in the event. Wake Forest's 44 points in a loss to Duke in 1958 was the previous low.

Maryland closed the Wake lead to 36-24 early in the last half, then collapsed completely. The Deacons went on a 13-point scoring spree and put the game beyond Maryland's reach, 49-24.

Bob Eicher hit Maryland's second field goal of the half, then the Baptists came back with 12 more points in a row. That made the score 61-26 and McKinney removed all his starters.

The reserves, led by Ronny Watts, continued to pour it on. With about seven minutes to go all of Maryland's starters were out of the game also. The Deacs pushed their lead to 80-39 at the two-minute mark.

Frank Christie led Wake with 16 points, Dave Wiedeman hit 13 and Bob Woollard had 12. Eicher and Jerry Greenspan hit 10 apiece for Maryland.

Blue Devils Stop Virginia 89—70

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

RALEIGH—Duke's ACC invincibility continued to assert itself here last night as Art Heyman, Jeff Mullins and company routed Virginia, 89-70.

For Duke, which went undefeated in ACC regular action, the first round tournament win was its 16th in succession, and an initial step towards a much predicted conference crown, and a possible national championship. The Blue Dukes will meet last night's N. C. State-Clemson winner in a 7:30 semi-final contest tonight.

Mullins (with 29 poitns) and Heyman (21) were once again the chief triggers that shot Duke to victory in this game of curiously changing complexion.

Virginia lead 2-0 after two minutes of play, but this was the Cavalier's only lead of the game, indeed their only actual advancement within shouting distance of Duke. Mullins scored nine straight points after U. Va.'s initial margin, and hin teammats added eight more before the Cavaliers could catch their breath.

The Cavaliers got as close as five points in the second half, but with Mullins and Heyman operating Duke's breath-taking fastbreak, the Blue Devils slowly but surely pulled away to their final margin.

Kappa Sigma, Craige Advance

By STUART BALL

Kappa Sigma and Craige Dorm filled out the remaining semi-final berths in intramural basketball competition Wednesday night, defeating SAE and Ruffin, respectively.

The Kappa Sigs, led by the fine shooting of Clayton Burns and Jim Speight, topped SAE, 34-28. Burns had a good night from the floor, hitting six of 11 shots, and added four free throws for 16 points. Speight scored eight points for the winners.

As a team, Kappa Sig hit on 13 of 33 shots from the floor for 39 per cent accuracy. SAE, having trouble connecting, hit only nine of 36 shots for 25 per cent. Keith Stoneman led the losers with seven points.

Craige got good performance from Ozie Faison and Bill Brown and took a 51-37 victory from Ruffin. Faison hit on 60 per cent of his shots and stuffed in 24 points. Brown also hit double figures, scoring 15. Craige took 59 shots from the floor and hit on 21 for 36 per cent accuracy.

Bob Carter led Ruffin with 13 points. The Ruffinites hit on 12 of 38 shots for 31 per cent.

The championship games in each of the four divisions were played last night. In the Fraternity Blue and White Leagues, Kappa Sig met ATO and the ATO Buckeyes took on the Sigma Nu Reds. In Dormitory action Teague and Craige met in the Blue finals, and it was an all Winston final in the White League with the Offs taking on the Waterboys.

Bill Asks For Participation By Students In UNC Growth

A resolution urging the administration to adopt a policy of increased student participation in the future development of the University was among the four bills introduced in Student Legislature Thursday night. Action on these bills is expected to be taken in SL's Special Session Monday night.

This resolution, as introduced by John Ulfelder, requests the University administration to increase student participation on administrative programing committees because the student body needs a voice in guiding the future expansion of UNC.

Rufus Edmisten introduced a bill for Jim Scott of the International Students Board (ISB), which requests that SL appropriate $723.50 to the ISB so that it can pay the expenses of a Panamanian student on this campus beginning in September.

The bill cites the lack of exchange of ideas between Latin America and United States students as a deplorable deficiency, especially in a country like Panama where two cultures are in contrast, and suggests that an exchange program with the University of Panama be set up for next year.

A resolution, introduced by Bill Straughn (SP) calls for the Speaker of Student Legislature to study the possibility of establishing a scholarship program for an African student from Bulgaria.

Also introduced was a bill which would provide for an additional graduate student to serve and vote on the Men's and Women's Honor Councils if the councils were trying a case involving a graduate student.

This bill, as introduced by Dick Ellis for Mike Lawler and Grant Wheeler, would increase graduate school representation on the councils for these cases from two to three members and would allow them to vote on all matters before the council except those arising from "alleged procedural errors."

Members absent from Student Legislature Thursday night were Bambi Ansley (SP, DW 1); Bo Jones (Ind., TM 1); Anne Lupton (ISP, DW 2); and Dave Williams (SP, TM 3).

Legislature Revises Campus Voting Law

By JOEL BULKLEY

Amendments, debates and time were the key elements Thursday night as Student Legislature completed its revision of the campus election laws in a 7½-hour session.

The longest discussion of the meeting concerned a proposed increase in the number of town-district polling places.

An amendment, proposed by Larry McDevitt (UP), would have increased the number of polling places by at least one outlet in each district.

McDevitt withdrew this amendment and substituted another which gives the Elections Board the power to place additional ballot boxes where it deems necessary. This measure also includes statements which require that both chairman of campus political parties and legislative floor leaders be notified 4 hours in advance before such consideration is made and that any changes made by the Elections Board be completed at least 14 calendar days prior to Election day. This should allow ample time for both parties to be able to appeal an Elections Board decision to the Constitutional Council.

Minor revisions were made in both the outline of the judicial districts and the composition of both the Men's and Women's Honor Councils. The districts were reduced in geographical size while the composition of the councils was altered to create a better representative to student ratio. Other items approved wihout debate were the orientation period for council members (30 days after the election) procedure for electing chairmen and vice-chairmen and the fact that a student under the jurisdiction of one school court canot vote for members of another council.

A proposal to establish seven as the number of Men's Council members needed to hear a case when the council was operating in split sessions was deleted after a lengthy debate.

It was after midnight before SL began discussion on the second half of the elections laws, the ones which deal with the mechanics and procedures for elections. These sections deal with the way election dates are set, the officers to be elected in each election, write-in-candidates and the number of signatures ncessary to be eligible for a student to have his name appear on the ballot. A petition with 25 signatures must be presented to the Elections Board before a candidate may be placed on the ballot. Any student who meets the qualifications for the office he is seeking is eligible to be a write-in-candidate. These candidates are subject to all the E.B. limitations, i.e. maximum amount of expense accounts, etc., except that they are not required to attend the meetings of the candidates. Words and phrases of clarification were added to many of the next sections to make the laws clearer and more easily understood. Candidates' personal and political party expense accounts as well as appeals to the constitutional Council were also approved.

Cuba Trains Other Latins, CIA Reveals

WASHINGTON (UPI) — CIA Director John A. McCone said in testimony released Friday that more than 1,500 people from Latin American countries have been brought to Cuba for training in subversion, sabotage and guerrilla warfare. He said more are still going.

His statement was made public as President Kennedy told visiting Argentine War College students that the Western Hemisphere has a good deal of unfinished business ahead as it strives to guard against subversion and other "foreign activities."

McCone, like his CIA predecessor Allen W. Dulles, also saw little or no hope that the people of Cuba will stage a successful revolt against the Castro regime. The McCone-Dulles position is that such revolts are all but impossible in police states.

NY Publishers Ignore Post's Move To Print

NEW YORK (UPI) — Publishers of eight strike-affected metropolitan newspapers closed ranks Friday and resumed joint negotiations with striking printers despite the New York Post's decision to resume publication before the 84-day-old dispute is settled.

Union leaders disagreed about the effect the surprise move by the Post would have on the talks. Publishers said it was "unwise" and that it might prolong the strike by stiffening the union's position.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner called the talks a "last-ditch" effort to end the dispute. He said he would not let them "drift on and on."

Mrs. Dorothy Schiff, the Post publisher, announced late Thursday that she had resigned from the Publishers' Association of New York City and would resume publication Monday under an agreement with strike leader Bertram A. Powers, president of Local 6 of the International Typographical Union ITU.

Powers said he thought the Post's resumption of publication would "speed up settlement of the strike."

Elmer Brown, international president of the ITU, said however that he did not think the Post's decision would make much difference.

"I don't believe it changes anything," he said.

The Post was one of five papers that ceased operations in New York City when the printers went on strike Dec. 8 against four others — the Times, News, Journal-American and World-Telegram & Sun.

Powers repeatedly has offered to allow printers to return to work at the five papers under terms of the old contract until the strike is settled. Besides the Post, the nonstruck papers are the Mirror, Herald Tribune, Long Island Star-Journal and Long Island Press.

The publishers said the Post move "does not alter the firm determination of the other publishers in the association to continue to press for a satisfactory agreement to end the current strike."

Powers has described the main issue of the deadlock as a common expiration date for contracts.

College Bowl Play Begins Sunday At 4

The first in the series of Junior Class "College Bowl" matches will be held Sunday afternoon at four in Howell Hall. A team representing Pi Lambda Phi fraternity will square off against "The All-Campus Challengers" to begin the competition.

The match, which will be based on the "GE College Bowl" seen on CBS-TV, will feature academic competition based on the quick recall of facts on almost every subject.

Dr. John S. Clayton, Associate Professor of Radio, Television, and Motion Pictures at UNC, will act as moderator.

The Pi Lambda Phi team is captained by Pete Goldberg. Other members include Dennis Winnter, Allen Lucks, and John Ulfelder.

Walter Dellinger will act as captain of the challenging team. His teammates are Henry Mayer, Mickey Simmons, and Bob Spearman.

The match will last one hour, with a ten minute intermission. The teams will compete for points by attempting to answer ten-point "tossup" questions, which in turn allows them to answer bonus questions worth a stated number of points.

The series is being sponsored by the Junior Class Scholarship Committee, and is intended to run from now until late spring. Other teams scheduled to compete in the future include Delta Upsilon, the University Party, and the Daily Tar Heel. Dorm teams have been entered from Joyner, Ruffin, and Avery. Awards will be given to the members of the outstanding team at the conclusion of the series.

Nations To Seek New Approaches To Disarmament

GENEVA (UPI) — The United States and the Soviet Union Friday reached agreement in principle on turning to other disarmament issues because of the deadlock in the nuclear test ban talks.

U. S. Chief Delegate William C. Foster said of the nuclear deadlock: "We want to negotiate. Unfortunately, we have found that thus far the Soviet Union does not."

Foster met with Soviet Delegate Semyon K. Tsarapkin for almost two hours to plan the future work of the 17-nation Disarmament Conference. At the end of the talks, their second meeting in 10 days, a U. S. spokesman said they had reached an "understanding." The interpretation was that the Soviets have accepted an American proposal to shift the talks to the field of general disarmament.

Foster appealed for this broadening of the conference work Wednesday when it became clear the nuclear talks were getting nowhere. Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's speech the same day, ruling out further Soviet concessions on test ban inspections, confirmed this view.

Woollard's Tap Gives Wake 56-55 Triumph

Duke Faces Deacons In Big Event Tonight

RALEIGH—Big Bob Woollard's rebound tap in the final 10 seconds of play knocked the UNC Tar Heels out of the ACC tournament last night and set up another Wake Forest-Duke finale.

The Baptist and the Methodists will fight it out at eight o'clock tonight for the right to represent the conference in the NCAA playoff.

Woollard, who only scored seven points for the game, made the score 56-55 with his tap, after which only five seconds remained. That's the way the score stood at the end.

A desperation shot by Billy Cunningham just before the gun rimmed the basket in Reynolds Coliseum, and there weren't any second chances for the Tar Heels.

It had been a game of surprises all the way. Substitutes had played important roles for both teams.

Carolina sophomore Ray Respess played one of the greatest games of his career in leading his team with 15 points. He was forced to relieve some of the pressure on Cunningham, who was harassed by a hard pressing Wake Forest defense and held to only 13 points. Yogi Poteet scored 12 points in closing his UNC career, and Larry Brown, also in his final game, came up with 9.

Wake's star relief man was Ronnie Watts, a high jumping sophomore who scored 16 points and came up with a lot of important rebounds. Frank Christie was second with 14. Dave Wiedeman and Wollard had 7 each, and Richie Carmichael 6.

The same single point which separated the teams at the end was the point which made the difference a the end of the first half.

The opening period led the way for what was to come later by showing that there was little if any difference beween the two rivals.

The Tar Heels scored first on a goal by Cunningham, and then Wake tied the score on Carmichael's basket. Cunningham then hit again for a 4-2 Carolina lead, but Wake then poured in three consecutive baskets, Bob Woollard hitting one and Frank Christie two.

Yogi Poteet rang up two straight to tie the score a 10-10, and Charlie Shaffer made it 12-14. Then Wake Forest decided that it needed more height, and it sent Ronnie Watts into the game.

Watts began scoring right away,

Councils To Select Officers

Carolina's Women's Council and the Women's Residence Council will begin interviewing women students who are interested in serving as president of either group next year. From these interviews, candidates will be selected and the president of each council chosen in the spring campus elections, April 2.

Although many students often combine the activities of these two groups, each serves a decidedly different purpose.

The WRC is a group whose function is to make and enforce the rules under which Carolina co-eds live, whereas CWC exists to promote the general welfare of dormitory women. WRC is made up of dorm presidents, sorority house managers, and a junior from each dorm, while CWC is composed of two activities chairmen and one social chairman from each of the women's dorms.

In addition to its regular duties, such as granting late permission and coordinating regulations within the residences, WRC has branched out in the past year to become a far-reaching organization. It maintains a comprehensive year-long orientation program for freshman women, providing them with a sophomore or junior counselor to assist them with their problems. WRC also has established a travel file for the use of all students. This file, which is located on the second floor of the Y-building, has extensive information on travel and study programs abroad. WRC tries to reach every area which concerns women students.

CWC has worked this year toward providing more activities for the dorm woman. Based on interests indicated by the students, CWC has worked primarily on three new projects this year: an inter-dorm bridge tournament, which is now in progress; the establishment of dorm discussion groups and a semi-formal spring dance for all dormitory women to be held in Woollen Gym on March 23.

These are in addition to the other projects CWC carries out, such as awarding a scholarship cup to the dorm with the highest overall academic average, maintaining a campus guide service and giving a tea in April for the five most outstanding dormitory women.

Diana Teasdale To Coordinate Orientation

Miss Diana Teasdale has been chosen Women's Coordinator for the Campus Orientation Committee, student body president Inman Allen and orientation chairman Archie Davis announced yesterday.

Miss Teasdale, a junior from Palm Beach, Fla., is a member of the Junior Class Cabinet, and the Delta Delta Delta Sorority.

Becky Peeler was named Secretary of the committee, and Bill King was appointed Orientation Treasurer.

Members of the 1963 Orientation Committee were also announced yesterday and include the following:

Carl Adams, Richard Barrett, Tommy Baysden, Mac Boxley, John L. Currie, Whitney Durand, Stu Eizenstat, Jim Holderness, Perry McCarty, Tim Oliver, Phil Smith, Bill Lowrance, Peter Jason, Becky Biggers, Anne Eskridge, Becky Jo Greene, Linda Griffin, Mary Marshall, Gayle Ragland, Anne Ridenhour, Betty Ward, Jeane Yeager.

Science Writer Gives J-School Address Tuesday

"The Government's Problems as the Patron of the Sciences" will be the subject of the fifth lecture in the Journalism Lecture Series to be delivered at 4 p.m., Tuesday, March 5, in 203 Howell Hall.

John W. Finney, science writer in the Washington Bureau of the New York Times, is the lecturer and he will touch on some of the economic, ethical, and political problems raised by the federal government's expanding support of research and development.

A Yale graduate, Mr. Finney was with United Press International in Washington from 1949 until 1957 at which time he joined the Washington Bureau of the Times. He covers atomic energy, space, and science in government.

During World War II, he served as a PT boat officer and as a communications officer.

Mental Health Center To Get C-Chest Aid

The Campus Chest yesterday selected the Mental Retardation Research Program at Camp Butner as a recipient of some of this year's contributions from UNC. This money will go for the purchase of equipment in the diagnosis of mental retardation in children between the ages of six and eighteen.

Camp Butner serves the Piedmont Section of North Carolina and is one of the three mental retardation research centers in the state.

This research program, headed by Dr. A. W. Renuart, is engaged in mental diseases that can be prevented by early diagnosing; besides offering many services to the people of the state, these facilities are available to any physician in the state of North Carolina.

Romanoff And Juliet Tonight's Free Flick

"Romanoff and Juliet", starring John Gavin, Sandra Dee and Peter Ustinov, is tonight's Free Flick. It is an intriguing story centered around an unknown country, an unbelievable international incident and a touching love story. Showings are at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. in Carroll Hall. I. D. cards are required.

Dormitory Spotlight: Mangum

Mangum has been one of UNC's most active dorms this year.

Led by president Jerry Odum, residents have worked their way to a second place standing in the race for the "Best Dormitory" trophy, and have a good chance to repeat as top dorm in intramural participation.

Freshmen predominate in Mangum, and the majority of participants in the Honors Program reside there. An excellent set of quiz files and a good study room are available.

Social life has been good, and the fall semester featured a pizza party and a mixer with Watts Nursing School of Durham. Residents also have a page in the Yack and have elected a dorm sweetheart.

Mangum stands second in intramurals as a result of teams reaching the final in football and handball and the playoffs in basketball. Three teams were fielded in both handball and basketball. "We want to keep the Raab Trophy", commented intramural manager Mike Griffin.

The dorm newspaper is outstanding. It is published twice monthly and is edited by George Newman and John Stewart.

Khrushchev Scored By Red Chinese

TOKYO (UPI) — Communist China, pressing its "hard line" attack on Kremlin policies, Friday accused Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev and other "self-styled Leninists" of talking "drivel on the question of war and peace."

The Peking Communists, spurning recent Soviet peace overtures, sarcastically charged that Khrushchev and his fellow critics of China's tough communism consider themselves to be the sole "reincarnations of Lenin." The Chinese quoted Lenin, the father of Soviet communism, in a renewed effort to convince the Kremlin that war is inevitable unless communism is established throughout the world.

The blast came in the second instalment of a 100,000-word article in the magazine Red Flag.

The first instalment published Thursday charged the Soviet-bloc leaders were "cowardly as mice" for following a policy of peaceful-coexistence with the United States and its Western allies, who, it said, were mere "paper tigers" deserving nothing but contempt.

Group Formed Here For Study In ESP

By HUBERT HAWKINS

Ghosts, mental telepathy and hypnotism will be among the subjects of study of a new campus group for parapsychological investigation.

Tentatively called the UNC Parapsychology Discussion Group, the group held elections Thursday night in an organizational meeting.

Fess Green was chosen coordinator, and will be assisted by four chairmen of the major areas of interest: hypnotism, John Dunn; experimentation, Lorenzo Durham; survival (life after death), Tiffany Pretlow; and education, Bob Underwood.

"I would say our purpose is to explore those areas not covered by the academic sciences," Green said, "although we will use scientific methods wherever possible."

"We've got to have our minds completely open, and while verification will be a part of it, it is not our sole objective," stated Green.

"If we start considering everything bunk until it's proven, then we won't get anywhere," he said.

The group is composed of both skeptical and sympathetic persons, leaders emphasized, and is initiating its study to broaden the world-views and experiences of the student body.

Further hynotic investigation, trips to the Department of Parapsychology labs at Duke, and a visit to UNC by a well-known spiritualist are among the activities planned.

"I hope this campus can give further consideration to paranormal phenomena," Green said, "because they are a more significant expression of our daily experience than most people realize."

Coed Is Campused— Went In Apartment

A junior woman student charged with a violation of the "apartment rule," was found guilty and sentenced to three night's campus in a Woman's Honor Council ruling this week.

The student testified she had entered the apartment of a male student under the assumption that another couple would be present. She remained there for about one hour, according to her testimony.

The case was referred to the council after the woman voluntarily reported the infraction to the Woman's Attorney General. She entered an "indefinite plea" to the charge.

The "apartment rule" states that a girl cannot enter a male's apartment unless two or more couples are present.

Night With Otelia Reset For March 7

"An Evening With Otelia," originally scheduled for last Tuesday, has been resecheduled for Thursday, March 7 at 8:00 in Howell Hall. The initial program was cancelled because of the show.

"We regretted having to cancel the first program," said Neal Jackson, organizer of the program, but we didn't feel that anyone who wanted to hear Mrs. Connor should have to miss her because of the bad weather.

Nevertheless, we will have Otelia here Thursday night, and we hope everybody comes regardless of the weather."

Mrs. Connor's letters have appeared in many North Carolina newspapers including The Daily Tar Heel. A resident o. Chapel Hill, her letters have covered topics ranging from masculine emotional superiority to chewing gum in public. Her opinions have often brought a barrage of letters in return, some against her stand and some for it.

Student Government: Built-In Obsolescence

For seven-and-a-half hours last night Student Legislature fought over revision of the election laws. The legislature had begun debate on the laws the week before.

This is an annual battle. And every year the same picayune points are squabbled over by picayune politicians. The UP wants voting booths in Big Frat Court . . . the SP doesn't . . . block voting . . . fierce screaming and yelling over how many poll tenders there should be . . . and on and on.

As unfortunate as was much of the debate over the election laws, the major point of concern here is student government's overall fascination with governing itself as opposed to governing the campus.

How much of the time and energy of student government is devoted to re-evaluating its own laws, putting and removing checks and balances on itself, clearing away old self-regulations and imposing new ones. In total it is a government by, for and of itself, with little connection to, or effect on the governed.

* * *

This preoccupation with internal self-government proceeds from student government's basic malfunction: it suffers from what the business community would call "built-in obsolescence."

There is neither time nor opportunity, under the present setup and accepted tradition, for student government to accomplish much of real value for the students.

A new student administration is elected in late March or early April. From then until the end of the year committees are being filled, new officers acquainted with their posts, plans formulated, patronage taken care of, and a general orientation accomplished.

Student government does not begin full-scale operation until about a month after classes begin the next September because of the difficulty of getting committees together, because plans and personnel have changed over the summer, etc.

December and January bring Christmas holidays and final examinations and thus no student government.

From the beginning of February through the end of March is that perverse rite known as campus elections, and during that time student government serves no function than to politic and politic and wait.

Result? — student government is in full operation for only two months out of the year. Much of that time is spent re-writing the student constitution, arguing about the "scope" of student government and similar in-group behavior.

As long as student politics operates in such a situation that it is unable by physical handicaps to engage in any worthwhile legislation for the campus, it will—by necessity—turn to within and, Narcissus-like, attempt to beautify itself structurally. . . . If it cannot be a true student government, it then can at least look like one. (JC)

Parapsychology And Duke

Years ago, our attention was drawn to Duke University by various bits of publicity and information which we had encountered about the interesting and controversial work of Dr. J. B. Rhine, Director of the Parapsychology Laboratory which is located on the Duke Campus.

We were delighted to learn that Duke counted among its faculty one of the foremost researchers and writers in the field of parapsychology to be found anywhere. We had, perhaps naively, assumed that Dr. Rhine's Laboratory was a part of the Psychology Department at Duke, and that it was one of the many significant elements of a varied research complex that helped to make Duke one of the better southern universities.

That is why we were somewhat dismayed to hear, yesterday morning on WCHL's "Coffee Cups and Cracker-Barrel," the Director of Public Information from Duke (Mr. Clarence Whitefield) made note of criticism which had been directed at Dr. Rhine's work, and then go on to stress the fact that Dr. Rhine's Lab was not, in fact, actually a part of the school.

The Director made a point of explaining that although Dr. Rhine had full faculty status, "with the same privileges as any other faculty member . . . the Laboratory of Parapsychology is not an integral part of Duke University."

Now certainly, we must recognize the necessity of making all facts clear, and we must now correct our wrong assumption that the Lab was a part of Duke. We see no fault in wanting all facts plain and understood.

But it seemed to strike a sour note to hear the Director of Public Information sound so ready and willing to publicize or stress the aforementioned split. Indeed, it seemed almost as if the split was a welcome one, or at any rate, as if Mr. Whitefield wanted to slide Duke University out from under any of the criticism which had been levelled at the work of Dr. Rhine and his Laboratory.

When a man has attained the respect and status, throughout the world, of Dr. Rhine, it would seem that Duke or any other university would do well to play up the fact that he resides in their community and that he contributes immeasurably to their program, rather than to stress the fact of any administrative or financial split, however "real" it may be. Letters To The Editors

Reasoning Of Theater Pickets

Revenge Not NAACP Goal

To the Editors:

The decision of the Durham-Chapel Hill chapters of the NAACP to picket the Rialto theater has brought protests from the friends of the Rialto theater manager, protests based on friendship and on misinformation as to the purposes of the demonstrations.

Those friends of Miss Dent, who manages the Rialto theater, and also the editors of the Daily Tar Heel who threaten to cross the picket lines protest under the following assumptions:

(1) That the segregation policy of the Rialto is a policy about which the management (Miss Dent) can do nothing;

(2) that the NAACP is undertaking a "personal vendetta" against Miss Dent and the Rialto;

(3) that the NAACP in picketing has no goal in mind other than to close the Rialto; and

(4) that Miss Dent is a recognized foe of segregation and as such deserves some sort of deference.

It should be understood that the existence of segregation anywhere is cause sufficient for the NAACP to act. Those who feel that a picket line is not the best method would have been welcome at meetings of the NAACP to offer their suggestons as to strategy. Among those members who voted unanimously for the demonstration were several friends of the management. They, along with the vast majority of members who had never heard of Miss Dent, decided that a picket line was a perfectly legitimate approach to the problem. In charging them with embarking on a "personal" vengence the editors show the extent of their ignorance of the matter, ignorance that could easily have been resolved by attending NAACP meetings here or in Durham.

Wittingly or unwittingly, the manager accepted a Jim Crow contract despite advice from these same persons who now object to the picket line. The manager nevertheless says that she can "do nothing" about the contract even though attorneys suggest she take the Jim Crow clause to court. If a picket line and subsequent mass arrests, as has happened in many civil rights protests, result in a court ruling the NAACP could not be more pleased, ad either could Miss Dent if she were sincerely interested in desegregating the theater.

Indeed, other segregated theaters are being operated in Durham; some have been the obect of NAACP demonstrations and some have not. One more segregated theater only spreads thinner the resources of the NAACP, and those persons who protest on behalf of the Rialto were strangely inactive when the Center and the Carolina theaters were being picketed. It would appear then that theirs is the "personal" crusade, and not that of the NAACP.

That Miss Dent in the past has been invaluable in fighting segregation is a fact the NAACP and all her friends recognize. If the prospect of a fast dollar forced Miss Dent to compromise her own moral convictions she cannot expect those friends of hers with higher morals to concur.

Among those who seek to break the NAACP boycott will be those lovers of art, as represented by the Rialto, who would regret having the theater closed. Let them remember that among the pickets are lovers of art who would jeopardize that value only when it conflicts with human dignity. Inasmuch as the DTH editors are incensed enough to cross the picket lines, let them have the gumption to do it "as personal friends of the management," and not under the guise of thwarting a "revenge-minded" NAACP.

—Lester Carson

'Just Lucky You're White'

To the Editors,

One comment regarding your editorial on the Rialto Theater situation,

You're just lucky your skin is the right color so that you can cross a picket line at the theater. I hope you enjoy the movie while your fellow human beings are barred at the door.

To the Editors,

I would like to make a few comments about the article by Jeffrey Jones entitled, "Our Proud Southern Heritage."

1) Let me first congratulate you an your 70th birthday; I hope you never make it to 71 with articles such as that one.

2) I'm glad to see you gentlemen o. the Tar Heel staff are so liberal-minded.

3) I'm glad my sphere of friends and acquaintances does not include Jeffrey Jones, for I would hate to be influenced by such narrow-mindedness.

4) Because of views like Mr. Jones', it is no wonder that the South is lagging culturally behind the North.

5) In the past, you have printed many assanine articles; I'm glad to see you're keeping up the good work.

6) Lastly, I'm glad that Spring elections are not far off; maybe then we can get editors with some sense.

U. S. Wants No Agreement?

To the Editors,

The Sanders cartoon published Tuesday, February 26, radically distorts what is at issue in the current test-ban negotiations. Informed circles in this country insist that a test ban can be adequately policed with NO inspections. Last November, the chairman of Harvard's Department of Seismology said in a letter to the New York Times that the United States already possesses devices completely capable of detecting underground explosions. To prove that this is possible, the Soviets have detected every underground blast in the U. S. — even a small five kiloton shot, one-fourth the size of the Hiroshima bomb, fired deep in a bed of salt — material supposed to be ideal for muffling and concealing underground tests. Earlier in 1962, eight acknowledged experts in biology, electrical engineering, and physics from Cornell, M.I.T., and Harvard said in an article in the Saturday Evening Post: ". . . we now know even underground tests cannot be made detection proof. Furthermore, underground tests cannot be used effectively for development of the most important types of weapons."

When I asked a delegate to the recent Model UN General Assembly from the Air Force Academy, whether he was aware of all this, he assured me that he was. He added that the Air Force expects to have even better instruments of its own within the year. According to his professor, however, the United States does not want a test ban because it is working on a "humane" bomb.

Certainly the U. S. negotiating position seems designed to guarantee that no agreement will be reached. The core of Soviet deterrent power is the intercontinental ballistic missile, but this country is estimated to have four times as many. If they are to maintain the balance of power, the Soviets must keep the location of their missiles absolutely secret so that they will be less vulnerable than the U. S.'s larger force. An on-sight inspection would mean that hundreds of square miles must be combed for evidence of underground tests. The Soviets apparently think that a test-ban is worth this compromise of military security. The United States, on the other hand, seems to think that this first step towards ending the arms race is worthwhile only if it effectively destroys Soviet Security. Since even the most conservative of the government's nuclear theorists agrees that the balance of terror provides at best temporary security while we take steps towards disarmament, and since these problems are getting more rather than less complicated, the United States must act now if it is truly interested in working to end the Cold War and the threat of destruction.

. . . Defense Of Field Jackets

To the Editors,

There are a few facts that Mr. McDonald seemed to have overlooked in his recent letter on "Identify with Military?" One fact is that many of the field jackets on campus are not necessarily army surplus. The field jacket is just another example of the extent commercialization has swept the United States.

Secondly, the military has spent a considerable amount of the taxpayer's money on research in the clothing department. The United States boasts of having the best-clothed army in the world. I think it is just simply smart for a person to take advantage of the use of his tax dollar.

The most important oversight was not noticing the purpose for wearing a field jacket. It is that they are the warmest jackets that one can wear, especially if it is equipped with a button-in-lining. One could expect this since the army infantry has worn them in sub-zero weather. They are extremely useful in weather as we have had in Chapel Hill the past few days.

I must admit that I have one objection to them. They weigh a ton, especially when equipped with a liner. Still, I didn't get cold. Did you?

Thanks For Finalists' Work

To the Editor,

Last week some sixty Semi-finalists in the National Merit Scholarship Program were entertained on campus by Student Government and the Faculty Council on Honors. These high school seniors were shown the various opportunities that Carolina has to offer superior students in the hope of attracting them to this University.

In planning the program for the Semi-finalists the efforts of the students and faculty members working on the project were greatly enhanced by the extremely helpful cooperation on the part of the faculty, the Administration, and various agencies of the University. We would like to express our special appreciation to the University Laundry for providing these students with linen and blankets and Lenoir Hall for furnishing their meals while they were in Chapel Hill. Both of these services were provided at no cost to the students or to our committee. Also we would like to thank Dean Perry of the School of Education for the use of Peabody Hall.

New 'Otelia' Writes . . .

To the Editors,

It was a cold, snowy morning, and the wind was blowing slightly. As I walked along, all bundled up, I could not help but take notice of many unsightly heaps of dirty, contaminated snow all along Cameron Street and especially in front of Y-Court. Naturally, I was shocked. "Who is responsible for this?" I thought. But I did not have far to look for an answer. In front of South Building I saw one of the grounds men shoveling ugly brown slush from the walkway on to nice, white clean snow. Well, my surprise turned quickly to anger and I marched right up to him and demanded to know what he thought he wts doing, dumping dirty slush on clean snow like that. The very idea. "Just doin' my job, maam." he replied evasively. "Don't you have a bucket or something to put that stuff in?" I challenged. "If there is anything more repulsive than nose-picking, it is to see a grown man shoveling slushy mud on top of clean snow. And in public! When you clean walkways you should use a bucket, and dump the mud somewhere out of sight." He said he didn't have a bucket. So I gave him one of mine. Idon't know if he used it or not.

Keeping our campus clean and pretty is everybody's job, but since no one seems interested, it looks like I will have to take it on.

'Mockingbird': Good Old Days

Solid is the word for "To Kill a Mockingbird." In fact, it's probably one of the most "solid" motion pictures that Hollywood has been able to put together in what seems like centuries and centuries.

Not that director Robert Mulligan and scenarist Horton Foote had to start from scratch in their fine efforts, because they began with one of the most popular and well-received novels in contemporary novels in contemporary Americana, by Harper Lee. Mulligan and Foote were smart enough to keep it that way. In wisely choosing not to monkey with a good thing to the point of being almost slavishly faithful to the original, the producers have a movie that has already snapped up 8 Academy Award nominations, some of which should be turned into the real thing. Even more significantly, the endless box office lines in Chapel Hill at the Carolina Theater would seem to indicate that a definite market remains for an intelligently crafted, unreservedly sentimental and, if you will, wholesome film.

Much of "Mockingbird's" great charm rests in the irrefutable mysique that it is essentially about children, and very interesting children at that, who live in a seemingly quiet, gentle Alabama town in the desperate days of the early 1930's. Their names are Jem (Phillip Alford) and Scout (Mary Badham) and they have a widowed father whom they brashly refer to as Atticus (Gregory Peck).

Russell Harlan's meticulous camera is successful in grasping the modest atmosphere of the scene; rows of somewhat delapidated one-story white frame houses that border a dusty southern road, along which sputters an occasional creaking sedan or clip-clops and anachronistic horse-and-wagon. It is difficult to question its once-upon-a-time reality.

Just as this sleepy Alabama town lives and breathes, so do Harper Lee's splendid people. Jem and Scout are a pair of marvelously paradoxical children who spend their blue-jeaned days bounding in and out of tree houses, rolling downhill tucked in the rim of rubber tires and always instigating or blundering into some sort of mischief, like trying to find out what that crazy-man Boo Radley looks like, the one tied to his bed in that horrible house.

Naturally their father happens to be a prominent lawyer of great integrity and compassion and thus he unwittingly complicates Jem and Scout's activities. It is Atticus' character that causes him to defend a Negro on a trumped-up charge of raping a white girl hardly worth the exertion. The unavoidable fact that Jem and Scout stick their pug-nosed curiosity into the matter result in some near-tragic consequences.

The picture is saved from a saccharin cuteness by a constant reference to the grimmer realities that temper the otherwise happy life of Jem, Scout and Atticus. And, dammit, despite the snarls of cynics, the movie has a happy ending if only because it deserves a happy ending.

Director Mulligan has elicited from a cast almost completely anonymous except for Peck, uniformly excellent performances. The bespectled Peck is surprisingly effective as the virtuous and tender Atticus, who at times appears too good to be true. It's almost as if Peck had been waiting his entire career for this role to fit his sober abilities; if so, it was well worth the wait. To deservedly compliment Phillip Alford and Mary Badham in their parts as Jem and Scout, one need only comment that they made their characters real by merely being what they are—children.

The talented Elmer Bernstein's musical score is admirably unpretentious and adds much to the film with its intelligence and sensitivity to the dramatic shadowings.

But the real honors in "To Kill a Mockingbird" belong outright to veteran writer Horton Foote and gifted newcomer Robert Mulligan. Foote has drawn his script together with a genuine feeling for Harper Lee's gentle prose and has tidied up the work into a well-paced and always interesting movie. Mulligan has done wonders with his cast and has also helped to preserve the flavor and spirit of a novel that has been successfully transformed into one of the very fine motion pictures of the year.

Blue Devils Roll Over Wolfpack, 82-65

Heyman Held To 19; Mullins Leads With 25

RALEIGH—Powerful Duke roared to an impressive 82-65 victory over out-manned but dogged State olege in the opening game of semi-final action in the ACC tournament last ight.

The heavily favored Blu Devils, who swept udefeated through regular season play in the conference, saw a seven point halftime lead cut to two points in the second period.

They pulled away quickly, though running away from the Pack and boasting their biggest lead, 17 points, at the end of the hard fought contest.

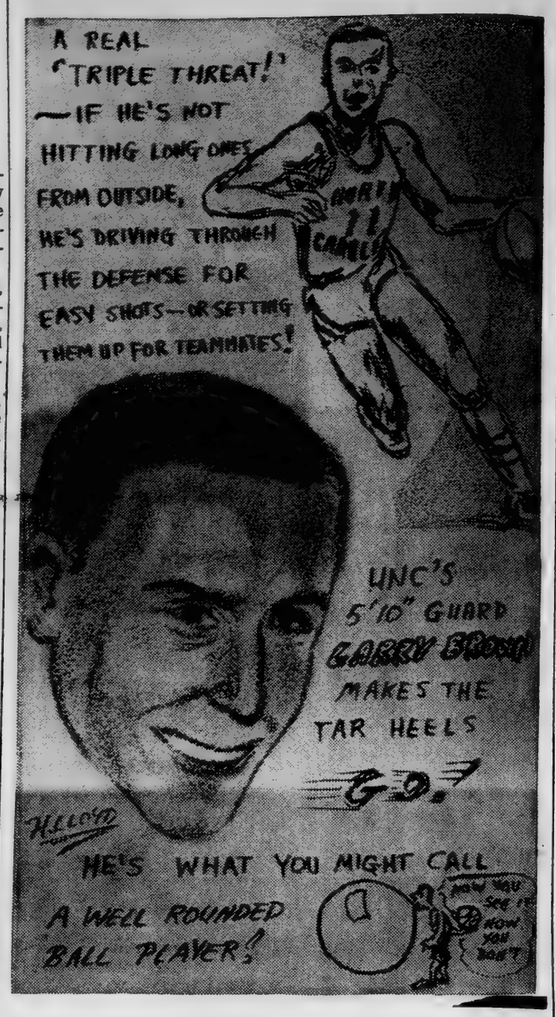
State was successful a few couns.

Successful if you mean that they "stopped" the great Art Heyman. Heyman was limited to 19 points, runing his two game total to 40.

Successful if you mean that they managed to scare the high flying Blue Devils. They threw up a tough zone press, which had pulled their opening game with Clemson from out of the fire.

Successful if you mean that they shot well. The pack hit 65 per cent of their first half shots, and were almost as good in the second half.

But to expect the Raleigh boys to stop the Blue Devils on all counts would have been too much. They couldn't stop red hot Jeff Mulins, who scored 25 points, or surprising Buzzy Harrison, who almost never missed in scoring 18. Jay Buckley owned the backboards and scored 14 points.



As the game got off to a quick start, the teams matched baskets. State jumped into a lead when Jon Speaks completed a three-pointer to make the score 13-10. Duke then went on a scoring binge, making 10 points in a row to get the lead for good.

After Pete Aukesl scored for State, Duke dropped in six in a row and looked as if they were going to run away with the game.

State, however, had some scoring of their own to do. When Duke had a 31-21 lead, the Pack scored six straight. With Duke holding a 50-43 margin in the second half, Pom Sinnock scored on a three-pointer and Rohloff scored two to cut the lead to 50-48.

That only enraged Heyman, Harrison, and Mullins, who began to pour in the points with fury. State had no way to stop them.

The Wolfpack placed three men in double figures. Rohloff had 18, John Key 15, Pom Sinnock 14, Auksel 8, and Speaks 6.

-Deacons Nip UNC-

even if only from the foul line. Not the least of his contribution was the fact that he forced Billy Cunningham to foul him on three occasions.

The Tar Heels tried to outsmart the Deacons by freezing the ball in the middle of the second half.

UNC began its freeze tactics when Cunningham drew his fourth foul of the game with 11:06 remaining in the contest. After Ronnie Watts, Wake's high scorer for the night with 16 points, sank a foul shot, Carolina led 43-42.

Unce held the ball for 2 minutes. Then Brown made a short jump shot and missed. Wake took the rebound, started down court, and threw the ball out of bounds, giving it back to Carolina.

UNC again held the ball until the 7:51 mark when Brown drove into the middle and a Deacon came up with the ball.

Wake took the lead on Dave Wiedeman's jump shot. The UNC freeze continued for two more minutes. The Tar Heels called time, and Brown hit a jump shot, pushing them ahead again. This time it was Christie with the jumper, putting WF ahead again. Normal speed returned to the game, and Wake built up a 52-48 lead.

Then Ray Respess stuffed in a rebound shot, Cunningham stole Wake's inbounds pass with 1:45 remaining in the game for a layup. Christie hit a layup seconds later, then Respess countered with another.

Fouled on the play, Repess put UNC ahead 55-54 with 57 seconds remaining.

Bones McKinney's men promised soon to enter the ACC finals for the fourth straight year, held the ball until 15 seconds were left.

O'Toole Wants Assignment In Opener

TAMPA, Fla. (UPI) — Jimmy O'Toole wants to pitch the Cincinnati Reds' season opener and doesn't care who knows it.

O'Toole was changing into a dry sweat shirt Friday when someone asked whether he would like to face the Pittsburgh Pirates in the Reds' opener.

"You're darn right I would," he answered.

He was reminded that Bob Purkey, on the basis of his 23-5 record last year, would seem to be the most logical candidate.

"I don't think a fellow's record for last year should have anything to do with it," O'Toole said bluntly. "I think it should go to the pitcher who shows he deserves it here at the spring training."

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — (UPI) — The New York Yankees found themselves with a holdout Friday when pitcher Jim Bouton reported from a tour of Army duty without having signed his 1963 contract.

Bouton, a righthander, won seven and lost seven last season, his first in the major leagues.

Clark Leaps To 6-8 --New ACC Record

By LASZLO BIRINYI JR.

Carolina's illustrious list of nationally-recognized performers was increased last weekend at the 75th Annual AAU Indoor Track Championships where Tom Clark finished fourth.

TOMMY CLARK

Clark, a native of Greensboro, cleared 6' 8" for a new school record. Finishing ahead of Clark were the world's greatest high jumpers, Valery Brumel and John Thomas. Brumel, representing the U.S.S.R. won the event with a jump of 7' 2¼". Thomas, of Boston College, finished second. Third place went to Gene Johnson of the Univ. of S. California.

On the basis of his performance at Madison Square Garden, Clark has been extended an invitation to participate in the Pan-American Games which will be held this summer in Sao Paulo, Brazil. Clark has said that he will accept the invitation.

Joe Hilton, Assistant Track Coach, commenting on Clark's performance said, "That's real good. It is quite an accomplishment. Being a native Tar Heel, this is an accomplishment of which the whole state and the University should be proud."

Clark's next meet will be the ACC Indoor Games which will be held in the Tin Can, March 9.

Winston, Teague, ATO Teams Win

Both ATO entries, the Winston Waterboys, and the Teague Blues took championships Thursday night as the curtain was rung down on the 1962-63 intramural basketball season.

The ATO teams dominated the Fraternity Blue and White divisions taking victories from the Kappa Sigs, and Sigma Nu Reds, respectively. Teague was a 41-34 victor over Craige in the Dormitory Blue League, and the Waterboys were superior to the Offs in an all Winston Dorm White final.

The Fraternity Blue championship was marked not by offensive prowess, but rather by a tenacious man-to-man defense by both teams. The final score showed this as a 25-20 victory went to the ATO's.

Kappa Sig led through the first half and halfway through the second period. With the score tied 12-all Bobby Moore hit from the floor to give ATO its first lead. Jim Speight came right back for the Sigs and the score was again tied at 14 apiece.

From then on, however, a combination of free throw accuracy and timely field goals kept ATO in charge and provided the winning margin.

Both teams shot poorly from the floor. ATO could manage but seven of 39 shots for a mere 18 per cent. Kappa Sig did little better in connecting on eight of 34 for 24 per cent. The difference was on the foul line where ATO hit on 11 of 23, and Kappa Sig on only 4 of 15.

Three men took high scoring honors for the winners. Pud Hassell, Sam Simpson, and Roger Penland all accounted for six points. Jim Speight was the Kappa Sig mainstay, taking over for an injured Clayton Burns and scoring 11 points.

In the Dormitory Blue final, Teague succeeded in stopping Craige's Ozie Faison and took a 41-34 win. Faison, who had just come off a 24-point spree in the semi-finals was held to eight points by the Teague defense.

Junior Edge provided the offensive punch for the winners as he has through most of the season. His 18 points were high for the game. John Slack added 11 points and his 71 per cent shooting accuracy was tops for the game.

Bill Brown and Larry Tarleton shared scoring honors for Craige, getting nine points each.

Teague's superior shooting from the floor told the difference in this contest as they hit on 45 per cent of their shots as opposed to Craige's 29 per cent. From the foul line Craige fared better connecting on six of 12 attempts to Teague's five of 22.

The second ATO team of the night to cop top honors did so with a bit more ease than the first. The ATO Buckeyes took a 36-26 win from the Sigma Nu Reds to nail down the Fraternity White crown.

Dick Fleming paced the winners with 14 points and Joe Turner added nine to the cause. Joe Exum was high man for Sigma Nu with 13 points.

The all-Winston Dorm White championship pitted roommate against roommate. The outcome gave a hard earned 30-26 win to the Waterboys.

The first half was a scoring duel between The Waterboys' Jim Siceloff and the Offs's Gary Black. The half time score had both Siceloff and the Waterboys ahead. Siceloff by one (11-10) and the Waterboys by two (19-17).

A tight defense kept Black scoreless in the second half while Siceloff pumped in eight more points for a game high total of 18. Bill Axselle took up the slack for the Offs, scoring seven points.

Dean Long Says He 'Knows Nothing' About Fraternity Connection With Call Girls

Dean of Men William G. Long stated yesterday that "he had no knowledge whatsoever" concerning an alleged connection between some unnamed UNC fraternities and a local "call-girl" operation which was broken up here last summer.

The trial of three Negroes, charged in connection with a prostitution ring that allegedly catered to certain unnamed UNC fraternities, ended Friday in Hillsboro with a hung jury.

A mistrial was declared, and two of the defendants were set free. A third defendant pleaded guilty and received a 12-month suspended sentence and two years probation.

The trial was highlighted by testimony of four State Bureau of Investigation agents who broke up the "call-girl" operation.

In the two-day trial, agent E. B. Pearce testified to a telephone call he had last summer with a man who identified himself as one of the defendants. Pearce quoted the man as saying another member of the ring "had been getting girls to carry to these parties at the fraternity houses on the campus."

Two sisters, Ella Mae, 31, and Lucille Rice, 30, won a directed verdict of not guilty following the mistrial. They had been charged with entering and occupying a building for the purpose of prostitution or assignation.

The third defendant, Robert Lee Quick, 25, charged with procuring and aiding and abetting, pleaded guilty and received the suspende dsentence. It was Quick with whom agent Pearce said he had the telephone conversation.

James Patton of Durham, attorney for the defendants, said, "By agreement, we disposed of the cases . . . to obviate another trial later on." (With the first trial ending with a hung jury, the state could have asked for another trial.)

A fourth member of the ring, Walter Dukes, 27, allegedly was the "headman" of the operation. Dukes pleaded guilty last summer in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court and was given given a 12-month suspended sentence and three years probation.

Although they denied working as "undercover" men, the SBI agents admitted setting up a rendezvous house, using at least one phony name and wearing casual, sports clothes. The arrests were made at 105 Plant St. in Chapel Hill—a house rented by local police authorities—after arrangements for the girls had been made by telephone.

Sino-Soviet Rift Still Is Widening

LONDON (UPI) — Communist China has withdrawn its name from the World Marxist Review in the first open break with the Moscow-led international Communist movement, authoritative sources said Saturday.

The World Marxist Review, also known as "problems of peace and socialism," is the official Communist ideological organ and is a remnant of the former cominform, the ideological platform of international communism. It is printed in Prague and serves as a forum for Communist issues inside and outside the Red bloc.

The break came unannounced recently as part of the sharpening Sino-Soviet conflict. Confirmation came from the Communist organ itself which has quietly dropped China's name. In the past Red China has always been listed as No. 2 immediately after the Soviet Union in the list of sponsoring countries.

Names Dropped

The last two issues have dropped China from the list without any reference or explanation. The break thus appears to have occurred in November or December.

High Communist sources in London, pointing out the subtle move, said it meant Red China has withdrawn from the Moscow-led Communist international platform, thus signifying openly to the Communist world she is going it alone.

The Cominform was set up at the height of the cold war to align international communism under Russian leadership and to streamlie ideology and information. It began publication of a regular organ dealing with "problems of peace and socialism." Seat of the publication was Bucharest. It was later moved to Prague.

After the Cominform petered out, the publication was rechristened "World Marxist Review" and continued to be issued in Prague with contributions from Communist leaders worldwide. The latest edition boasts that copies are printed in 25 languages. Chinese is no longer one of the languages.

Leading Article

The leading article of the current issue takes sharply to task the Albanians—a synonym for Red China in the current quarrel between the Kremlin and Peking.

Communist sources in London who are well qualified to assess the Sino-Soviet conflict hold that the rift is now beyond repair. At best a temporary truce is considered feasible.

Red China has set terms for reconciliation with Russia which they said Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev cannot accept. Peking demanded earlier this week an apology from Khrushchev that would be tantamount to public admission that his de-Stalinisation course has been wrong all along.

Peking was expected to step up its campaign in the weeks to come throughout the entire Red camp and, above all to seek support in Southeast Asia and Latin America where Communists might be more susceptible to the tough Chinese line than to the Kremlin's "peaceful co-existence" strategy.

Boyd Collection Is Donated To Library

Southern Historical Collection has received from Mrs. James Boyd of Southern Pines a valuable collection of the correspondence and some of the unpublished writings of James Boyd, American novelist and short story writer who died in 1944. The Boyd acquisition was announced by James Patton, director of the Southern Historical Collection.

Boyd's correspondence contains letters from a wide range of literary figures, including Robert Bridges, Sherwood Anderson, Thomas Wolfe, John Galsworthy, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Lawrence Stallings, Louis Bromfield, Archibad MacLeish, Sinclair Lewis, and John Steinbeck. Some of these letters have to do with literary and patriotic associations, but many are significant in what they tell of their writers. The letters from Maxwell Perkins show Boyd at work with his editor. The more than thirty letters from John W. Thomason Jr., many containing illustrations by Thomason, are particularly illuminating. "All in all," says Dr. C. Hugh Holman of the University's English Department, "the Boyd collection is a significant increase in the library's primary literary holdings."

The Library also has an extensive collection of James Boyd's published works, according to William S. Powell, Librarian of the North Carolina Collection which administers these materials. These include first and later editions of Boyd's novels which had their settings in North Carolina or which were written after he moved to the state. His short stories as they first appeared in such popular magazines of the day as Scribner's, Harper's, and Century, have been extracted and bound.

Boyd's less well known contributions in the form of essays and articles on history and current events have also been preserved. Studies of the author's life and works, including one master's thesis, are also available in the North Carolina Collection. An extensive file of mounted newspaper clippings dating from the early 1920's provides excellent biographical information about Boyd as his literary accomplishments were reported in the press.

20 Delegates From UNC Are Needed For Meet

Senator William Proxmire (D.-Wisc.) will speak to students from 40 colleges and universities at the "Focus" conference at Randolph-Macon Woman's College March 8, 9, and 10.

"The Image of America at Home and Abroad" is the topic of the assembly.

UNC will send a delegation of 20 students. No experience in student government is necessary. Interviews will be in the Student Government offices in G.M. Monday and Tuesday afternoon.

Other speakers include: Dr. Russell Kirk, author of "The Conservative Mind;" James B. Carey, president of the International Union of Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers; and Phillip Talbott, past-president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

The topic of the "Image at Home" will be handled by speakers who are leaders in the fields of Labor, Business, and Government.

The "Image Abroad" will be discussed by a panel of professors from Scotland, Argentina, Poland, and India. "The Importance of the Image in the United Nations" is the topic for a speech by the U.S. Deputy Permanent Representative to the U.N., Charles Woodruff Yost.

America's unfavorable images abroad will be discussed by Pedro San Juan, the Deputy to the Chief of Protocol, U.S. Department of State.

Entertainment for the delegates will be provided Saturday night by a program on "The Image through Music."

Jr. Science Fair Is Slated For March 14-16

The 1963 version of a Tar Heel junior science and humanities symposium that mushroomed into a nation-wide program will be held at UNC March 14-16.

It will be the sixth annual edition of the unique event, undertaken in 1958 on the campuses of UNC, N. C. State and Duke University to stir the interest of high school students in scientific fields

From that meager beginning, underwritten by the U. S. Army, the symposium has spread to 20 states and will be climaxed this year by a national symposium at West Point, N. Y.

In North Carolina, this year's program is expected to attract 155 outstanding students and about 50 teachers or advisors from virtually all the State's 100 counties.

Highlights of the symposium is the presentation by six students, selected from applicants throughout the state, of theoretical scientific papers before the entire assembly of delegates and symposium lecturers.

The six student lecturers have not yet been announced. Coordinators of the program say these selections will be of interest to all high school students in the state.

Visiting lecturers and noted scientists from UNC and private research centers will also appear on the program.

George E. Moore, assistant director of the Junior Science and Humanities Symposia Program of the U. S. Army Research Office, Durham, said delegates will be headquartered at the Jack Tar Hotel in Durham.

Except for the opening dinner in the hotel ballroom, all activities during the symposium will be centered on the UNC campus or at the nearby Research Triangle, where laboratory units are scheduled Friday afternoon.

Since its first year, the popular symposium has undergone revision so that it is held on only one of the three campuses—UNC, Duke, and State—each year. Too, private industry, attracted by its goals, has stepped in to provide money and technical assistance.

Word of the initial Tar Heel symposium had spread to Temple University by 1960, and this year 17 symposia that will attract students from 20 states are planned.

Dr. Edward Teller, prominent nuclear physicist and father of the hydrogen bomb, was keynote speaker at the initial symposium here and is also scheduled as keynoter for the first national symposium at West Point in April.

Soviet Force In Cuba Reported Withdrawing

But Defense Dept. Refuses To Say If Report True

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Defense Department maintained silence Saturday in the face of continuing reports that large-scale withdrawal of Soviet troops from Cuba has already begun.

The reports were that 2,000 or more Russian combat troops had left the island, the first aboard the luxury liner Baltika which sailed from Havana Thursday. The reports said another 6,000 were expected to be withdrawn in the next few weeks.

The Pentagon, however, decided to stand on Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara's statement two days ago that it is "too early" for a definite report on the withdrawal.

"The President has stated that the Soviet government has indicated that within the next few weeks—by the middle of March, approximately — they anticipated removing from the island of Cuba several thousand military personnel," McNamara said. "But it is much too early to report in any way upon these movements."

The 8,000 expected to be withdrawn are members of four combat units, of 2,000 men each, which apparently were sent to guard Soviet missile bases which were dismantled last fall.

Their removal would leave about 9,000 Soviet military experts who are not in organized units but are in Cuba supposedly to train Cuban soldiers in the use of advanced weapons, such as the "Sam" anti-aircraft missile.

Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev recently promised to withdraw "several thousand" troops after strong overtures from the President.

Unofficial sources at the Pentagon were inclined to accept the reports that the withdrawal had begun. They pointed out that in removing offensive missiles and bombers from Cuba, the Russians always operated well in advance of the deadline set by Khrushchev.

The White House had no comment on the reports. Asked if they were true, acting press secretary Andrew T. Hatcher said, "I don't know."

Student Sues Police For $10,000 Injury

Ronald Randall, a University senior from Havelock, has filed suit against the Town of Chapel Hill and Chapel Hill police officers Howard Pendergraph and George Penny for $10,000 personal injury damages.

Mr. Randall was injured in a mob fight in Kenan Stadium immediately following the UNC-State football game last fall.

Officers Pendergraph and Penny were served notice of the suit in Hillsboro Thursday. Mayor Sandy McClamroch, representing the Town, has not yet been served notice of the suit. The Town and the officers have thirty days in which to answer the suit.

The Town carries liability insurance for cases such as this with Collier Cobb & Associates.

John Manning, attorney for Mr. Randall, said the allegations in the suit were that Mr. Randell was among the crowd fighting following the football game, and that the two officers named picked him up and threw him over the fence.

He was taken to Memorial Hospital, Mr. Manning said, where he remained for three days being treated for a fractured jaw and fractured sinuses. Mr. Manning said Mr. Randall's jaw had to be wired together, and that Mr. Randell has been permanently and visibly disfigured by the injuries. Mr. Manning added that Mr. Randall's jaw no longer has a proper bite, and that he has suffered continuous pain, loss of sleep, adversely affected school work, shock, humiliation, and a damaged reputation.

Mr. Manning said the suit claims Mr. Randall was "thrown" over a wire fence on the Kenan Stadium playing field, far enough to hit wooden bleachers on his head. The suit claims the officers were negligent and used excessive force.

"I have plenty of witnesses," said Mr. Manning, "including highly regarded University officials who are highly indignant about the whole thing."

Town Manager Robert Peck said that Town Attorney J. Q. LeGrand and Collier Cobb would be officially notified of the suit as soon as Mr. McClamroch is served. Mr. McClamroch is named in the suit only as the Mayor, representing the Town.

The $10,000 claimed is only for injuries sustained. No punitive damages are asked.

Balloon Probes Planet Mars

PALESTINE, Texas (UPI)—Instruments raised by a giant balloon from Texas to the fringe of space and brought to earth in Tennessee Saturday gave man his first unrestricted look at Mars and possibly an answer to the question of life on the plnaet.

Elated scientists, successful after 15 attempts to launch the unmanned tandem balloon and its 6,300-pound payload, said they may have a preliminary report within two days on whether the Martian atmosphere can support life.

The balloon was launched Friday from Palestine and came to earth this morning near Pulaski, Tenn., with its intrument package and 36-inch telescope. Scientists in Pulaski said they were "tickled pink" by the 12-hour flight.

Dr. Marvin Schwarzchild, director of Project Stratosphere II examined the balloon's payload at Pulaski and said the blue box containing a recording tape was undamaged.

"The blue box is in perfect condition and this is what we are most interested in," he said. "How wonderful it came down here."

The findings may show whether water vapor, carbon dioxide and possibly other gases that lend themselves to support of life forms are in the Martial atmosphere.

It will be two or three months, however, before scientists are able to decipher all the details of the study. The experiment was jointly sponsored by Princeton University and the University of California but the U.S. government put up the $5 million so far spent on it.

The Russians have a space probe en route to Mars but it will not be in position to report anything before early summer. The Stratosphere II project balloon may have gotten the same information months earlier.

The balloon—actually two balloons separated by a kind of girdle—was launched from Palestine about 5 p.m. Friday. Drifting northeast through the night, it reached a maximum altitude of 77,000 feet, above 96 per cent of the earth's atmosphere.

Toward dawn, it was brought down to 44,000 feet, where the instruments and telescope were cut loose by remote control and drifted to earth on a parachute.

The instruments landed across a fence 10 miles north of Pulaski, Tenn. William Pierce, a mechanic, telephoned Sheriff Jack Cox. The sheriff and state trooper Homer Smith guarded them until scientists from Huntsville, Ala., arrived.

The scientists pronounced the instruments and telescope in perfect condition. The plastic balloon came down a few minutes later 14 miles west of Pulaski. It was in good condition but will not be used again to lift instruments into space.

The instrument package included a telescope, detecting devices, telemetry, trackinb, and recording equipment and a balometer.

Tiny Instrument

The balometer, an instrument developed by Texas Instruments, Inc., weighs less than a grain of rice. But it can detect radiation signals as small as one trillionth of a watt.

As the balloon ascended, scientists fixed its instrument on the moon. They are comparatively well acquainted with the moon and needed the readings from it to give a comparison with readings from Mars.

When Bandmasters Meet Here Friday

9 Conductors To Lead Ensemble

Nine nationally - known guest conductors will direct the UNC Symphonic Wind Ensemble in a concert in Hill Hall Friday night at 8 p.m., as a part of the 1963 national convention of the American Bandmasters Association. The public is invited; however, tickets, which are free of charge, must be obtained from the Department of Music office in Hill Hall.

The program will include many works written expressly for the wind band as well as some significant transcriptions. Original works by Percy Aldridge Grainger, Gordon Jacob, William Schuman, Houston Bright, Charles Gross, Karl Teike, and Herbert W. Fred, and transcriptions of works by Eric Coates and Edward Elgar will be performed.

Percy Grainger, who was an honorary member of the American Bandmasters Association and one of the most significant exponents of the wind band, will be represented by his Lincolnshire Posy, a masterpiece of band sonority, in which all of his accumulated skill in writing for wind instruments is fully exploited. The British composer, Gordon Jacob, has contributed an outstanding overture for band, Flag of Stars. It was written "as a gesture from an inhabitant of the Old World to those of the New." It is constructed solidly on classical formal lines, but in the musical language of the twentieth century.

William Schuman, president of Lincoln Center in New York City, displays his ingenious craft for composing for wind instruments in his most recent compositions for band, the prelude, When Jesus Wept, and the overture, Chester, which are based on tunes of the same names by the early American composer William Billings (1746-1800) Houston Bright's Prelude and Fugue in F Minor is a happy combination of twentieth century and traditional harmonic techniques. The sometimes harshly dissonant prelude is contrasted with the academically correct fugue couched in harmony of the common practice period.

A work of lighter character on the program is one by the conductor of the Wind Ensemble, Herbert W. Fred. Take "Spain" and "Mexico," overlap the two names slightly, and you will produce the title to the composition written in 1947 by Dr. Fred. Take rythms, harmonies, idiomatic themes of these countries, place them together in the same composition and you obtain the same musical scheme employed in Spaixico. Also on the program will be the just published arrangement by Dr. Fred of the old German military march Alte Kameraden by Karl Teike.

Of particular interest will be the premiere performance of Earl Slocum's recently completed transcription for band of Edward Elgar's Enigma Variations. Dr. Slocum. President of the American Bandmasters Association and Director Emeritus of UNC Bands, has selected six of the original thirteen variations as most suited for performance by the wind band.

The Symphonic Wind Ensemble of hte University of North Carolina, above, will give a concert Friday, March 8, at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall of Music, with nine guest conductors attending the American Bandmasters Association 1963 covention.

Herbert Fred conductor of the UNC Band, is director of the Ensemble. Earl Slocum, director of the University Symphony Orchestra, also will be a guest conductor.

Prof. Slocum is President of the American Bandmasters Association.

HILLEL OFFICERS

David Sheps was recently elected president of the Hillel Foundation. Other officers elected include Peter Spies and Bill Feingold—vice presidents: Dianne Davidson—secretary; and Barry Hyman—treasurer.

Hillel is planning to sponsor discussion meetings in conjunction with the YMCA, various Sunday evening cultural events and a Spring Sabbath lecture series.

Dormitory Spotlight: Stacy

(This is the eleventh in a series of articles on UNC dorms. It is sponsored jointly by the dorm presidents and the Communications Committee).

Good grades and intramural teams were the highlights of the fall semester for Stacy dorm.

"Everything's been running smoothly," said dorm president Ed Deaton.

The dorm has a page in the annual with a group picture of the members and a crest.

New jerseys have been bought for the intramural teams, and a new top was put on the dorm ping pong table.

Under intramural manager John Williams, Stacy teams have had active participation this year. The basketball team fared very well.

On the social calendar, a pizza party is planned for this spring.

Chamber Music Is Rescheduled

"An Evening of Chamber Music," sponsored by the UNC Music Department Tuesday Evening Series, has been rescheduled for this Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall.

Edgar Alden, Dorothy Alden, Mary Gray Clarke, and Wilton Mason will perform Corelli's Sonata da Camera a Tre in D Major, Opus 4, No. 4; Mendelssohn's Trio in D Minor for violin, 'cello, and piano, Opus 49; Martinu's Three Madrigals for violin and viola; and Mozart's Piano Quartet in G Minor, K. 468. Admission is free.

Bulgarian 'Information'

Propaganda is a powerful weapon in the arsenal of modern war. It can be used to uphold a "big lie" or a great truth; to insidiously tear down, item-by-item, or build up a false impression by slow and gradual work. Propaganda has come to be practiced as a fine art in the Soviet bloc, with a great deal more Communist money and personnel going into it than in any Western country.

Bulgarian reaction to the recent protests and demonstrations of African students in that country, was particularly interesting. A group of Africans studying in Bulgarian universities claimed the existence of racial discrimination in the East European Red satellite, in which "the practice of racial discrimination has been forbidden by law." Some of the students demanded visas after they were denied their request to form their own political group in Bulgaria; several Africans left for home—the incident received major coverage in the United States.

In a standard letter received here from the Bulgarian legation, the charges were answered in these terms: "this slanderous campaign. . . . The great majority of African students in Bulgaria definitely oppose their demand. . . . The competent Bulgarian authorities elucidated the group of students that the formation of a political students' organization will be in contradiction with the existing Bulgarian laws . . .

". .. In flagrant opposition to the will of the great majority of African students, and in spite of the admonitions of the Militia. . . . In connection with this violation of public order and misuse of the hospitality rendered to them, 7 students were obliged to leave Bulgaria. . . .

"Part of the students who had demanded exit visas, apologized on February 17 for their irrational behavior, appealing to the Bulgarian Government to allow them to remain in Bulgaria and continue their higher education . . .

"The aim of this erroneous information is obvious—to defame a socialist country . . ."

And so goes the world. (JC)

Court & Free Assembly

The Supreme Court's overturning this week of convictions of 187 Negro anti-segregation demonstrators is a welcome decision. It indicates the possibility of similar rulings in Negro sit-in and Freedom Ride convictions.

The Negroes had been convicted of breach of the peace after a demonstration on the South Carolina State Capitol grounds, while the State Senate was in session.

By an 8-1 majority the Court said, "In arresting, convicting and punishing the petitioners (the demonstrators) under the circumstances disclosed by this record, South Carolina infringed the petitioners' constitutionally protected rights of free speech, free assembly and freedom to petition for redress of their grievances."

The trespass and breach-of-peace convictions of Negroes in sit-ins in North Carolina and other Southern states are still pending before the Court. These cases are complicated by the factor of private property rights, in addition to the considerations of right-of-protest.

We hope the Court will continue its past record of upholding the full Constitutional right of peaceful protest and free assembly; and broaden its legal base to include sit-ins in "privately-owned" establishments, which in catering to the public become "public" and within the public domain. (JC)

Southern 'Reaction'

One of the few southern "reactions" that is clearly enlightened and valuable will be climaxed next week-end at Randolph-Macon Woman's College. As a result of stimulus from Yale's "Challenge" symposium and Princeton's "Response" program, Randolph-Macon is presenting some of the most outstanding speakers to gather at a southern college in years.

The program is called "Focus" and the topic is "The Image of America at Home and Abroad." Twenty UNC students will be selected to go after interviews Monday and Tuesday afternoon. The agenda for the symposium indicates that a very meaningful and stimulating program has been planned, and it should be an outstanding opportunity for those who attend.

Religion In The East German Zone

GOETTINGEN, Germany — On Sunday morning I left the hotel early, rode the West Berlin subway to the last station before the wall. In fifteen minutes I had passed through Checkpoint Charlie, and I was in the Soviet zone.

If you go into East Berlin on Sunday morning you can stand in the middle of town and not see a single person. It's as if the city were evacuated. A million inhabitants, and not one to be seen. Today it was extremely cold and windy outside; perhaps that explains the emptiness.

I wanted to attend a church service. Since my map indicated more than a hunured churches in the eastern sector I didn't worry about finding a service. I found several churches, but on closer inspection I found that most of them were ruins. Usually the doors were barred, or if they had been steel doors they were removed for more useful purposes.

Finally I found a church that was open. It was spacious inside, very ornately decorated, and old. It was poorly heated. Abount a hundred people sat before the minister, who was delivering a sermon. I sat down quietly in the last occupied pew. A man handed me a hymn book.

I examined the small congregation. Mostly old people. Some in their twenties or thirties. No children.

I looked again.

No children.

I turned my attention to the sermon. The minister was quoting some statistics defining a decline in church membership over the past 25 years. He gave no reason for the decline, only mentioning that it was a serious problem. The reason was obvious. With a plea for the parents to encourage the younger people to church, he ended the sermon.

The organ played; a hymn was sung as some useless ten pfennig pieces klunked into the collection plate; the congregation dispersed. Outside the only sound was the cold winter wind whistling across Marx-Engels Platz.

It was the saddest church service I've ever attended. Not just because of the grave atmsophere, but because it indicated the grim fate of an institution which has tried to dispute the ideology of the communist government of East Germany. The dispute of the Christian church in East Germany is the inevitable result of a conflict in ideologies which the communists will not tolerate. It is not a conflict between good guys and bad guys, militarists and pacifists, or right and wrong. Rather it is a conflict between two highly philosophical ideologists which will always be incompatible.

Whereas the Christian religion is based on the concept of a spiritual God quite apart from man, a fundamental precept of marxism is that there is no God. Marxists, placing all their faith in the capabilities of man, say that just as science has rid nature of its mystery, it has now only to rid human society of its mystery to remove the basis of religion. All mystery, they believe, can be revealed by the efforts of man.

On the other hand Christians believe that there is a divine mystery which cannot be revealed other than as a gift form God. Plainly, the Christian assertion implies that the marxist doctrine is false. So the church, merely by preaching its own doctrine, has become an opponent of communist doctrine.

According to communist philosophy religion is a transition in the development of mankind which compensates for man's lack of scientific development. Thus as the world increases in scientific knowledge the role of religion will eventually vanish.

Even though communists are certain about the inevitable decline and eventual fall of religion, they are taking no chances. They want to destroy the church in East Germany as quickly and efficiently as possible. They know they can't annihilate it with a single blow, such as suddenly making religious filiation illegal. This would be too dangerous. The church is too deeply rooted in the hearts and minds of the East German people.

Instead they are attempting to whittle away the foundations of the church. Step by step they are preventing contacts between churches within and without the Soviet zone, between hierarchies and clergy, between clergy and laymen. They are educating a godless generation of young people, and making religious belief detrimental to those who want material success for themselves and their families.

Like the National Socialist regime of 1933-45, they have attempted to estrange the young people from the church. Atheism is taught in the schools; religion is mocked. I asked a student in East Berlin why children didn't go to the churches. "Of course they don't go," he smiled, "they would be ridiculed by the others."

There is a small theological faculty in East Berlin's famous Humbolt University. Some students even major in theology, but the number permitted to do so is small. Schooled in communist ideology for twelve years before they reach the university, most students who go to theology lectures do so merely out of curiosity, rarely in search of religious meaning.

The attempt to subvert the church in the Soviet zone of Germany is indeed having its effects, especially among the young people. The workers, the doctors, the scholars of tomorrow are becoming less and less dissatisfied with the doctrines of the communist dictatorship. They know nothing else, for the regime has suppressed practically all contact with the non-communist outside world.

Whether such suppression is right or not is difficult to judge, but one thing is certain. The freedom of the individual to actively profess his beliefs is much less on that side of the wall than on this.

On the other hand, in judging and understanding the communists we are concerned with something much more profound than merely western values of freedom. The heart of the matter lites in the question of how far the state may go in curtailing human liberties to promote the cause which it defines as right. Who is to say how far it may go? Not the East Germans.

Letters To The Editors

Editor: Fool Or Blindman

To the Editor,

Sir, you have mentioned recently your agreement with the proposal in the State Legislature to extend the franchise to eighteen-year-olds. You are either a blindman or a fool.

You say that service in the Armed Forces qualifies a youth to vote. Hogwash. Would you have them elect their officers? Are they responsible at age eighteen to determine leadship?

By paying taxes, they ought to have a voice in legislation, or so would follow from your article. But what relationship does one thing have to the other? Where is the maturity to reflect upon policy, or does that come by filling out Form 1040?

Those under twenty-one have no more maturity than an elementary school child has athletic prowess. An eighteen-year-old is fresh and warm from high school, and we all know how well prepared that is. Even a twenty-year-old, in the main, is merely awaiting, with an unquenchable thirst, to be twenty-one.

The college age population is no more qualified to vote than the high school population. College doesn't MAKE anyone more qualified to vote intelligently. It should, and its failure is not its fault. It is the fault of the empty-headed mobiles filling the seats, wanting nothing more than the degree or proof of enrollment. We spend our time copying book reports as our only intellectual pursuit. All the platitudes in the world won't change the nature of the college material from laxity and indifference.

Indifference and ignorance yes, regardless of the Young Democrats Club, the Young Rpublican Club, etc., ad infinitum, ad nauseum. For every well-informed, intelligent person you exhibit, I'll produce ten fools. Liberal or conservative, the college youth is more excited by labels and forms than content and intellect.

In the long run, somewhere, maturity and THOUGHT appears. I can't say where, for I'm still looking myself, but it is not apparent in the near future, or in any place recognizable.

Disarmament Needs Discussion

To the Editors.

I found the report on Feb. 20 of the Norman Thomas speech rather incomplete in that his second main point was not adequately covered.

Mr. Thomas felt very strongly that there should be much more serious discussion of alternatives to what he called the garrison state. He felt that the only good alternative lies in universal disarmament so that each nation has no more weapons than is needed for internal police action. All disputes between nations should be settled by international law. This implies that the world organization would have enough armaments under its control to be able to enforce the decisions of the world court.

This is essentially the plan in our government's latest proposal of April 18, 1962 to the Geneva disarmament conference. I support this plan and I feel it needs much more discussion by citizens than it has had so far.

To me th emost urgent problem facing us is to find a just way of removing the danger of extinction by nuclear war. The longer a solution is delayed the greater the danger becomes.

It is interesting to note that an organization working for a limited World Government, the United World Federalists, was founded in North Carolina.

GLAD RAGS

The hounds of spring are on winter's traces. Soon buds the crocus, soon trills the giant condor, soon come the new spring fashions to adorn our lissome limbs.

And what will the American college student wear this spring? Gather round, you rascals, and light a Marlboro Cigarette and enjoy that fine mellow tobacco, that pure white filter, and possess your souls in sweet content, and listen.

As everyone knows, campus fashions have always been casual. This spring, however, they have gone beyond being merely casual: they have become makeshift.

The object is to look madly improvised, gaily spur-of-the-moment! For example, why don't you girls try wearing a peasant skirt with a dinner jacket? Or matador pants with a bridal veil? Or Bermuda shorts with bronze breastplates? Be rakish! Be impromptu! Be devil-take-the-hindmost!

And, men, you be the same. Try an opera cape with sweat pants. Or a letter-sweater with kilts. Or a strait jacket with hip boots. Be bold! Be daring! Be a tourist attraction!

But all is not innovation in college fashions this spring. In fact, one of the highlights of the season turns time backward in its flight. I refer, of course, to the comeback of the powdered wig.

This charming accoutrement, too long neglected, has already caught on with in undergrads everywhere. On hundreds of campuses the bossa nova is giving way to the minuet, and patriotic undergraduates are dumping British tea into the nearest harbor. This, as you may imagine, does not sit well with King George III who, according to reliable reports, has been stamping his foot and uttering curses not fit to reproduce in this family newspaper. For that matter, a lot of our own people are steamed up too, and there has even been some talk about the American colonies declaring their independence of England. But I hardly think it will come to that. I mean, how can we break with the mother country when we are dependent on her for so many things—linsey-woolsey, Minié balls, taper snuffers, and like that? She, on the other hand, relies on us for turkeys, Marlboro Cigarettes, and Route 66. So I say, if Molly Pitcher and those other Radcliffe hotheads will calm down, and if gentlemen will cry "Peace! Peace!" we may yet find an amicable solution to our differences. But let not our British cousins mistake this willingness to negotiate for weakness. If fight we must, then fight we will! Paul Revere is saddled up, the rude bridge arches the flood, and the ROTC is armed!

But I digress. We were smoking Marlboro Cigarettes—O, splendid cigarette! O, good golden tobaccos! O, pristine pure white filter! O, fresh! O, tasty! O, soft pack! O, flip top box! O, get some!—we were, I say, smoking Marlboros and talking about spring fashions.

Let us turn now to the season's most striking new feature—pneumatic underdrawers. These inflatable garments make every chair an easy chair. Think how welcome they will be when you sit through a long lecture! They are not, however, without certain dangers. Last week, for example, Rimbaud Sigafoos, a sophomore at the University of Pittsburgh, fell out of a 96th story window in the Tower of Learning. Thanks to his pneumatic underdrawers, he suffered no injury when he struck the sidewalk, but the poor fellow is still bouncing—his seventh consecutive day—and it is feared that he will starve to death.

B'nai B'rith Receives Donation Of Jewish Art

A gift of rare Jewish paintings and art objects has been received by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at UNC from an art benefactor in Chicago.

Maurice Spertus of Chicago presented the items as a permanent gift, which will be on public display at the Hillel House here every week.

Rabbi Joseph H. Levine said eight paintings and art objects comprise the collection. They will be on display to the public from 1 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. every weekday, beginning March 10, he said.

Among the paintings are an original oil of a Jewish scholar and a colored lithograph that is a head study of King Asa.

Among the other objects is a case depicting high holiday objects used in ceremonial prayers and a bronze of Shalom Aleichem, Jewish writer whose 100th birthday was celebrated last year.

Now a clean-filling, smooth-writing, money-saving Parker cartridge pen...only $3.95
New PARKER ARROW

This pen can save you money on cartridges. Parker Super Quink cartridges are BIGGER and last longer (each is good for 8 or 9 thousand words). But, even if you didn't save a dime, this pen would be worth the extra price. It's a Parker.
And only Parker gives you a solid 14K gold point dipped with plathenium—one of the hardest, smoothest alloys ever developed. It should last you for years no matter how much you use it.
The pen won't leak the way cheap ones do. It has a built-in safety reservoir, and meets most of the tough specifications we set for our $10 pens.
If you have trouble saying it, say it with a Parker. If you're a little shy and have difficulty saying "I love you" or even "I like you very much"—say it with a Parker.
The new Parker Arrow makes a beautifully expressive gift and looks as if you paid a small fortune for it.
The new Parker Arrow comes in black, dark blue, light blue, light gray, and bright red, with a choice of four instantly replaceable solid 14K gold points. Includes five free Super Quink cartridges with pen-protecting Solv-X (49¢ value).

CONCENTRATION—The Carolina coaching staff forms a picture of complete concentration during the final seconds of the UNC-Wake Forest game in the semi-finals of the ACC Tournament Friday. Only moments later, Deacon Bob Woollard tapped in a score for Wake, giving them the game, 56-55.

Powerful Duke Takes Atlantic Coast Crown

BY CURRY KIRPATRICK

RALEIGH — Proud and mighty Duke put its official signature on the Atlantic Coast Conference Championship here last night.

The powerful Blue Devils won the coveted title by defeating a game but outmanned Wake Forest in the final showdown, 68-57.

The win was Duke's fourth over the Deacons this season and a fitting climax to the finest campaign enjoyed by an ACC team since 1957 and North Carolina.

Duke now, as befits its great ability, will carry the conference colors in the prestigious march toward NCAA fame and glory. The Blue Dukes enter the regional playoff in College Park, Md., on Friday, March 15, against the winner of the NYU-Pittsburgh game

Wake Forest, beaten soundly by the same Duke team three times before this season, didn't go down very easily last night.

The Deacons put a tight clamp on Duke's vaunted fast break and completely nullified its effectiveness. They led, 35-30, at halftime after a brilliant opening period which featured Dave Wiedeman and Mtaes playing their "lonesome George" ofense to perfection.

But this is, it seems, the year of the Blue Devil. At the outset of the second half, Duke quickly tied it at 35-all on a fast break basket by Jeff Mullins and a tip-in by sophomore Hack Tison.

Wake, however, came right back with two straight baskets of its own as, first Butch Hassell, then Wiedeman hit jumpers. But this 39-37 lead was the last time Wake could look down upon the nation's second-best team.

Tison, Mullins, and Art Heyman hit successively and Fred Schmidt added a free throw to give Duke back the lead for the first time since the middle of the first half.

From this 42-41 edge, the teams matched baskets until there were just six minutes remaining in the game.

Here, Duke, in the person of the magnificent Heyman, made its killer move. Leading by a precarious 47-49, the Blue Devils struck for ten points while Wake Forest could manage only Al Kohler's corner push.

Jay Buckley started it with a rebound goal, and ,after Kohler's basket, Heyman continued the pace with six straight points. The All-American stole the ball and raced for a fast break three-pointer; he then canned a lone free throw and added a drive to put Duke up by eight at 59-51.

Mullins' point-blank jumper, Buckley's layup, and Mullins' two free throws surrounded a foul shot by Ronnie Watts and a Hassel jumper. It was 65-54 Duke with a minute and a half left, and Wake was as dead as it could possibly be.

Heyman, per usual, was the Duke scoring leader with Mullins a close second. In the process of scoring his 24 points, Artie the Great broke Dick Groat's school scoring record. Mullins added 20, while Wiedeman lead Wake with 18. Hassell and Bob Woollard had 11 each for the Deacons.

Terps 'Clinch' Wrestling Title

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Maryland's defending Atlantic Coast Confertnce champions had the 1963 wrestling championship all wrapped up—barring major upsets—as the conference meet completed its semifinal round Friday night.

Three defending individual champs were among the nine Terps who avanced to Saturday night's finals: Ron Maunder—130 pounds, Sam "Bossert — 147 pounds, and Marshall Dauberman—177 pounds.

Maryland carried a 14-8 lead over second-place Virginia into last night's action. N. C. State had three points and UNC two. Only four league teams were entered.

In addition to all nine of Maryland's entries, Virginia advanced six men to the finals, N. C. State three and UNC two.

A fourth individual champ, N. C. State's heavyweight Bill Sullivan, advanced to the final round.

Swimming, Track Meets This Week

North Carolina's swimming and indoor track teams will be battling for championship honors in Atlantic Coast Conference meets this week.

It's possible for Coach Pat Earey's swimmers to finish second in the ACC finals at Raleigh Thursday, Friday and Saturday and still tie for the conference championship.

The swimming title is decided on regular season and championship meet performances. N. C. State, unbeaten in regular season dual meets, has eight points on the system, second-place Carolina has seven and Maryland has six

A first place in the championship meet would automatically assure the Tar Heels of a tie. If UNC finishes first and N. C. State third, the Tar Heels would win the title outright. State's team, with some of the top individual performers in the ACC, features first-place strength, while Maryland and Carolina count on depth.

The kingpin which Coach Dale Ranson's track team will try to bowl over next Saturday is Maryland's perennially tough Terrapins.

The Tar Heel thinclads will try to tumble the Terps in the tenth annual ACC Indoor Games, to be played in Woollen Gym.

Tommy Clark, high jumper, Heath Whittle, pole vaulter, Bob Hart, middle distance man, and a fleet of distance running specialists will carry UNC's hopes into the meet.

Clark recently set an ACC record when he jumped 6-8 in the National AAU meet last week. Whittle will be shooting for the 15-foot mark and Hart will be defending his ACC 600-yard run title in the games.

Count Basie Will Headline Germans, Backed By Tokens

The "Big Band Sound" of Count Basie and his 16-piece orchestra and folksinging by the Tokens will highlight the Germans Club Concert Friday night at eight o'clock in Memorial Hall.

William "Count" Basie has been playing the piano since childhood, studying at first with his mother. After working around New York with Sonny Greer and June Clark, Count went on tour with a theatre unit. When the tour broke up in Kansas City, he went to work in a silent movie theater. Soon after, he joined Walter Page's Blue Devils and later, Benny Moten, whose band he took over when Moten died in 1935.

In the summer of 1935, Basie had a ten-piece band which John Hammond, the noted music critic, heard on a small Kansas City radio station. Hammond helped bring the band to Chicago and then to New York in 1936, where it was enlarged. In January 1937 the band made its first recordings, and the following year became internationally famous. The qualities that established it were Basie's simple, swinging, elliptical piano style and the driving impetus of a great rhythm section.

"Head" arrangements, developed spontaneously by Basie's soloists, added to the impact of the band.

Except for a period in 1950-51 when he led a 'swinging sextet', Basie has led a big band continuously for two and a half decades. He has gained a global reputation for his undying allegiance to the beat, his loyalty to the blues as a basic form, and his ability to produce, year after year, a series of best selling records.

The Basie orchestra won the Down Beat Critics' Poll in 1954 and the Down Beat Readers Poll in 1955. In 1956 they won the readers' poll of France's Le Jazz Hot magazine and both the "Greatest Ever" and "New Star" categories in the Musicians' Musicians Poll of Leonard Feather's 1956 Encyclopedia Yearbook of Jazz. Basie himself won the Metronome Poll on piano, in 1942 and 1943.

Folksinging By The Tokens

Riding an express train to the top of the record charts, The Tokens, within one year have become one of the hottest singing groups in the recording field.

In January 1961 the four youngsters wrote and recorded a song called, "Tonight I Fell in Love."

RCA Victor signed the quartet to an exclusive contract—and their first Victor release, "When I Go To Sleep At Night" coupled with "Dry Your Eyes" served to further enhance the popularity of The Tokens. This was followed by "Sincerely" coupled with "When Summer is Through."

An African folk song that the boys used to sing in their neighborhood was transmitted into the Victor release, "The Lion Sleeps Tonight" — which became the Number One record in the United States in just six weeks.

In December, just eleven months after their first record—The Tokens recorded their first album, titled "The Lion Sleeps Tonight," it features the hit single plus eleven other folk songs, including: "Shenandoah," "Tina," "The Wreck of the John B" and "Children Go Where I Send Thee."

The Tokens, originally comprised of Hank Medress, Mitch Margo, Phil Margo and Jay Siegel, recently added a fifth member, Joe Venneri. Hank, Phil and Jay met through friends and singing groups while attending Abraham Lincoln High School in Brooklyn. There they participated in the school chorus, singing groups and musical shows. Mitch, the fourth member, proudly reflects that he "wasn't even a graduate of P.S. 100," being only 13 years old when the group was formed.

The Tokens all read, write and arrange music, and while their record hits have had a trace of a rock 'n roll background, they feel that folk song styling is really their forte. Their professed aim is to "commercialize folk music."

Chris Farran Announces For DTH Editor's Race

Graveside Rite Held Yesterday For J. B. Flynn

Graveside services for John Boyd Flynn, 42-year-old associate professor in the School of Business Administration, who died here Saturday, was held yesterday at 4 p.m. in Chapel Hill Memorial Cemetery. DeWhitt L. Myers, pastor of the United Congregational Christian Church, officiated.

Flynn was stricken while exercising in the Tin Can and died en route to Memorial Hospital of an apparent heart attack.

Flynn, an associate professor and specialist in real estate and finance, had taught in the business school since 1957.

A native of Washington, N. C., he was graduated from Davidson College in 1941. He received a master's degree in business administration at the Wharton School of Business of the University of Pennsylvania in 1950 and a doctor's degree at Ohio State University.

Flynn taught at the University of Pennsylvania, Denison University and Ohio State University. He was a member of the American Economic Association.

Survivors include his wife, the former Lucille Williams, a Washington, N. C. native; two daughters, Marian and Helen Flynn; four sisters; Miss Elizabeth Flynn, Washington, N. C., Mrs. J. E. Lane of Tuscaloosa, Ala., Mrs. Ada Martin Roper, Albuquerque, N. M., Mrs. Robert Gifford of Washington, D. C.; and a brother, Charles Flynn of Richmond, Va.

Winston-Salem Junior Offers Suggestions

Christopher Farran, a junior from Winston-Salem, yesterday announced his intention of running for the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel in the spring elections.

Farran said, "I'm going to be campaigning for two things: a better Tar Heel and a better campus."

"I feel I can better the Tar Heel through increased attention to the news columns—by stressing student and faculty news over national and international news. I hope to institute a definite system of 'beats' in order to always have experienced reporters covering South Building, student legislature, and dorm life, to name a few. I'd like to see more and better use of pictures. I can draw competent and experienced people from the Journalism School to assure us a newspaper run by people trained for the job—although we'd always welcome help from competent people with other majors. I feel I can write editorials of local significance with a broad base of campus interest."

Farran said, "I feel the Tar Heel can better the campus by paying attention to the majority of students rather than to the same select few. I'm going to work tirelessly for the betterment of dorm life—social advantages, dorm communications and libraries, athletic events, dormitory living conditions in general. I'll also work for a more interesting and accessible undergraduate library and a student union which means more to more students."

Farran, a journalism major, is president of Sigma Delta Chi, national professional journalism fraternity. He is currently News Editor of the Daily Tar Heel, and in the past has been co-feature editor and was DTH reviewer in his freshman year. He has done feature writing and reporting for the DTH.

He worked for a year with the UNC News Bureau and has been a reporter for three summers with the Winston-Salem Journal. He was editor of his high school newspaper, last year edited the Journalism School annual, and is currently a member of the Publications Board.

"I'm sure I've had the varied experience as reporter and editor to fill the job," Farran says, "and I know I've got the desire to improve the campus by improving the Tar Heel.

"I think I can make the DTH edit page—the editorials and the letters—a forum for reasoned, moderate discussion rather than a sounding board for political extremism.

"Finally, by attracting a competent staff interested in reporting all campus news objectively, I think we can make the Daily Tar Heel a newspaper that does its job well by serving all students."

40 Teachers Placed

"ASSOCIATE" PROGRAM INCREASES

Dean Arnold Perry of the UNC School of Education has revealed that over 40 "associate teachers" will be placed in North Carolina schools next fall.

This is a considerable increase from the pioneer group of 12 in 1959. As participants in the plan have increased . . . 23 in 1960, 28 in 1962 . . . ,significant revisions and improvements have been made.

The fifth year program, according to its director at UNC, professor John B. Chase, is designed to prepare for the teaching profession liberal arts college graduates who have no background in education but are strong in a teaching field. The new fifteen month program will begin in June.

During the first summer, the students undertake graduate study in their subject fields. Along with this, they do intensive work in educational history, philosophy and psychology. Methods of teaching will be stressed as the student is prepared to enter an associate teaching position in the fall.

The associate teacher teaches a half day under the direction of a local teacher and a university supervisor. He receives a stipend of $2,250 as an associate.

The second part of his day is devoted to a research project connected with local school improvement. In adition, weekly seminars are conducted by the faculty of the School of Education.

For the second summer the associate teacher returns to Chapel Hill for aditional work in education and his subject field.

At the end of the fifteen month pediod, the participants have earned a Master's degree and a North Carolina class A teaching certificate. This enables the teacher to move into the Master's pay scale with additional experience.

SHEPARD JONES TO BE HONORED

A national honorary speech fraternity will honor S. Shepard Jones, Burton Craige Professor of political science at UNC, as one of the fraternity's 50 most distinguished alumni at the Pi Kappa Delta Golden Anniversary Convention, March 22, at Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, Illinois.

Pi Kappa Delta fraternity has over 36,000 members.

Among the distinguished alumni to be honored along with Professor Jones are: Chet Huntley, news broadcaster, NBC, New York City; William L. Shirer, journalist and author, New York City; Spencer Tracy, actor, Culver City, California; Robert E. Smylie, governor, State of Idaho, Boise; Alden Russell (Ted Malone), radio and television broadcaster and producer, Bronxville, New York; Karl Scott, president, Ford Motor Co. of Canada; Fred D. Fagg Jr., Chancellor Emeritus, University of Southern California; Milburn P. Akers, editor, Chicago Sun-Times; and Charles T. Battin, professor, Campbell College, Buies Creek.

WARNER WELLS SELECTED

A University of North Carolina professor of surgery is one of 21 leading scientists selected to initiate the newly created Scientist's Institute for Public Information which will consider problems of the nuclear age.

Warner Wells M.D., associate professor of surgery at UNC, was selected to serve on the institute's board. Dr. Wells is nationally and internationally recognized as the translator and editor of "Hiroshima Diary," an account of how the World War II atomic bombing of Hiroshima affected a Japanese physician.

The institute will consider problems arising from the industrial, military, and medical uses of nuclear energy and radiation. The institute would "establish activities which can serve" the common needs of the independent groups of scientists in each community.

It will undertake to handle technical information and publication services to the groups, clearing house services to improve communication among existing and newly formed scientific information groups, personnel to facilitate liaison among these groups, efficient financing, and periodic conferences.

Guiding principles of the institute will be: information presented unencumbered by political or moral judgment; information prepared with scientific objectivity; information freely available to all.

McKNIGHT ELECTED EDITOR

Professor William A. McKnight has been elected assistant editor for Spanish of the "Modern Languages Journal," the publication of the National Federation of the Modern Languages Teachers Association. The journal is published in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Dr. McKnight, a member of the Department of Romance Languages here since 1936, has served as editor of "Contemporary Spanish Bibliography" and as consulting editor in Spanish for G. P. Putnam's Sons. He is director of the University's program in Spanish for freshmen and sophomores.

Professor McKnight has been an instructor and advisor for the United Peace Corps, in special training at the University here and in followup instruction at the Arecibo Camp in Puerto Rico. He has served as chairman of the Contemporary Spanish Literature Section of the Modern Languages Association.

'LIVING THEATER' SYMPOSIUM

William Trotman, director of the Institute of Outdoor Drama, and Arthur Cogswell, Chapel Hill architect, are attending a symposium in New York City, on "The Living Theater."

The American National Theater Academy, directed by Henry Hewes of the Saturday Review, will conduct the meeting on "Collaboration Between Dramatists and Architects: Planning and Designing New Theaters."

Mr. Trotman will take part in the discussions, with Mr. Cogswell, for utilization of architecturral ideas suitable to outdoor pageant dramatic productions.

Mr. Cogswell is a consultant to the Institute of Outdoor Drama established in the University here.

Playmakers Propose Changing Show Time

By PETE IVEY

What's 30 minutes to a theatergoer?

The Carolina Playmakers want to know whether to start evening performances at 8 o'clock or 8:30.

Regular customers of the University's famed dramatic organization are receiving cards asking whether they prefer plays start at 8 or half an hour later.

The "accustomed time" is 8:30. A new proposed time is eight o'clock. Play enthusiasts over North Carolina are invited to vote on which time they would like to see the curtain go up, and an opportunity for comments is possible on the card that can be returned to the Carolina Playmakers, 214 Abernethy Hall, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

What problems are involved here? There is the question of getting to the play, enjoying three acts that last two hours and getting home and to bed at a reasonable hour.

But there is also the issue of having dinner before the play, driving to the Playmakers Theater, or Memorial Hall, or the Forest Theater, and finding a parking place, all before the curtain rises.

Perhaps those from out-of-town, the commuters from Raleigh, Durham, Sanford, Greensboro, Winston-Salem and even as far as Charlotte will want the later time because it gives them more driving time to reach Chapel Hill after dinner. However, such people realize they have to drive back after the play is over, putting them home at midnight or later.

For theater devotees who live in Chapel Hill, or who come to the Carolina Inn and stay a day or so, it doesn't make much difference, thirty minutes more or less.

Dramatique 1-Acts Slated Feb. 7, 8, 9

Three one-act plays will be presented on March 7, 8, and 9 in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial by the Petite Dramatique.

One of the plays, Voices on the River, is an original play written by Harry Callahan, a graduate student in the Dramatic Arts Department. It is a romantic parody on Man's search for happiness. Starring in it are: Judy Foster, the young girl; Ben Jones, the young man; Henry Ramer, first man; Mel Starr, second man; Bettie Oliver and Walter Charnley, two lovers; and Fred Lubs, workman.

The other two plays are of the theater of the absurd and were written by Edward Albee. The Sand Box is a satire on the treatment of the elderly in our society and their death. It concentrates on the treatment of Grandma by her daughter and her daughter's hus-

New York Times Science Writer Speaks Today

"The Government's Problems as the Patron of the Sciences" is the subject of the fifth lecture in the Journalism Lecture Series to be today at 4 p.m. in 203 Howell Hall.

John W. Finney, science writer in the Washington Bureau of the New York Times, is the lecturer and he will touch on some of the economic, ethical, and political problems raised by the federal government's expanding support of research and development.

A Yale graduate, Mr. Finney was with United Press International in Washington from 1949 until 1957 at which time he joined the Washington Bureau of the Times. He covers atomic energy, space, and science in government.

During World War II, he served as a PT boat officer and as a communications officer.

Internal Revenue Service Intern Program Open

The Internal Revenue Service is again seeking college students for the Summer Intern Program in Washington, D. C.

Job assignments of two to three months duration will be made in the fields of law, accounting, economics, statistics, data processing, personnel, training budget, facilities and fiscal management, and public information.

The salary for undergraduates will be $79.20 per week and for graduates $88.00 per week.

One nominee will be selected from the University, and the qualifications are as follows: (1) At least a "B" average, (2) completion of at least the junior year by June '63 (3) concentration of studies in the fields of accounting, business administration, taxation, social sciences, or law, (4) interest in pursuing a career in government or a special interest in the field of taxation. The Federal Service Entrance Examination is not a requirement for this program; however, preference will be given to students who have made a passing score on the examination.

Any men or women students who are interested in becoming the University nominee for the Summer Intern Program should contact the Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall, not later than March 11.

UNC Graduate Publishes Book

"Greece by Prejudice" is the title of a new book by University of North Carolina graduate Daphne Athas.

The book has just been published by the J. B. Lippincott Co. of Philadelphia, Pa.

Miss Athas is a former student of Professor Emeritus of Journalism Phillips Russell. She graduated from the University after three years of study in 1943 with a B.A. degree.

The Los Angeles Times calls Miss Athas' book a "passionate lyrical account of six months in Greece."

Miss Athas is the author of two other books, both fiction.

Rowan Speaks To UP Tonight At 7 In Carroll

Ford Rowan will give the keynote address at the University Party meeting tonight at 7 p.m. in Carroll Hall. His topic is "The Emergence of the UP as the All-Campus Party."

A new vice-chairman for the party will be elected. The two announced candidates are Bo Edwards, a junior and UP legislator, and Roger Davis, a sophomore from Craige Dorm.

Rowan, who is president of Ehringhaus dorm, became a UP legislator last month. He had been Student Party endorsed until the walk-out of eight SP legislators in February.

He is Parliamentarian of the Student Legislature and Chairman of the Graham Memorial current affairs committee. Recently he has been mentioned as a possible UP nominee for vice president of the student body.

According to party chairman Mike Chanin, tonight's meeting will vote on the procedure to be followed in next week's convention.

McDevitt, Spearman & An All-Campus UP

The University Party meets tonight to sharpen its fangs for the spring elections and take a look at its prospective candidates. Between Tonight's meeting and the nominating convention next Tuesday UP members will have to make a choice —between a slate of Larry McDevitt and Bob Spearman for president-vice president and one of Spearman and Ford Rowan for president-vice president.

The UP must make a choice.

The opposition Student Party has no choice—it has one good candidate, Mike Lawler, and no one else.

* * *

The choice for the UP partly has to do with personalities and, partly, with issues.

Larry McDevitt favors a "strong" student government and an all-campus University Party.

Bob Spearman favors a "strong" student government and an all-campus University Party.

What's the difference?

We suggested in an editorial last week a grouping of the UP into Old Greeks and New Greeks. The Old Greeks are the remnants of that philosophy which said if-there-is-a-job-a-fraternity-man - can - do-it - better - than - a-dorm-man-anyday. They are the fraternity and sorority members who most opposed Mike Chanin's dorm-supported election as UP chairman. They are the survivors of a University Party of the past, and are reluctant to accept an all-campus orientation in any more than name alone.

The New Greeks are working primarily in dormitory and all-campus areas. They refuse to fight what must be a losing battle against the dorm man.

Spearman is the obvious choice of the New Greeks, the choice of those who have been most successful at winning votes and building a good image for the party in the past year.

McDevitt is not an "Old Greek" —he has lived in a dormitory. But he is supported by the Old Greeks, we feel, because of a combination of factors — primarily resentment against Chanin and against Spearman and Rowan, and a vague feeting that McDevitt is the "lesser of evils" for the Old Greeks.

The real and substantial differences between McDevitt and Spearman lie in their concepts of the role and scope of student government—with Spearman idealizing a broader and more penetrating entrance of Student government into the life of the students.

* * *

The UP has one week to make a decision. The Student Party will be using that week to beg its one and only candidate Lawler to run, and he probably will. (JC)

"Try Him"

As the election fever overcomes Graham Memorial, and the political smoothies slither around campus lining up their potential backers, as we notice an increased sincerity in the voice of all concerned, before the election gets too close, and prior to the formulation of any real issues, the temptation to lump all politicians into one ugly pile is too overpowering to put off.

So don't.

At this stage of the game, they all sound alike; most of them look alike; and for all intents and purposes, they think alike.

They are politicians.

Right now they want more than your vote. They want a "commitment," that sacred, vital assurance that basically, deep down inside, where and when it really counts, you are for them.

"Yes, I will back you." There are no words more sacred, no intentions more put upon.

But, as we were saying, right about now, they all seem the same, and there just ain't no issues.

Really, it is quite difficult to tell one from the other. So we offer to all sincerely apathetic students the following bi of nonsense, which might best be used as a "greeting" to future political pests.

* * *

Yes, I am in this room.

No, I will not shout "come in."

Yes, I know that you will only take a minute.

No, I don't have a minute to spare.

Yes, I know that you are sincere.

No, I am not impressed.

Yes, I care about the issues.

No, you don't care more.

Yes, I could be more informed.

No, you are not the one to inform me.

Yes, my vote is important.

But so is the guy next door, why don't you try him. (CW)

Bandwagon

Back in September, we heard rumors circulating that the University Party was about to fall heir to the greatest political mind ever to grace this campus. A real "take charger" was ready and willing to institute a golden age.

Since that time there has been more political "bandwagoning" and more changing of horses than anyone could have ever imagined possible.

If the trend continues, the UP will pick up so many strays and so many potential heroes that pretty soon Mike Chanin will have to shift gears to stay ahead of the leadership-starved kids that he pulled up out of the pits of a supposed SP vacuum. (CW)

HENRY MAYER

Tension Within Muslims

(Eds. Note: This is the first in a four-part series on the Black Muslin movement, written by UNC senior Henry Mayer, who worked with the U. S. Civil Rights Commission last summer).

The Black Muslims have been described variously as "one of a plethora of bizarre Negro cults that began just before the Depression ended in the metropolitan slums of the North," "a dynamic social protest group that moves upon a religious vehicle," "a separate black economy which can be dismissed as wilful and mischievous nonsense," "a fanatical, pseudo-Moslem, all-Negro group advocating friendship with the USSR, disobedience to the laws of the United States and death to all 'white devils,' and a "self-conscious community whose members strive by hard work, self-discipline and sacrifice to live in accordance with a central ideal—Islam—as they understand it. They have also been declared "a growing danger to our internal security" by Rep. Francis Walter.

Given this wide range of opinion about the organization, it is not surprising that evaluating the Black Muslims (or more accurately, The Lost-Found National of Islam in North America) is a tricky and precarious business. The Muslims operate behind closed doors to a large extent. They advocate rigorous standards of personal morality for the achievement of economic and social identity as well as self-respect, but base this doctrine upon a paradoxical and muddled religious philosophy which includes the diverse elements of Islamic brotherhood, racial hatred, and revealed Truth (or charismatic quackery, depending upon your point of view). The Muslims, however, cannot be categorically dismissed as racial medicine men, condemned as subversives, accepted as legitimate contributors to the national discussion, or written off as a fad without further discussion. In this series of articles attempts will be made to examine the content and practice of the Muslims ideology, consider its status as a religion, the position of force and violence in the Muslim credo, and its political orientation.

The leader of the Black Muslims in America is Elijah Muhammed, born in Georgia 65 years ago as Elijah Poole. Since 1933 Muhammed has been Allah's Messenger in this country, attempting to deliver the American Negro from bondage. Muhammed believes that "the Original Man is the Black Man," and by reconverting to Islam, the Negro thus regains the identity he lost centuries ago when he was shackled into slavery. The white man is literally the "devil" of the piece, for his wickedness has subjugated, oppressed and destroyed the Negro. Since the Negro is held to be the superior being, there is an elaborate system which explains the infamous and devious ways in which the white man subdued the Negro.

Allah has willed that the days of the whites are numbered, and hence the Muslims must prepare for their assumption of control. No date for this take-over has been established, and it is Elijah's responsibility to announce this date to his people. Since no upper time limit has been made clear, some observers view the Muslim movement as a type of religious millenialism, in which the promise of the not-too-distance future forces the acceptance of a current program. Elijah Muhammed advocates a twelve point plan for the "deliverance and salvation of the American Negro." The points are listed as follows:

(1) Separate yourselves from your slave masters.

(2) Pool resources, education and other qualifications for independence.

(3) Stop forcing yourselves into places where you are not wanted.

(4) Make your own neighborhood a decent place in which to live.

(5) Rid yourself of the lust of wine and drink and learn to love yourself and your kind before loving others.

(6) Unite to create a future for yourselves.

(7) Build up your own homes, schools, hospitals, and factories.

(8) Do not seek to mix your blood through racial integration.

(9) Stop buying expensive cars, fine clothes and goods before you have a fine home.

(10) Spend your money among yourselves.

(11) Build an economic system among yourselves.

(12) Protect your women.

* * *

Although the appeal is based upon racial hatred and religious mysticism, it is undeniably an exhortation to conform to the old "Protestant Ethic" of industry, hard work, thrift, self-discipline and moral uprightness as the means of achieving success in this world. The movement attracts upwardly mobile, lower class Negroes who are motivated by a need for identity and a desire for self-improvement. Many of these people have few skills and are rejected by more prosperous Negroes as well as the white community. The Muslims have had considerable success in recruiting in prisons; the celebrated Malcolm X first found Islam while in jail. These people have nothing that America is supposed to offer (including hope), and the messianic flavor of racial separatism is a powerful attraction indeed.

The inconsistency between the religion of mystic Islam and the program of Yankee-Protestantism is recognized by Elijah, although he sees no reason to resolve the tension.

Letters Welcome

The editors of the Daily Tar Heel gladly accept letters from students and other members of the University community.

Letters must be free from libel, in good taste, and limited to 300-500 words. They should be typed, double spaced, if possible. Letters on any topic are welcome.

All letters become the property of the Daily Tar Heel, and may be published unless the writer requests otherwise.

No anonymous letters will be printed, regardless of subject matter or worth. Every letter writer should include his signature with a campus address that can be verified.

Justice In Virginia— Where Is It?

NEW REPUBLIC

In Lynchburg, Virginia, on a rainy December day an unmarried white woman, aged 59, was raped and robbed of $1.36 by a Negro. She was the third woman in two months to have been sexually assaulted, and from her descriptions, the Lynchburg papers pieced together and published a sketch of the "Negro Rapist."

Two days later Thomas Carlton Wansley, 17, a Negro, was arrested and accused of the rape of two women, the attempted rape of the third, and of robbery. Though he was a minor, the city authorities exercised their option and tried him as an adult. In two different trials, a male, all-white jury found him guilty of the two rapes and of robbery. The judge sentenced the boy to die in the electric chair not once but twice—an das an afterthought, gave him 20 years in prison. The day of the conviction, the Lynchburg papers ran a box score of the Negroes from that city who had been executed since 1958—three.

Wansley has an IQ of 75. His teachers said he never did anything at school but sit and stare out the window. He left at 16, not having completed the sixth grade. He has no criminal record.

At both trials, Wansley's lawyer sought to have him sent to the Central State Hospital in Petersburg for psychiatric examination. The judge dismissed the requests, and a court-appointed psychiatrist, making a cursory examination, found him sane. Attempts to change the venue because of newspaper publicity, and to dismiss the jury because it was all-white, were in vain. In the first trial, the white woman Wansley was said to have raped was not able to identify him. The burden of evidence consisted of alleged confessions he had made to the authorities after his arrest and a supposed re-enactment of the crime at the scene. Thereupon, the prosecutor, a former FBI agent, Royston Jester III, urged the jurors to return the death penalty; if they did not, the residents could not walk safely on the streets. They complied in one hour, 41 minutes.

In the second trial, Wansley was accused of raping a Japanese woman. His defense was that he was in her home at her request and that their sexual relationship was one involving mutual concent. Again, he was found guilty and sentenced to death.

Last year, in Lynchburg, a white used car salesman was convicted of the statutory rape of an 11-year-old Negro girl and received a 20-year sentence.

Carolina And Duke Are Style-Setters

By Hugh Russell Fraser
Durham Herald

Chapel Hill and Duke University have become the college style centers of the nation.

In other words, what the students at Chapel Hill and Duke are wearing today will be the collegiate fashion at America's colleges and universities next year, and the year after.

Several experts, to my astonishment confirm this.

When I first heard it I was so puzzled, my natural question was: Why Duke and Chapel Hill? And the answer I received was enlightening and invariable: "I don't know, but it's a fact!"

When I suggested to one of my informants, Eric Bradbery, who has traveled 13 states for nine years for a very popular brand of imported British-made sweaters (Alan Paine), that the University of Virginia had been credited in some quarters as the pace-setter, his answer was quick and emphatic:

"Nonsense! True, one of the style magazines published in the North, afraid to give credit to the Deep South, settled on Charlottesville, as sort of a half-way point between the North and the South, but I know the situation like the back of my hand and I tell you it is Chapel Hill and Durham . . . the evidence for it is overwhelming and I can cite chapter and verse, and so can anyone else who knows the collegiate style world.

"Chapel Hill," he continued, "may have a shade of a lead over Duke, but the two together — the University of North Carolina and Duke — set the pace, nationally-speaking, and the rest of the camuses follow.

"You are talking about sweaters only?" I suggested.

"Oh no, I'm not! It's also true in shirts and shoes and other key items."

"Are you telling me," I asked, "that the college kids throughout the nation insist on certain brands and styles?"

"I am!", he said flatly. "This is an age of conformity and, as far as college styles are concerned, getting more pronounced every year. Why, did you know that even the trend among women students on the campus is to copy the men's styles? Take the button-down shirt, for instance. The girls are asking for it now as well as the boys . . . and the V-neck sweater! Wow! The girls are going for it now, because the boys have it. . . . Now that's something that started at Chapel Hill-Durham two years ago and spread to every college campus in the country."

"Come on," I said, "let's be a little more specific.

"All right," he replied, "in 1961 the Shetland crew-neck sweater was at the peak of it's popularity in the colleges. Then, in that year, Chapel Hill and Durham switched to a V-neck, flat-knit, lambs wool pullover . . . within less than 14 months the craze for V-necks had spread, North, South and West.

"Or take another instance," he continued. "The colors — burgundy and navy — suddenly became favorites at Duke and Chapel Hill and now have spread all over the South and are already moving westward."

From other sources I was surprised to learn that the college kids insist on brand name favorites. In shoes . . . it's Bass-Weejuns; in shirts . . . it's Gant; in cologne for men . . . it's English-Leather — and nothing else? I never heard of any of these before . . . which shows I'm not in the groove.

"Are you sure?", I asked a collegiate store manager. "Sure!", he exploded. "Listen, brother, if I didn't have 'em, I wouldn't be in business tomorrow!"

Well, all I say is that if the college kids have to conform, it's something that Chapel Hill and Duke are the leaders . . . style centers of the collegiate world!

Frosh Failout Points Out Needs

RALEIGH TIMES

Things good, and things bad, come form the grassroots.

It may be that the members of the Visiting Committee of the University Trustees should look back to some of the grassroots for reasons as to why the academic failure rate for freshmen at Chapel Hill has been running 13 to 15 per cent. The Visiting Committee worried about that rate in its latest report, and it should have so worried.

No one can tell, to be sure, what caused that rate. There will be the usual number of freshmen who just didn't apply themselves. They had the academic background from high school, but just loafed away their freshman year, and failure was the result. There will be some freshmen who just didn't have what college takes, and shouldn't have been there in the first place.

And, there will be right many of those freshmen who came from the smaller high schools in the state. Some of those freshmen just didn't have the kind of high school preparation they needed to make the grade, no matter how hard they might have tried.

That, in all probability, would be the story the Visiting Committee could find if it dug name by name through the lists of freshmen who failed. And in these findings would be the real story of the real need of education in North Carolina. That is the need of a continuing program of improvement for all public school education in the State. So many of the smaller local school units depend entirely on state appropriations for their support. Only as that minimum state support is increased will those schools be able to turn out more and more young people who can meet the grade at Carolina and the other institutions of higher learning.

Children who enter college from larger city school units, such as Raleigh, have an academic advantage over those from the smaller high schools in the areas which don't have local school supplements. Undoubtedly that always will be the case, but the spread should be less and less as the state level of support is raised.

This legislature has before it recommendations from the Governor and the Advisory Budget Commission which will raise the minimum state support. The increase won't be nearly so large as it was two years ago, but it is an increase and it will help. As long as each legislature does all it can to provide more for schools, there will be improvement each two years.

And along with the improvement, we should see a drop in the failure rate among freshmen at State, Carolina and the other colleges.

FIRST HALF — SECOND HALF — The fortunes of war of the Wake Forest basketball team during their game with Duke last Saturday night in the final round of the ACC Tournament are quite evident on the faces of these Deacon fans. For awhile during the first half Wake led, and everything was rosey. But then came a sad second half for the Deacs, and Duke won, 68.57.

Chemist James Collman Wins $16,000 Grant For Research

Dr. James P. Collman UNC is among 68 scientists in the United States and Canada just awarded grants totaling $1 million by the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation of New York. Collman's designation under the grant is a "Sloan Research Fellow" and his stipend is $16,000.

The announcement was made today by Dr. Everett Case, foundation president. Only one other North Carolinian, Dr. Howard Shields of Wake Forest College, was among the recipients.

Receipt of the coveted awards is highly regarded in the scientific world because the grants are limited to young scientists showing great promise and because there are no stipulations for use of the grants.

Fundamental research in a broad field of studies will be carried out but no specific projects are designated or approved by the foundation, Dr. Case said.

Dr. Collman, the UNC recipient, is a 30-year-old chemist who teaches both graduate and undergraduate courses in organic chemistry. He joined the UNC faculty in 1958 after earning his Ph.D. from the University of Illinois.

He has held numerous grants for scientific study but this is the first of an unrestricted nature, the scientist said.

Dr. Collman's grant of $16,000 from the Sloan Foundation is for a two-year period beginning September 16, 1963. He said he will use the grant to continue study of "reactions of metal complexes."

The study involves a probe of reactions to compounds comprised of metals and carbon compounds, which together make a metal complex.

His research concentrates on organic parts of the complexes and how their reactivity is affected by the metals. Practical applications in related fields have led to such discoveries as gasoline additives polyethylene and pigments for dyestuffs, Dr. Collman said.

Dr. Collman will remain on the faculty here throughout the research period. He expects to spend a great deal of time on the project during summer months.

Scientists do not apply for Sloan grants, but are nominated by their department chairman or other scientists well acquainted with the scientist's research and potential. Reflecting the emphasis on youth, the median age of this year's recipients is 30 years.

The foundation's basic research program has provided grants of about $8 million to 333 scientists in 78 universities and colleges in the United States and Canada since 1955.

One other UNC faculty member, Dr. Paul S. Hubbard of the Department of Physics, is currently in his first year as a Sloan Fellow.

Cincy And Duke Still Top Ratings

NEW YORK (UPI)—Cincinnati, having completed the regular season with a 23-1 record, begins workouts this week for the defense of its NCAA championship and awaits certification as the United Press International No. 1 college basketball team for 1962-63.

Duke's Atlantic Coast Conference champions gained a few points in their pursuit of Cincinnati; Arizona State took over third place as Loyola Ill. slipped, and Wichita jumped back into the No. 6 spot in the next-to-last weekly voting by the UPI board of coaches.

Although Cincinnati, Duke and three other teams among this week's top 10 have completed their regular schedules, five others among the leaders still have games to be played. The UPI national champion thus will be crowned next week.

One more coach shifted his support this week from Cincinnati to Duke. While 32 of the 35 coaches on the UPI rating board continued to make the Bearcats from Ohio their top choice, three picked Duke. Cincinnati was the unanimous favorite of the coaches for eight straight weeks earlier in the season.

The three teams among the top 10 which gained ground this week were Arizona State (fourth place to third); Ohio State (sixth place to fourth); and Wichita (ninth place to sixth).

Loyola, third last week to the No. 5 rating after losing its second game in 26 starts—to Wichita. Mississippi State held seventh place; Illinois dropped three notches to No. 8; Stanford fell one place to No. 9 and New York University held 10th.

The coaches based their ratings on games played through Saturday night, March 2.

Of the week's top 10, six have qualified for the NCAA championship (Cincinnati, Duke, Arizona State, Loyola, Mississippi State and NYU); Stanford has clinched at least a tie for the Far West Big Six title which carries an NCAA berth, and either fourth-ranked Ohio State or eighth-ranked Illinois will represent the Big Ten.

Sixth-ranked Wichita, runnerup to Cincinnati in the Missouri Valley Conference, has entered the National Invitation Tournament in New York.

Billy Named All-Tourney

UNC's Billy Cunningham added one more honor to his first basketball season's record in the ACC tournament last weekend.

The 6-5 sophomore was named to the Atlantic Coast Conference All-Tournament team announced Sunday. Previously he had been named to the All-Conference team and had received honorable mention in both the AP and UPI All-American ratings.

Duke's Art Heyman and Jeff Mullins led the voting. Dave Wiedeman of Wake Forest and Ken Rohloff of N. C. State were the other first-team members.

On the second team were Larry Brown of UNC, Jay Buckley of Duke, Bob Woollard and Frank Christie of Wake Forest and Buzzy Harrison of Duke.

All ten players were from the four North Carolina schools entered in the annual tournament.

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

For Carolina fans the basketball season is over—finis, kaput. Yet only eight miles away, it has just begun for Duke's Blue Devils.

Perhaps the season would have ended on a more happy note had Dean Smith's highly-regarded men had one more crack at Duke—a chance to prove that they were capable of giving the Blue Devils a run for their money. Outside of the two losses to Miami and Davidson, the 77-69 victory over UNC at Chapel Hill was probably the toughest on the Methodist schedule.

Wake Forest made it to the finals of the ACC's much-discussed championship tournament for the fourth straight year and certainly gave Vic Bubas's cagers a few moments of worry before falling behind.

Perhaps the hardest thing to believe about the past season is Wake Forest. Few of the basketball irtelligentsia in the area expected the Deacons to challenge as strong as they did.

But Wake made it to the championship game again. Next year they'll be without three important men—Big Bob Woollard, All-ACC guard Dave Wiedeman and Bob Kohler. At this point Duke and Carolina would seem to be the best bets for 1964. But who's going to bet against Bones McKinney putting up a good fight?

The Deacons won the ACC title two straight years and many of their followers thought they could do it once more. They didn't, but they still have their laurels to rest on. Wake Forest students are ever so happy about their five straight victories over UNC. Wake was the only team in the nation to whip the Tar Heels three times this season.

That last game left the Tar Heels with a 16-6 record—a good one. It wasn't quite enough to get UNC into the nation's top twenty simply because they didn't fare so well against their tougher opponents. The big non-league wins were over Kentucky and Notre Dame, with two more coming against Yale and Georgia. The losses to Wake, Duke and Indiana more than counter-balanced the victories.

Only Honorable Mention

Probably the biggest disappointment was that Billy Cunningham was given only honorable mention on the two major All-American lists. The ACC is one of the strongest basketball conferences in the nation, yet Duke's Art Heyman, the player of the year, was the only league All-American.

With basketball and football still associated with gambling rumors, our "national past time" is not ignoring the possibilities of baseball "fixes." Judge Robert Cannon, major league players' counsel, in a talk to the Pittsburgh Pirates said: "Just be sure your new friends want you for what you are and not what you can do for them or what they can get out of you." Seems to me that his words are good advice for non-athletes too.

More baseball. Chicago White Sox general manager Ed Short is slowly becoming a new edition of Frank Lane. Recently he said, "I'm going to keep on trading so long as I think it will help the club." Among the players Short has traded away are Luis Aparicio, Al Smith and Minnie Minoso.

Fifty-mile hikes have created a national interest lately. It may be just a coincidence, but it seems that they're recording walking songs for those indoor sports participants. Party lovers can dance to the tunes of "Walk Right In" and "Walk Like A Man."

Three more of the nation's top twenty hits seems to be directed at Atlantic Coast Conference basketball coaches. "He's So Fine" (Vic Bubas talking about Art Heyman), "End of the World" (Bones McKinney) and "Our Day Will Come" (UNC's Dean Smith.

No Dance Next Year?

"I'm not saying next year will be a dance for us, for we lose Larry Brown, Yogi Poteet, Peppy Callahan and other boys who have helped us. But with guys like Respess, Shaffer, Cunningham, Mike Cooke and Billy Galantai we will win a few," said UNC's Dean Smith after being eliminated from the ACC tourney.

Brown, Carolina's All-Conference guard, hopes to land a job and a basketball position with an industrial group—either the Phillips Oilers or Denver Truckers. Larry is an industrial relations major and says he will play AAU ball only if "I can help the team and the company as a player and employee."

South Carolina's Scotti Ward gave former UNC basketball star Tom Camp of the Charlotte Observer a humorous quote over the weekend. Concerning Maryland's tourney performance he said, "If I had been coaching them, I would have given each a dollar and a ride to the highway and told them to thumb or walk."

UNC footballer Tony Hennessey has signed with the Baltimore Colts of the National Football League as a free agent. The 265-pound Hennessey will be given a trial at defensive tackle.

Davidson's sparkling showing in the Southern Conference this season gave the state a "Big Five" in basketball for the first time in history. And it wasn't a one-year bit either. Only Bill Jarman graduates and Coach Lefty Driesell has a 6-5 freshman, Dick Snyder, coming up to replace Jarman. Snyder has ben consistently in the 30's since December.

Duke Win Streak 'No Fluke': Bubas

By JIM WALLACE

Duke Basketball Coach Vic Bubas had a look of relief about him as he relaxed, leaning against the ball that his Blue Devils had just used to win the ACC Championship.

"They're a great bunch of kids," he said happily, "he best team in the ACC. We won all our conference games; it was no fluke. It would have been a real shame to go out with anything but a victory tonight.

"It feels particularly good when you can come from behind," he said regarding Wake's lead during the first half. "They did a great job offensively. During the half we discussed our diamond and one defense, but first we didn't want them to panic because they were only four points down.

"I didn't feel we were really on," Bubas said of the first half. "The team defense was lousy, and we wanted to do something about Wiedeman." Buzzy Harrison was later given the task. "He had the hardest job out there."

During the game Duke All-American Art Heyman broke the school's all time scoring record set by Dick Groat. Heyman now has 1,895 points, with a 25.3 average for 75 games compared with Groat's total of 1,886 points with a 22.8 average for 82 games.

"He's the greatest Duke player I've ever seen," said Bubas, "including Groat."

Was there any one thing that contributed towards the victory?

"One thing I think helped," said Bubas, "In February I decided on an hour to hour and a quarter practices come what may. That's pretty short. Some days we didn't even show up at the gym. I wanted to keep them hungry. I didn't want them tired of basketball for the tournament. It looks like it was a pretty good gamble."

What about NYU and Pitt, one of whom Duke will meet shortly in Maryland?

"As a staff we have given no thought to NYU or Pitt. We had to think of the ACC first. You can't put the horse before the cart." said Bubas. "By the time we play them though, we'll have all the information we can use. We want to fight real hard up there to protect the bye." (Duke has a bye in the first round of the regionals in College Park.)

THERE IS NO JOY IN DEACONVILLE. Wake Forest's defeated basketball players await trophy presentation after losing to Duke, 68-57, in the finals of the ACC basketpall tournament in Raleigh. The Deacons made it to the league finals for the fourth straight year.

53 Morehead Scholarships Presented For Study Here

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

John Motley Morehead yesterday personally awarded Morehead Scholarships to 53 boys, more than ever before, to attend UNC next year. The Morehead scholarship pays all expenses plus spending money for the students' four years at Carolina.

Yesterday's awards totaled $306,000. Individual scholarships are worth $5,100 each for state residents and $6,800 for those out of state. The difference is due to the tuition differential for non-residents of North Carolina.

There are now 418 Morehead Scholars dating back to 1951 when the first grants were made.

Morehead's benefactions to the University have totalled over $17 million, including the $3 million Morehead Building housing the Zeiss Planetarium; Morehead Sun Dial; Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower; aid to WUNC-TV; the Morehead Scholarships and other grants to the University. In 1961, Mr. Morehead granted an additional $7 million to the Morehead Foundation to continue the scholarship program here indefinitely.

The 1963 scholars were chosen from North Carolina high schools and various preparatory schools throughout the South, the East, New England and the Midwest.

The names, hometowns and schools of this year's scholars are as follows:

Arthur Travis Abbott, Asheville, N. C., Lee H. Edwards High School; James Granger Aplin, Chattanooga, Tenn., The McCallie School, Chattanooga; Jonathan Bell Arterton, Washington, D. C., St. Albans School, Washington D. C.; Timothy John Balch, Stanford, Calif., Deerfield Academy, Deerfield, Mass.; Jeffrey Windsor Beaver, Charlotte, N. C-Chest To Open Monday

The Campus Chest will begin its annual spring drive next week, Co-chairmen Page Bradham and Jack Sechler announced today. The drive will officially begin Monday, March 11.

A solicitations drive will start the campaign. About 300 solicitors will contact students living in dormitories, sorority houses, and fraternity houses.

The goal is $1 per student. Students giving a $1 or more will be given a Campus Chest button with a number on the back. Three numbers will be drawn at Saturday's Carnival, and students holding the lucky numbers will be given door prizes.

The traditional Auction will be held Tuesday, March 12, at 7 p.m. in Carroll Hall. An added feature this year will be a concert by the Migrants before the Auction gets under way. Lee Ferrell will be auctioneer. Items going to the highest bidder include a bottle of champagne and "beach hats" from Milton's.

The Carnival will round up the Chest drive. It will get under way at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, March 16. Many attractions are in store this year. Booths, rides, beauty queens, and the crowning of the King of the Carnival are some of the events.

Money raised from this year's drive will aid the Children's Mental Hospital in Butner, the World University Service, the American Friends Service Committee, and the Panama Exchange. The goal has been set at $6,000. The first $700 will go to the Panama Exchange. The rest of the money will be divided up among the remaining three charities.

Campus Chest Chairman Page Bradham said, "We are only asking for $1 per student. Since this is Carolina's only charity drive, we do not feel this is too much to ask. Our charities are concerned with students, and we feel that each student here should feel the responsibility of helping other students, not only on our campus but all over the world."

Howe And Chinnis To Edit '64 Yack

John Howe and Charles Chinnis have been named co-editors of the 1964 Yackety Yack.

The Publications Board made the selection in a meeting yesterday afternoon. There were no other candidates for the position.

Howe is a junior from Hamlet majoring in accounting. He has had extensive participation with the Yack and this past year served as a co-managing editor. Also a junior accounting major, Chinnis is from Raleigh. He has worked with the book for several years and was both the senior class editor and features editor with the '63 edition.

In their presentation of their plans for the '64 Yack, the new co-editors discussed the possibility of including a section on Carolina's summer session within the regular feature section, and thus making the features a more comprehensive part of the book.

Howe and Chinnis hope to preserve a readable informality in the Yack by making group pictures more lively and interesting. Another important idea in their plans is to focus more care and attention to the handling of academics and administration, thus bringing out to the campus the full value of the section.

Because of the problem of the judges and their decisions in the beauty contest, Howe and Chinnis are also giving some consideration to cutting down the number of girls in the Yack beauty court.

Dormitory Spotlight: Craige

This is another in a series of articles on UNC dorms, sponsored by the Communications Committee and the dorm presidents.

First place in the men's homecoming display and two top ranking intramural teams have highlighted the first-year success of Craige dormitory.

Headed by president George Rosental, Craige is unique in that it has three vice-presidents: Dick Westin, social chairman; John Ramey, academic affairs chairman, and Butch Mummaw, special events chairman. The dorm maintains a well stocked quiz file and a library.

Craige football and basketball teams both reached the finals of intramural competition. The first mud bowl game was initiated by Craige in the fall.

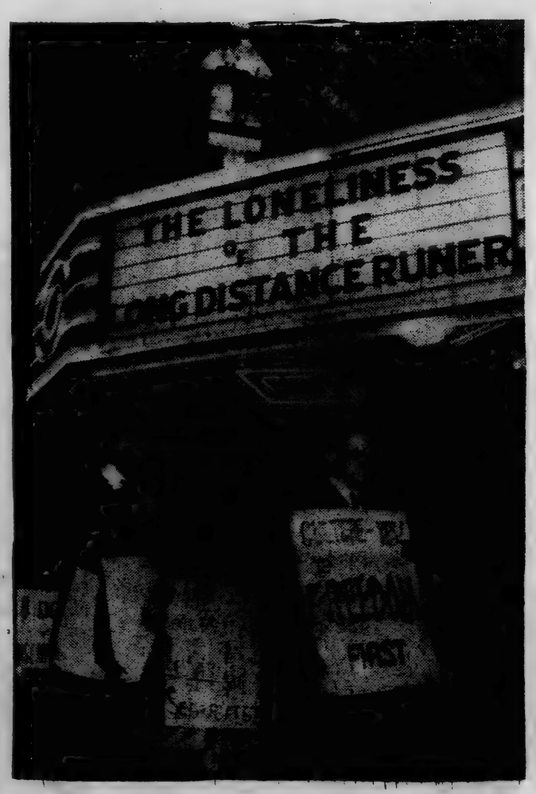
A Halloween party with East and West Cobb was termed "one of the best parties ever held" by Rosental. Two more exchange parties as well as an all-weekend affair featuring a combo and a picnic have been planned for the spring.

The Tar Pit, a bi-weekly newspaper edited by Ladda Baucom and Gerry Grosboll, includes three pages of print and two of cartoons. Craige also bought space in the Yack dormitory section.

Medical school, law school and foreign students make Craige one of the most heterogeneous dorms on campus. It housed the UNC Peace Corps group during their training period last fall.

'Know Nothings' Win First Quiz Contest

The "Know Nothings" advanced to the second round of competition in the Junior Class-sponsored "College Bowl" Sunday by defeating the Pi Lambda Phi team 360-330.



The "Know Nothings," who include Walter Dellinger, Henry Mayer, Bob Spearman and Mickey Simmons, rallied from a 30-point intermission deficit by correctly answering numerous bonus questions to win the match. Members of the Pi Lambda team were Dennis Winner, Allan Luks, John Ulfelder and Peter Goldberg.

Since some members of the "Know Nothings" will be out of town next weekend, Woody Harrison, chairman of the Junior Class Scholarship Committee sponsors of the series, has announced that next week's challengers will be the Delta Upsilon fraternity who will oppose an unannounced Tau Epsilon Phi fraternity team.

Lawler To Address SP Meeting Tonight

Mike Lawler, vice president of the student body, will speak on "Student Government and the Student Pary" at the Student Party meeting tonight at 8 in Howell Hall.

Following his speech, plans for the nominating convention will be discussed, especialy in regard to the legislative nominations. The convention is scheduled for next week and all students interested in a Student Party endorsement for legislature, a senior class office, or Big Four positions should be present at tonight's meeting. In order to vote a member must attend two meetings prior to the convention. Another meeting is planned for Sunday night before the convention.

Draft Extension Gains Support Of Committee

SL Kills Proposal For Vote

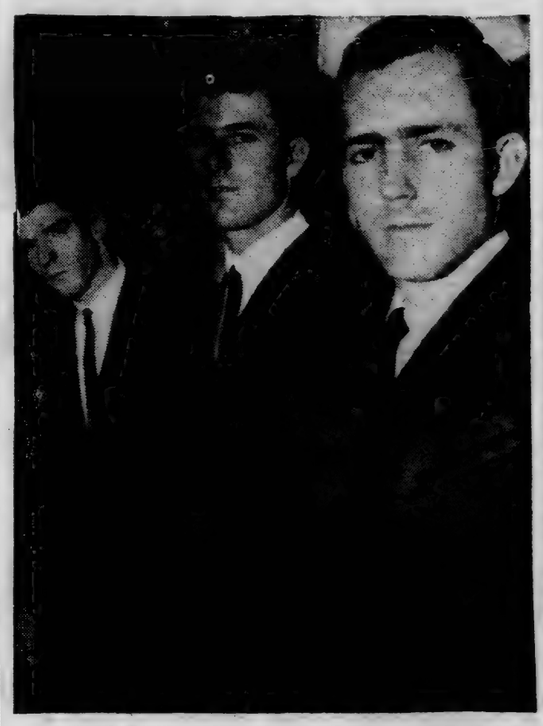
By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature Monday night defeated a proposal for a campus referendum on the right of SL to pass resolutions on matters not directly affecting UNC students. The vote was 22-5, with three abstentions.

Legislature approved a $50 appropriation to the National Student Association Committee (NSA) for continued programming for the remainder of this fiscal year, along with a $25 loan to the freshman class for its initial operating and publicity expenses.

A resolution urging that negotiations for the use of the Monogram Club Building as a dormitory social room be carried out and a bill to amend the by-laws for the student audit board were also okayed.

Action on a bill to appropriate $360 to the Publications Board for salaries of $10 a week for three Daily Tar Heel reporters was postponed until Thursday night when the author of the bill was not present. Action on a bill to establish a Conference Coordinating Committee was also postponed.



The proposed referendum asked students to specify which of three categories of resolutions they wanted SL to consider. An amendment which said that the results of the referendum would not bind SL in any way was approved. The bill, as introduced by Franklin Atkinson (SP), stated that since the power of SL to pass resolutions in certain areas of concern has been a source of continual controversy in the past, this proposal would assist the representatives in their expedition of future resolutions.

Legislators argued that Atkinson's referendum would not solve the problem of resolutions.

The freshman class appropriation, introduced by Bob Spearman (UP), requested money for the Class of 1966 to publicize their future program of activities, a Freshman Class Day and a dance. It must be paid back by July 1, 1964.

The Monogram Club resolution, introduced by Ford Rowan (UP), calls for the Campus Affairs Board and the IDC to begin discussions immediately with the administration and the faculty to secure the use of the Monogram Club as social room.

A bill to reorganize the campus orientation committee; a resolution in support of the proposed extension of the Ehringhaus cafeteria and two bills concerning proposed appropriations for communication between legislators were referred back to committee.

Four Legislators Go Back To SP

Four student legislators who withdrew from the Student Party to form a third campus political party announced their return to the SP yesterday.

"A basic ideological disagreement among members of the new party," the Independent Student Party, and a "redirection on the part of the Student Party towards its ideals and traditional activities," were cited as the two principal reasons for the return.

The four legislators re-establishing their membership in the Student Party are: Dick Ellis, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee; George Rosental, chairman of the Finance Committee; Bob Smith, chairman of the Rules Committee; and Bill Bowerman, representative from Town Men's IV. Ellis had been chairman of the ISP.

"We believe that the best way for students to have an active and effective voice in their Student Government is through a democratically-oriented political party open to students from every area of the campus," they said.

"Only through this type of party can strong and representative student self-government be achieved. We believe that the Student Party, although once failing to live up to these principles, has now returned to these ideals.

"In fact, the party had begun to redirect itself even before our withdrawal, although we were not aware of it at the time. Because of this redirection and revitalization our reasons for leaving the party are no longer valid.

"In regard to the ISP, our idea of forming another political party was based mainly upon a general dissatisfaction with the SP on the part of the ISP members. However, there arose some basic and important disagreements within the ISP concerning the nature of a campus political party. Those of us who are returning to the SP felt that a party must provide for an open forum of discussion in which every political opinion—conservative or liberal—has the right to be represented. This was the tradition of the old Student Party, and in calling ourselves the Independent Student Party, we felt we had expressed our commitment to this ideal.

"The other members of the ISP wished to form an exclusively liberal party with fairly strict party discipline. We question not only the desirability of a party of an exclusive nature but the method by which it was to be achieved. A political coalition with the University Party for the office of the Vice-Presidency was part of the ISP plan from its inception. It was also proposed that the University Party provide partial financial backing for the ISP. Since we adhere to the concept of total campus representation through an open forum, and since the University Party does not operate under these principles, we were not happy with the proposed coalition. Finally, when the Student Party returned to the ideals which we hold in common, we could no longer support the idea of coalition.

"These, then are the principal reasons for our return to the Student Party."

UP Is 'All-Campus' Party, Rowan Says

The University Party "is fast becoming the all-campus party," Ford Rowan told a UP meeting last night. Rowan is a former Student Party-endorsed legislator and president of Ehringhaus dormitory.

"If student government is to continue to improve, if student government is to realize its goals, the only hope lies with the UP," he said.

The SP, said Rowan, "does nothing but bicker and talk within its ranks." Vice-President Mike Lawler, possible SP candidate for president, "exemplifies this lack of action."

Rowan, one of eight SP legislators to walk out of the party last month, said, "There may be some who would crawl back on their hands and knees to rattle the dead SP skeletons, but there are others of us who will face the future fearless of the wrath of skeletons."

Rowan said the diferences in the two parties could be seen in personality diferences between Lawler and UP Floorleader Bob Spearman.

He said, "Spearman's philosophy takes joy in converting ideas into actions. It is philosophy of thought, decision and action. The UP has come to represent this — reasoned action."

On the SP: "If they are not disagreeing among themselves then they're elaborating on something that needs action, not just talk. . . . That's the edfect of the SP—they rarely can decide and they seldom act."

Rowan also discussed his overall view of student government. "Regardless of how asinine student government may look sometimes, the fact remains—if we can't govern ourselves in an academic enlightened community, then there is grave doubt as to whether democratic government can exist for long in Chapel Hill, or North Carolina, or the United States for that matter."

"The improvement of the individual within society", said Rowan, "is the reason for student autonomy, not necessarily because

Quota Up In March And April

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy's request for a four-year extension of the draft law was unanimously approved by the House Armed Services Committee Tuesday amid indications that inductions will continue at a high rate at least through spring.

The Defense Department has called for 9,000 and 10,000 draftees for the Army during March and April respectively, as compared to draft quotas of 4,000 each during January and February.

Defense officials said the draft is essential to maintain the strength of the three military services at total of more than a million men.

The present draft law, which was largely inoperative during its first two years, has been on the books since 1948. It was extended for four years in 1959.

The Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines had a strength totaling 2,676,832 on Jan. 31, an increase of nearly 10,000 compared to Dec. 31, with a prospect that the figure will continue to edge upword.

Defense officials never have had any doubt that the draft law which expires July 1 would be renewed.

The committee did not adopt a proposal by the American Civil Liberties Union and various religious groups urging the elimination of a restriction which determines who can qualify as conscientious objectors.

The present law requires that an individual must believe in "a supreme being" in order to be eligible.

A number of witnesses said there were some sincere conscientious objectors who could not meet this test and it was unfair to exclude them. But the suggested amendment to eliminate the requirement was never formally proposed by any committee member.

Enlistments normally total as much or more than the draft. The Pentagon expects 9,600 enlistments against 9,000 in draft inductions this month. But officials believe the numbers of volunteers would fall off snarpuy if the threat of draft were removed.

The high draft rate this spring was attributed to the Army's requirements for men to replace draftees who were inducted during the Berlin crisis of 1961 and who will be getting out of service this fall.

Miss. State's NCAA Entry Protested

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI) — Mounting protests against competing in integrated contests threw a shadow Tuesday over Mississippi St. long-awaited entry into the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) basketball playoffs.

Coach Babe McCarthy and his Southeastern Conference champion Bulldogs, barred three times from NCAA tournaments by the state's "unwritten law" against playing against teams with Negro players, went ahead with their plans to compete in the playoffs.

Five members of the state College Board, which oversees institutions of higher learning in the state, demanded and got a special meeting of the board Saturday in Jackson.

Presumably, the board will decide whether the Bulldogs, ranked seventh in the nation with a 21-5 record, will go ahead and participate in the NCAA regional playoff at East Lansing, Mich. March 15.

Dr. D. W. Colvard, president of Mississippi State, announced Saturday night the Bulldogs would enter the playoff unless his ruling is "hindered by competent authority."

The College Board could reverse the decision which touched off angry reaction. Some members of the legislature threatened to cut the school's state appropriation and Colvard was criticized by many

Terry Sanford Vs. His State
A Battle For A Direction

Terry Sanford has been an able but not always popular governor—largely because he has given the people of North Carolina what they need rather than what they want.

The first choice he faced came only months after his own election, when in the Democratic convention he threw the state's electoral votes behind John F. Kennedy—a choice few North Carolina politicians would have made, even if they believed, as Sanford did, that Kennedy would benefit the state and the nation more.

Months later, Sanford initiated the very unpopular food tax, to finance schools and roads which the state badly needed—whether or not our citizens thought so at the time.

Sanford later pushed an extensive school referendum—and lost—and pushed intensive industry recruitment programs, which may bring to this state the Republicans who will defeat him.

In each of these crusades, Sanford was pushing policies which he believed would help the state even if they shortened his own promising political career. In JFK's nomination, Sanford saw a new domestic confidence; in the school referendum he saw "quality education" and new leadership for a restless state; in the food tax he saw North Carolina as having the best road system in the surrounding 13 Southern states; in the industy hunt he saw the growth of the opposition party but a chance for higher wages across the state.

Terry Sanford will not be elected governor of the state in 1964, and yet he is a brave man, laying his political career on the line for policies which will undoubtedly benefit the people of his native state.

Sanford's latest plan for aiding North Carolina was outlined weeks ago in a speech before the North Carolina Press Institute in Chapel Hill.

"Reluctance to accept the Negro in employment is the greatest single block to his continued progress . . ." Sanford said. "We will do it because our economy cannot afford to have so many people fully or partially unproductive. The time has come," said Sanford, "for Americans to give up unfair discriminations, and to give the Negro a full chance to earn a decent living for his family and to contribute to higher standards for himself and all men."

Sanford then announced a five-point program to establish equal employment opportunities fo Negoes in Noth Carolina:

The establishment of a North Carolina Good Neighbor Council, consisting of 24 "outstanding citizens of the state" and headed by David S. Coltrane, currently special Consultant to the Governor, in order to "encourage employment of qualified people without regard to race and to urge youth to become better tained and qualified fo employment."

Requesting all Mayors and Chairmen of County Commissioners to establish local Good Neighbor Councils.

A memorandum to all heads of state agencies and institutions asking them to formulate policies which do not exclude from employment qualified people because of race.

The conducting of a conference within the next few months for leading state industrialists and businessmen.

The co-operation of church and civic leaders in supporting the objectives of the Good Neighbor Council.

Again, Terry Sanford has gone out on a limb. He has taken a bold stand unprecedented in the South and not always popular within his own state. And he is risking his poiltical future.

But apparently there are things that matter more to Terry Sanford than his own political future. North Carolina's future is one of them. The well-being of all her citizens is another. The equality and prosperity of Tar Heel natives is a third.

For all these ideals, and for he foresight, and personal sacrifice which has gone into them, we should be thankful to Terry Sanford.

He has asked little for himself, dren an important sense of direction.

The Late "Student"

It is practically an adage that "Promptness is the politeness of kings and the duty of common folk everywhere."

And yet that popular quotation is set off against the equally popular understanding that if one's arrival must be tardy, "it's better late than never."

On this campus or on any university campus in the world, we would contend that if one's arrival to a lecture must be tardy, then it's better never than late.

There are few things, few types, more disgusting or worthy of less respect than the negligent "late student."

To see some sharp kid slide into a class, fifteen minutes after the lecture began, paper cup and cigarette in hand, precocious smile flickering across his clever face—it ought to chill the blood of any professor with an ounce of self-respect.

It ought to, but it apparently doesn't.

Few, indeed, are the professors who have been known to raise a voice in objection to the habits of the kid who saunters into class at his own convenience. There seems to be an aura of sanctity which surrounds these guys to the extent that no mere professor would ever think of challenging their right to come and go as they please.

Sure, we are surprised that Bingham Hall does not start its classes fifteen minutes after the hour. (CW)

Initiation Into Muslims

Part II in a series on the Black Muslims.

By HENRY MAYER

It has been said that the "religion of the American Muslims seems to be a peculiar mixture of orthodox Mohammedism and the personal prejudices of Elijah Muhammed." Followers read the Koran daily, worship Allah as the only God, and are instructed to pray five times daily facing Mecca. Moslem dietary proscriptions are also observed. Yet Muhammed's appeal also includes racial hatred, the constant stress upon the irredeemable evil of the white and the need for total separation. Such a position may be traced to the deprivations Elijah Poole underwent in Georgia, and are not necessarily derived from Islamic orthodoxy.

E. U. Eissen-Udom of Harvard suggests, in Black Nationalism: A Search for Identity in America, that the entire Muslim approach reflects the social history of the Negro in America, especially the psychological traumas and personality disturbances to which that history has given rise. Thus Prof. Eissen-Udom sees the entire rhetoric of religion and nationalism not as a tangled knot of inconsistencies, but as a series of items, any one of which may appeal to some Negroes. For him consistency is not a virtue; the Black Muslim appeal — whatever its elements—is significant because once in the fold the Negro gains an identity and a community of shared values in which he is actually goaded into self-improvement.

Elijah Muhammed, however, is no philanthropist. Until he moved to Phoenix last year for reasons of health, the Prophet lived in an elegantly furnished, 18 room house near his Chicago temple for which the Black Muslims paid $40,000 cash. Each Muslim is expected to contribute a substantial portion of his income to the Nation of Islam each year, and other revenues are derived from Muslim-owned restaurants and other business establishments. Although financial records are unavailable, it is believed that much of the Muslim income is used for the purchase of property and for the construction and maintenance of Islamic public schools.

Elijah Muhammed lives well, but it also appears that he finds profit in the exercise of power, this reward being as great or greater than pecuniary gain. It is probably safe to conclude that the Black Muslim movement is not a Sweet Daddy Grace type of operation, in which Daddy Grace is "sweetened" by his flock in exchange for a pinch of religious ecstasy. The Nation of Islam is indeed a community in which all benefit. The religious emphasis is on unity and brotherhood within the community, although this unity is achieved through the hatred of a common "enemy." Granted the movement is subject to charges of exploitation, yet there has never been a satisfactory means of determining the value and price of identity and self-respect.

Recruitment

All Muslims are supposed to act as missionaries at all times, and open meetings are held in each of the 33 temples three times a week. At these sessions, Muslim ministers (the most articulate of whom is the sleek and brilliant Malcolm X) discuss both Elijah's formulation of Islamic precepts and the condition of the Negro in American society. Those who indicate an interest in "converting" to the faith (given the pageantry and emotional fervor of the meeting, this is a sizeable number) sign a card to that effect. Later they are mailed a letter of application which must be copied over in the applicant's own hand. This letter is not accepted until it is literally letter-perfect; all Black Muslims must be able to read and write.

Once the application has been approved, the applicant signs the following oath: "I will forsake all other Gods and religions and will honor only ALLAH." In a temple ceremony the convert exchanges his "slave name" used in the "world of the dead" (contemporary American society) for a variant of "X." "X" is used as both a mystic symbol and as an indication that the old life has been left behind, hence "ex." After taking the oath, the new person is told: "You are not a Negro from this day on. You are now a Muslim, a member of the Nation of Islam with brothers (sisters) throughout the world. You are free." Further instruction in the faith is then given in a series of weekly classes. The whole process is aimed to facilitate withdrawal from society, a reorientation of values and an abandonment of stereotyped Negro dependency.

Estimates of the Muslim membership vary from 250,000 (Elijah Muhammed's own count) to 5-15,000 (Prof. Eissen-Udom). There appears to be a high degree of turnover and dropouts, and an accurate estimate is almost impossible. One thing is certain, however. The Muslims are no fad. They have grown steadily over the past few years, and recently have begun to find acceptance among Southern Negroes. A temple in Durham has swelled from a nucleus of six persons to a group of more than two hundred in less than a year.

Letters To The Editors

Editorial Hit; O. C. Criticized

No 'Vendetta' In Picketing

To the Editors,

The Editor's enthusiasm for entertaining copy is only surpassed by his lack of understanding and information.

I challenge him to account for any "vendetta" as "characteristic of integrationists in this area" or any other area in the United States. Is it a "vendetta" to wish to be treated as any other American citizen? Is it a "vendetta" to wish for the same cultural advantages as other citizens in this area can receive? Is it a "vendetta" to follow the same procedures of protest against segregation as have been followed in the past, for the same purpose?

Is the Editor so sure that the NAACP-Core chapter in Durham wishes "to stifle orderly, peaceful and effective integration"? Is he aware that the chapter and Miss Dent were in contact and trying to avoid direct action even before her theatre opened? Miss Dent and the group's representatives have gone through the first phase of negotiation without any break or change. They are now faced with another phase — direct action; a method which has been used effectively in other areas, including Chapel Hill.

You seem to imply in your editorial that you know of a new means of achieving theatre desegregation: a means which would work more effectively than previous methods used in the North and South. The Durham NAACP-CORE chapter is using that method (negotiation, if not successful, followed by direct action, then more negotiation) which has worked successfully in Louisville, Ky.; Baltimore, Maryland; Austin, Texas, Nashville, Tenn.; Atlanta, Ga., and Chapel Hill, N. C. They are planning to picket the Rialto alone not because they do not appreciate Miss Dent's good intentions, but for the simple fact they have already picketed other theatres in Durham, in hopes of desegregating all of them, and because they are not subject to any restraining order against demonstrating their disapproval of the managements policy at the Rialto. The court case you cite, but fail to elucidate, is an attempt to overthrow a permanent restraining order obtained by Mr. Abercrobie, Miss Dent's help-mate, and owner of the Carolina Theatre. The NAA-CP-CORE chapter does not believe their picketing will be successful "against Miss Dent's theatre when they have failed against other Durham houses", but rather, they do not know. Perhaps you have some knowledge beforehand? They do know, however, that they are not subject to a restraining order at the Rialto, and that they are following the same procedure used against the other Durham houses before, and probably, again.

You asked whether the pickets wanted "equality or revenge" and then answered the question yourself by saying "anybody's guess is as good as ours." Had you asked someone else besides yourself, you would have received a more fruitful answer. You could have asked those people who negotiated. You could have asked those Negroes who have never had the opportunity to see other than B-class movies. (I challenged you to compare the cinema fare offered to Negroes in the South, with that offered to whites in the same area.) You could ask those people who are willing to put their bodies on the "firing line." You could ask and did hear what James Baldwin felt — about the snail's pace of change in racial practices and attitudes in the land of freedom. There are many more "cool cats" gone "cold" waiting for the opportunity to live in dignity. And there are too, many helpful, white and Negro 'liberals' who think they can change the system and make amends without making sacrifices. They are under the impression that good intentions and good works alone, will get them on the honor roll of "good guys" when the score cards of humanity are tallied up. I think Mr. Baldwin would agree that a sacrifice in time might save nine; and this may spare, "the fire the next time." Besides, Old Black Joe has become New Black Joe, and he is not about to wait another 100 years for Mr. Charlie and Miss Anne's good intentions to come true.

Otelia's Habits Not So Good?

To the Editors:

It is re-assuring to know that our lives, our behavior, our manners, and in some cases, even our political future is being guided by such capable hands as those of Otelia Connor.

My sleepless nights would be numerous if I couldn't read the Tar Heel daily, before dashing off to class, and be assured that the guiding light of Otelia will direct me towards the road which will lead me to my proper place in society.

If my memory serves me correctly, and in this case it does, I can remember Miss Connor going through the line in Lenoir Hall with a cigarette dangling from her lips. If one was to examine the same book of manners, which brings Miss Connor all her wisdom, I wonder if we would find that it is very improper for a "lady" to smoke while standing or walking. I also feel that smoking in the cafeteria line doesn't exactly add to the Class A sanitary conditions of Lenoir Hall.

It is my conviction that putting into practice the beliefs which one might advocate might be a sign of a well-mannered and educated individual of the scholastic world.

If at all possible I would like to help the Tar Heel to relinquish the space used daily by Miss Connor to matters of importance and interest to students of this instituion.

In conclusions, let me suggest that this self appointed guardian of the etiquette of the Carolina Gentleman return to the serenity of introspection befitting a member of a generation whose prime has passed, instead of expounding her aged follies to those who could care less.

Hospital Prejudice Cited In Resolution

A resolution "urging the desegregation of the North Carolina Memorial Hospital" was introduced in the Special Session of Student Legislature Monday night. Action on this bill is expected to be taken in Thursday night's meeting.

The resolution, as introduced by Charles Cooper (Ind., TM 4), states that Legislature "deplores and condemns the continued racial segregation of the wards and facilities of Memorial Hospital."

It also says that Legislature "urges the desegregation of the hospital and wholeheartedly supports any requests and or attempts toward desegregation."

If approved copies of this resolution will be sent to the director of the hospital, the Governor, and all daily newspapers in the state, with a circulation over 30,000. Copies will be made available to interested students here.

The following representatives were absent from Student Legislature Monday night: Dick Akers (SP, DM 4); Gordon Appell (SP, DM 3); Kathy Livas (SP, 2W 1); Bill Mittendorf (SP, TM 3); Bob Smith (SP, DM 1); Dave Williams (SP, TM 3); Charles Lefler (SP, DM 3); Bambi Ansley (SP, DW 1); Larry McDevitt (UP, TM 3); Franklin Atkinson (SP, DM 1); Kippy Carter (SP, DM 2); Bob Jones (Ind. TM 1); Eddie Icard (SP, DM 2); Roy Kirk (UP, TM 3) Bill Wuamett (SP, TM 4); and David Henry (UP, TM 3).

Games Here Feature National Track Stars

By LASZLO BIRINYI JR.

The Tenth Annual ACC Indoor Games will be held this Saturday in Chapel Hill. The track and field meet will feature several of the nation's outstanding athletes and will be divided into three divisions: conference, non-conference, and freshman.

In addition to the ACC schools, Furman, Davidson, Richmond, Florida, William and Mary, VPI, and VMI will be entered in the non-conference division. The total meet will comprise 500 participants.

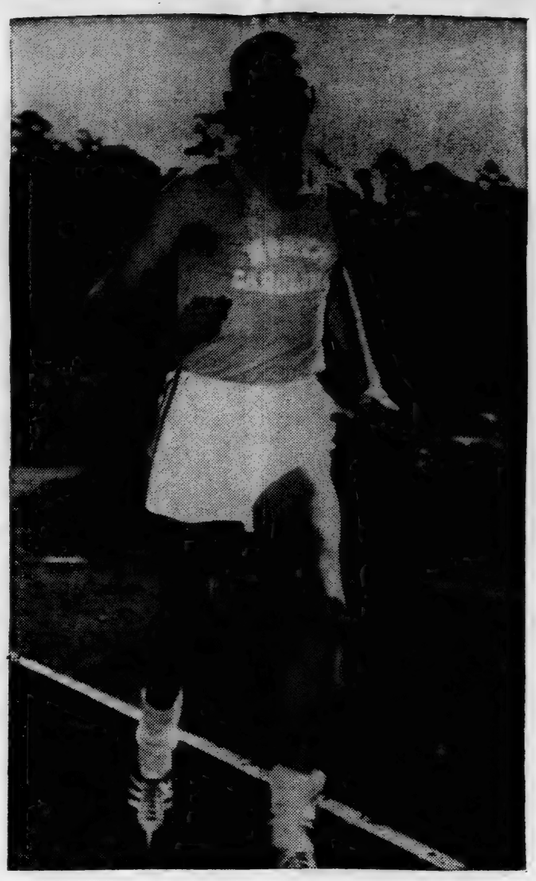
The meet will begin at 10 a.m. with competition in the shot put. The record in this event is 54' 5" set last year by Dick Gesswein of Duke. Gesswein, who finished fourth in the National AAU Indoor Meet, has tossed the iron ball 57 feet this year and should win the event again. Carolina's William Graham, who finished second last year, should provide competition as will Samora of Maryland. A dark horse in this event is Drozdor of Maryland who won the frosh event last year with a heave of 50' 8".

Also beginning at 10 will be the broad jump. The record in this event is 23' 8" set last year by USC's Billy Grambrell. Grambrell is ineligible this year and this leaves the field open. Maryland's Cole, who won the frosh division last year, has the best jump of any of the entries. John Pleasants will compete in this event for Carolina.

Beginning at 1 p.m. will be the high jump. Tom Clark, who set the record last year of 6' 7 3/4" should have no trouble winning this event. Carolina has a good chance to sweep this event, as Clark is backed by Reinard Harkema, who finished fifth last year, and Bill Huffman. Other strong entries are the Maryland duo of Bland and Scherer. Both have cleared 6' 4".

In the hurdles events, Wesley King of Clemson, is a heavy favorite. King scored a triple victory against Carolina in a duel meet and defeated UNC's Jim Brown — another favorite. In the high hurdles, King's teammate Hendrix will give the Tigers a tough combination. In the low hurdles, King holds the record of 7.4 seconds and he is backed there by teammate Wynn. Don Stauffer of Maryland, who finished second last year, is also returning to provide competition for the Clemson hurdlers.

Although he will probably not approach the record of 6.1 held by Olympic medalist Dave Sime, King could also win the 60-yard dash. Clemson is also strong in this event. Behind King are Wynn and Gilbert who finished third and fourth last year. Carolina's entry John McNinch has already lost to King this year.



Starting at 7 p.m. will be one of the meet's highlights, the pole vault. The heavy favorite is John Belitza who set the record of 15' last year. However, Belitza is now one of the world's greatest vaulters. His best effort this year has been 15' ½". Behind Belitza will be Carolina's ace, Heath Whittle, the school record holder. Whittle, who has been winning duel meets with comparative ease, may be motivated Saturday night and clear 15'.

In the running events, Carolina's men should dominate and score heavily. In the 600, Bob Hart, last year's winner will be the favorite. Hart could break the record of 1:12.7. Hart's toughest competition will come from Maryland's Stauffer and Prettyman. Stauffer recently finished fifth in the AAU's in the 1,000 yard run.

Jerry Stuver will lead Carolina in the 880. Also competing for the Tar Heels will be Bob Bennett. Turner of Wake Forest, who finished third last year, should also figure heavily in the race. The dark horse in this event should be Laddie Stover of Clemson. Stover, a former schoolboy great, has several sub two-minute 880's to his credit. However, he has not run actively since last year and this may hurt his chances.

Carolina should also pick up points in the mile where Charlie Little has yet to show his true potential. Little, who is undefeated in dual competition, is capable of a 4:10 or better in this event. The record is 4:13. Dick Van Dyck should provide Little's main competition, but Little has already scored one easy victory over the Blue Devil.

The two-mile run should be one of the most exciting races of the day. Carmine Lunetta, Carolina's ace, is undefeated in the event and has yet to be extended. However, he will face tough competition from John Garten of Maryland who finished third in the event last year and who beat Lunetta in cross-country. Also representing UNC will be Art Maillet. Maillet, who has finished second to Lunetta in every two-mile event, is another runner yet to show his true potential.

CHARLIE LITTLE, unbeaten in Atlantic Coast Conference dual meet competition, will be the favorite in the mile run in the ACC Indoor Games here Saturday.

segregationists.

If Mississippi State is knocked out of the tournament, in which it was almost certain to face a team with Negro players, SEC runnerup Georgia Tech would go. Tech has an overall 21-5 record.

Colvard's decision was applauded by others. Dozens of petitions, some signed by influential businessmen, urged that the Bulldogs enter the NCAA playoffs they were barred from by the "unwritten law" after winning seasons in 1959, 1961 and 1962.

Gov. Ross Barnett, who opposed the entry of Negro James Meredith at the University of Mississippi and is a staunch segregationist, has remained silent on the basketball controversy.

'The Big Search'

Gridders Start Spring Practice

By BOB QUINCY

Spring is just around the corner and that means little green things popping out—like green football candidates.

Coach Jim Hickey of North Carolina suited up his athletes on Monday and he'll have 20 sessions to observe the brash youngsters from the frosh mingling with the returning vets from last fall's wars.

"Our chief program is fundamentals—with a few new offensive wrinkles," said Hickey. "Our chief search is to find capable linebackers."

Co-captain Joe Craver and unsung but efficient Bob Zaback (voted by his teammates the squad's MVP last year) have gone. The coaching staff has decided to shift Guard Clint Eudy to center, where the No. 1 candidate is Glenn Ogburn.

At the linebacking guard, Dick Zarro owns the most experience. Jim Alderman, a tackle and guard of last season, will be tested at this new duty. Alderman, a 220-pound rising senior, has no linebacking experience.

Hickey expects 29 lettermen for duty next fall, but many of them are out for baseball and won't participate this spring in grid drills. Top quarterbacks Junior Edge and Gary Black could become baseball regulars. The annual varsity-alumni football shindig will be held April 6.

Ferg Norton On U. S. Club

One of the hardest-hitting infielders to ever play baseball at UNC has been named to the United States baseball team which will compete in the Pan-American Games at Sao Paulo, Brazil, in May.

Ferg Norton, 1961 co-captain and third-baseman for Coach Walt Rabb's Tar Heels, is now in the service. He completed his training as a jet pilot in the Navy and currently is serving as an instructor at Pensacola, Fla.

Coach Rabb said he was highly pleased on learning of the Raleigh native's selection. "He was an excellent competitor and would have made a fine pro prospect had he not chosen a naval career."

Cincy's Ed Jucker Is Coach Of Year

NEW YORK (UPI) — Ed Jucker of Cincinnati, whose frenzied dedication to basketbal has earned him one of the most remarkable records in college history, Tuesday was voted United Press International coach-of-the-year for 1962-63.

The 45-year-old Jucker, who next week starts the Bearcats in quest of an unprecedented third straight NCAA championship, was elected by a wide margin in a nationwide poll of 263 sports writers and radio-TV broadcasters.

Jucker received 118 votes in the poll, compared to 44 for his closest rival, George Ireland of Loyola (Ill.). Fred Taylor of Ohio State, who won coach-of-the-year honors in 1961 and 1962, was third with 20 votes.

There are some who may say that Jucker's job was made easy by the brilliant array of talent at his command.

His Efforts Important

There are many more, however, particularly his fellow coaches, who will argue that of equal importance in Cincinnati's achievements were Jucker's day-to-day and game-by-game handling of his fine players, his excellent defense-emphasizing coaching and his knack of keeping his boys "up" throughout the rigors of their Missouri Valley Conference schedule.

"This is the highlight of my career," said Jucker upon learning that he had been voted the honor. "It is every coach's dream, of course. I am surprised and happy. Give the credit to my assistants Tay Baker and John Powless and the ballplayers. They made it possible through their sacrifices and supreme effort."

There was a strong feeling among college basketball followers that energetic Jucker was taking on more than he could handle three seasons ago when he replaced his boss, George Smith, as head coach at Cincinnati.

The Bearcats had just completed three outstanding seasons led by Oscar Robertson. But with Robertson graduating, many felt that Cincinnati had nowhere to go but down.

Even Better Record

It is largely to Jucker's credit that Cincinnati did even better during his first three years as head coach than it did with Robertson.

In his first two seasons, Cincinnati compiled 27-3 and 29-2 records, was ranked No. 2 nationally each year and upset top-ranked Ohio State in the finals of the NCAA tournament.

This season, the Bearcats have compiled a 23-1 regular-season record and have been ranked No. 1 nationally every week by the UPI board of coaches.

In three seasons under Jucker, Cincinnati has compiled an astounding record of 79 victories and only 6 defeats.

Folowing the first three in the nationwide voting came: Vic Bubas of Duke, with 14 votes; Ned Wulk, Arizona State, 11 votes; John (Whack) Hyder, Georgia Tech, 8 votes; Harold Anderson, Bowling Green, and Babe McCarthy, Mississippi State, 4 votes each; and Ralph Miller, Wichita; Lou Rossini, New York University, and Bob Mackinnon, Canisius, 3 votes each.

ACC Coaches Name Smith President

UNC basketball coach Dean Smith has been elected president of the Atlantic Coast Conference Basketball Coaches Association. He will succeed Vic Bubas of Duke on July 1.

Bobby Roberts, first year head coach at Clemson, was chosen vice president and South Carolina's new coach, Chuck Noe, was named secretary.

The chief topic under discussion in last weekend's meeting was officiating and the possibility of arranging a more equitable distribution of the services of those officials the coaches consider the most capable among the 25 on the approved list who work ACC games.

JFK Dissatisfied With Rate Of Cuban Arms Removal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy said Wednesday he is not satisfied with the rate at which Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev is pulling Russian troops out of Cuba.

Kennedy told a news conference that he did not have precise information on the number of Red forces withdrawn but made it clear that they were not being pulled out as fast as the United States wanted.

The President ruled out, however for the time being a blockade of Cuba to cut Soviet oil supplies to the island and weaken the Castro regime. Kennedy said a blockade would lead to open arms conflict with the Soviet "and at this time, we do not believe that war in the Caribbean is to the national advantage."

Shortly after the President discussed the Cuban situation, Maj Gen. Alva R. Fitch, the Army's chief of intelligence, said "there are no indications that Soviet ground force units have departed from Cuba" other than those assigned to the missiles which were withdrawn.

Using Caves

Fitch also told the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee investigating the Cuban situation that Cuban caves are being used for underground storage of "much military equipment and supplies," but not strategic missiles.

The Soviet government told the United States in a note the middle of last month that Khrushchev would pull out "several thousand" of his forces from Cuba by March 5. The Soviet is said to have recently had 17,000 military personnel in Cuba, including 5,000 in combat type units.

A Cuban refugee brought into Miami Tuesday said he believes the Russians are trying to fool the United Stotes by removing their troops in the daytime and ringing them back at night.

Other Developments

Cuba occupied a large part of Kennedy's news conference and brought these other developments:

—The President called on all Latin American nations to tighten controls against Cuba-based subversives operating throughout the hemisphere. He said this was one subject he wanted to discuss when he meets later this month in Costa Rica with the presidents of five Central American republics.

—He said four civilian American fliers who died in the Bay of Pigs invasion in April, 1961, were among "a good many Americans in the last 15 years who have served their country in a good many different ways." He said they were serving as volunteers but declined to say specifically whether the men were employed by some other government agency.

—Kennedy defended the intelligence operations which led to the October discovery of offensive Soviet missiles and bombers in Cuba. He said that "in hindsight" it might have been possible to discover the weapons a few days earlier but he was satisfied with the overall job done by the CIA and the Defense Department.

—Replying to criticism of his Cuban policies, Kennedy said he felt the administration was proceeding on the correct path and added: "We have made it clear that we will not permit Cuba to become an offensive threat."

Weapons Hidden In Caves, Expert Says

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Army's chief of intelligence said Wednesday that the Russians are using caves in Cuba to store military equipment and supplies but not long-range missilles.

The report was given the Senate preparedness subcommittee by Maj. Alva R. Fitch, assistant chief of staff for intelligence. He testified at a closed door session but his prepared statement was made available.

Fitch noted there are several thousand caves in Cuba which with the reported addition of dehumidifiers and air conditioning could be used to store military equipment ranging from electronic parts to large items.

He said there is definite knowledge of considerable activity in the cave areas with reports alleging the storage of ammunition, supplies, vehicles and "even aircraft."

In many cases. Fitch said, reports indicate that the cave activity is being carried out entirely by soviet personnel with all Cubans including top military authorities being barred.

But the Army spokesman took issue with claims by Cuban refugees that the Russians secreted strategic missiles in the caves while pretending to remove them in the crisis of last fall.

"While all such reports receive exhaustive analysis," Fitch told the Senate group, "it is our belief that the Soviets did in fact remove all strategic weapons systems that were in Cuba at the time of the quarantine."

He also made these points:

—No nuclear warheads are believed to be in Cuba although they could be used by some of the Russian weapons installed there.

—Heavier and more modern Soviet equipment has been sent to Cuba during a year long buildup. Included are ground - to - ground missiles, anti-tank missiles, tanks, guns and personnel carriers.

—The more sophisticated equipment has not yet been turned over to the Cubans.

The intelligence expert also reported "there are no indications that Soviet ground force units have departed from Cuba" except those who left when the missiles were removed.

Earlier in the day, President Kennedy declared he was dissatisfied with the rate at which the Soviet troops were being pulled out by Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

Pilots Were Recruited, Faubus Says

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus said Wednesday that a dozen Arkansas Air National Guard pilots were secretly recruited for the 1961 Cuban Bay of Pigs invasion and that some flew combat missions. He said Premier Fidel Castro's men shot down one Arkansas Air Guard plane.

"I don't know what he is talking about," Brig. Gen. Frank Bailey, chief of state of the Arkansas Air National Guard, said. "The Air Guard did not have any planes involved."

Bailey said, however, that Faubus may have some information he does not have. Faubus said that as far as he knew, none of the Arkansas fliers was killed or wounded in the ill-fated invasion. He would not name the fliers.

The Defense Department in Washington declined to comment.

Faubus told about Arkansas air national guards' part in the invasion in commenting upon President Kennedy's disclosure that four Alabama Air National Guardsmen were killed in the invasion.

"We have a dozen National Guardsmen based in Nicaragua and some of them flew combat," Faubus said. "This whole thing is a disgrace in American history."

SP Endorses Candidates On Sunday

The Student Party will endorse candidates for the oncoming elections at conventions on Sunday and Tuesday nights of next week.

Sunday night, the officers of the Student Party, and candidates for Senior class officers, editor of the Tar Heel, presidents of the Carolina Athletic Association and the Women's Athletic Association, and delegates for the National Student Association congress will be selected at 8 in Roland Parker 1, 2, and 3.

The candidates for the Big Four in student government and all legislators will be chosen next Tuesday night at 8 in Howell Hall.

It is a Student Party requirement that all members who are to qualify for candidacies must attend at least two meetings within the semester. Any persons who are interested in nominations or party endorsement please contact Phil Baddour at 319 Lewis or the Student Government office in Graham Memorial immediately.

Newspaper Bargaining Is Resumed

NEW YORK (UPI)—Mayor Robert F. Wagner resumed joint negotiations between publishers and striking printers in the 89-day-old New York newspaper dispute Wednesday denying reports the talks were close to collapse.

"We're still in negotiations," Wagner said. "I would assume there would be a number of joint meetings."

The mayor scotched reports that the latest series of talks had bogged down and that he had laid recommended settlement terms of his own before the two parties for consideration.

"I have not given the terms of a settlement to either side," Wagner said. "We are still negotiating."

The two sides met face-to-face for the first time in two days. Tuesday's sessions were separate. They were used to "go over various issues" by themselves, the mayor said.

When Tuesday's 12-hour session recessed at 2 a.m. Wednesday, Wagner said he felt the two sides were ready to begin moving closer together.

Amory Bradford, chairman of the Publishers' Association of New York City, said the automation issue has been narrowed to a point where it will present no problem if agreement is reached on other issues.

Strike leader Bertram A. Powers, president of International Typographical Union (ITU) Local 6, said that wages were the least of the issues.

He reiterated Tuesday that the prime union demands were a common expiration date for contracts, the automation issue and a reduction in working hours.

Chest Auction Offers Many Top Prizes

The Campus Chest will take off with a big bang as the auctioneer's gavel opens the bidding at the Campus Chest Auction Tuesday night in Carroll Hall at 7.

Auctioneers Chuck Wrye and Lee Ferrell will attempt to outdo each other in order to make more money for the Campus Chest.

The list of items up for bids include two steak filets and a bottle of champagne from the Rathskeller, six bar maids from tri-Delt Sorority, straw hats from Milton's, and much more.

Fraternities have offered pledges for car washes and work details, Phi Delta Chi will put up for bids a case of beer, along with TEP; merchants have donated shirts, and jackets, and the Kappa Delta Sorority has offered to make its winning bidder King for a Day.

Proceeds from the Auction will go to the four charities selected this year. They include the World University Service, the American Friends Service, the Panama Exchange, and the Mental Health Clinic at Butner.

Last year the Auction yielded $600 for the Chest Drive. This year, due to the larger number of donations and their quality, the Chest hopes to surpass its goal of $800.

Approval Of Tax Reforms Is Predicted

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy predicted Wednesday that Congress will pass a tax cut bill including "important elements" of the revenue raising reforms he has recommended.

He flatly denied he has abandoned his demands for reforms that would bring in $3.25 billion to offset the $13.5 billion tax reduction he has proposed.

The President told a news conference the combined tax cut and reform program he submitted to Congress is the fairest, most equitable and fiscally responsible approach.

Kennedy was asked if it was correct to interpret his recent speech before a banking group as meaning he would accept a tax cut bill without reforms.

"No, that isn't what I said," he declared.

In urging a combination reform and reduction package, the President said: "I think that the best program is the one we sent up which provides for $13.5 billion in tax reduction and $3.25 billion revenue in tax reform. I think that is the best combination."

"What we will do will depend of course on what kind of bill the Congress enacts," he said, "but my judgment is that they will enact a tax reduction bill which will include important elements of the reforms we sent up."

On other topics, Kennedy:

—Said the four U.S. airmen who were killed during the ill-fated Bay of Pigs invasion attempt were on a revolutionary mission while "serving their country." He did not say whether the men were employed by the Central Intelligence Agency.

—Asserted he is dissatisfied with the rate of the Russian troop removal from Cuba.

—Declared the United States would not agree to any nuclear test ban treaty that would not permit on-site inspection in the Soviet Union. "We would not submit a treaty which did not provide that assurance to the United States Senate," he said. "Nor would the Senate approve it."

—Challenged congressional Republicans to spell out in detail how they would cut his budget by as much as $15 billion. The President noted that the requests for defense spending had been slashed by $13 billion before the budget even went to Congress.

"I think we made a hard budget," Kennedy said. "You may be able to cut some of it. But I think that I want to know where they are going to cut it and whose life is going to be adversely affected by those cuts.."

—Stressed the importance of three bills which are nearing congressional action. They were bills to provide youth job opportunities and training. To train more doctors and dentists and to combat mental illness. He expressed hope all three will be enacted soon.

—Acknowledged that his administration still has "a good many difficulties at home and abroad." Much of the trouble in Europe, Kennedy said, stems from the fact the Soviet threat to Berlin has eased. In summary, he commented: "If you would ask me whether we were quite as well this winter as we were doing in the fall, I would say no."

—Dismissed a charge by New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller that he was appointing "segregationist" federal judges in the South. Kennedy said the judges in the South "have done a remarkable job in fulfilling their oath of office."

WRC To Vote On Changes In Bylaws

By MIKE PUTZEL

The Women's Residence Council (WRC) Tuesday night discussed a series of amendments to their constitution which would remove the Dean of Women's veto power over action taken by the council. The amendments will be voted on next week.

In the present constitution and by-laws the Office of the Dean of Women works in co-operation with the WRC in making social rules governing the women students at the University.

In seven specific places, the constitution requires that the council obtain approval of the Dean or co-operation from the Dean's office before instituting or enforcing new rules.

According to WRC Chairman Diane Blanton, who spoke for the amendments, the administration clauses are not in keeping with the idea that student self-government improves student responsibility. Miss Blanton said that since the WRC is set up as a student government organization, it should be controlled entirely by students.

She stressed, however that the council values the advice of the Dean's office and would plan to maintain contact with it. She pointed out that the amendments would still require the WRC to confer with the Dean on "major policy decisions."

The action came about as a result of the Student Legislature Rules Committee's refusal to ratify the WRC's constitution three weeks ago. The committee was acting on its right to ratify the constitutions of any student organization receiving Student Government funds.

The committee returned the constitution to the WRC and asked that it make certain amendments to make it an autonomous body.

Harry Lloyd, Candidate For Editor

Managing Editor Is Candidate

Harry W. Lloyd, managing editor of the Daily Tar Heel, announced yesterday that he would be a candidate for editor in the April 2 elections.

Lloyd, 21, is a junior from Hillsboro, majoring in journalism. He has been a member of the DTH staff since September, 1960.

"The Daily Tar Heel is a great newspaper," said Lloyd in announcing his candidacy. "I would only hope that I could continue in the tradition of outstanding DTH editors.

"I do not plan any sweeping changes in the paper's policy," he said. "Many of the so called 'ideas' proposed for improving the paper by candidates have been impractical and unworkable. With my exeperience on the paper, I understand the problems that the editor faces and how they can be solved."

Lloyd joined the DTH staff as a sports writer when he was a freshman. In January, 1961, he was named assistant sports editor, and three months later became sports editor.

He wrote a regular column, "The Sports Tabloyd."

In February, 1962, he left the sports desk and alternated as associate editor and managing editor. He has been a co-managing editor since last September, and on several occasions has worked as news editor.

He has also been a photographer and cartoonist.

As a high school senior, Lloyd placed second in the Grantland Rice scholarship competition, a contest to choose the outstanding young sportswriter in the nation. He was a merit scholarship finalist, and presently attends UNC on a Brooks Scholarship. He was a participant in the Freshman Honors Program.

"I think the Tar Heel could be a more entertaining paper to read," Lloyd said. "I want to add an entertainment and review editor, and some regular humor columnists. The paper should pay a lot more attention to feature items.

"One of the large problems faced by the paper is the predominance of advertising which often crowds out news, and especially sports space. I would like to set up a maximum amount of advertising that can be run in one issue, so that the DTH can still be a NEWSpaper.

"The Tar Heel can be improved only if the caliber of people working for it are improved. The Tar Heel staff should be made up of the most competent persons available for the jobs."

Lloyd said that he would work for balance in the paper, both in the editorial and news pages.

"The Tar Heel should be edited by a person who is familiar with its problems—someone who has had experience in all phases of newspaper operation," Lloyd said. "I think I can fulfill all the responsibilities of the office."

'Stop Gambling' U.S. Warns Reds

GENEVA (UPI) — The United States challenged the Soviet Union Wednesday to "stop its numbers game" and get on with a nuclear test ban treaty. But Russia replied that the United States was stalling because it wanted to give nuclear weapons to West Germany.

U. S. Negotiator Charles C. Stelle urged the Soviets to discuss the hows and whys of international on-site inspection of a test ban treaty instead of first trying to determine how many such inspections should be included.

The Russians insist the number of inspections should be fixed before the type of inspection is established. The West rejects this and also wants more inspections than the Russians are offering—seven against three. Stelle said both problems should be discussed in parallel.

The angry Soviet negotiator, Semyon K. Tsarapkin, said it was "obvious" the United States was not prepared to reach any agreement since its foreign policy "is aimed at the nuclear armament of West Germany and the creation of a NATO multilateral nuclear force."

Tsarapkin said the Soviet Union will make no more "concessions" on the nuclear issue until the West accepts the Soviet offer for two or three inspections.

Neutral Burma backed Stelle's proposal for parallel negotiations. Negotiator James Barrington called for slight shifts by both East and West to win an accord since "revolutionary changes" in recent months had brought them closer than ever before.

Renaissance Music Group To Perform

The New York Pro Musica, who play medieval music of Spain, Renaissance music, Italian Baroque, and Elizabethan songs and madrigals, will perform March 13 in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. This is the fourth joint concert sponsored by the Chapel Hill Concert Series and Graham Memorial.

The Pro Musica is a chamber ensemble comprised of four instrumentalists and six vocalists, who sometimes double on bells and percussion.

The early music of the five centuries from 1200 to 1700 is played on musical instruments of that time: recorders, an early transverse flute, cromornes (soft double-reed wind instruments), harpsichord, viola da gamba, bass viol, rebec (medieval fiddle), psaltery, hurdy-gurdy, sackbut (an early form of the trombone), bells and percussion.

The music of the group is claimed to be neither "jazzed up" or exact and dead. The music of Palestrina, Perotin, Dufay, Monteverdi, Isaac, La Sus or Purcell are presented in spirited and pleasing renditions yet authentic.

I. D. cards will be required for the performance.

Others Must Pay UN Dues, U.S. Asserts

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI) — The United States served notice on the United Nations Wednesday that it will pay only its assessed share of future peacekeeping operations and nothing more unless other countries meet their part of the costs.

U. S. Ambassador Francis T. P. Plimpton laid down the policy in a closed meeting of a working group of 21 countries seeking a formula for the financing of future operations like the Congo and the Middle East, which have almost bankrupted the world organization.

Informed sources said Plimpton's declaration was "tough" and caused a stir among the delegates, whose work on a financial policy for presentation to a special session of the General Assembly called for May 14 has thus far been unspectacular.

The refusal of the Soviet Union and its Communist partners, and a number of other countries—notably including France, Belgium, South Africa and some Latin American states—to contribute anything to the peace-keeping costs has caused a U.N. deficit disclosed by Secretary General Thant Tuesday night to be $72 million and likely to increase to $127 million by the end of June.

Although the General Assembly has approved a World Court advisory opinion that peace-keeping costs are legally part of the regular budget subject to legally binding assessment on all members, Latin American countries have been pushing a proposal to have the bulk of such financing levied against the major powers.

Otelia Night To Be Held In Howell

Otelia Connor prolific letter writer and columnist, will speak and answer questions tonight at 8 in Howell Hall.

"An Evening with Otelia Connor", sponsored by the Graham Memorial Current Affairs Committee, was originally scheduled for Feb. 26, but was rescheduled for tonight because of snow.

"From the multitude of letters that have been in The Daily Tar Heel recently, it would appear that interest in Mrs. Connor is at an all time high," organizer Neal Jackson said, "I believe that those who come will find that there is true wisdom underneath her hat. Those of you who disagree with what she has done are especially urged to come and explore the background for her actions."

DeGaulle Drops Meet Plans

Won't See JFK Because 'Countries Think Far Apart'

PARIS (UPI)—President Charles de Gaulle has abandoned any thought of meeting with President Kennedy soon, responsible French government sources said Wednesday.

A Kennedy-De Gaulle meeting this year probably can be ruled out, they said, and explained why:

De Gaulle feels that United States and French thinking on major issues at the moment is hopelessly far apart. He sees no point in re-stating positions with which each is familiar.

The two most glaring issues currently poisoning U. S.-French relations, in De Gaulle's eyes, are the nuclear problem and the Common Market.

Aides said De Gaulle still is irritated over the Nassau agreement between Kennedy and British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan. The agreement provided that the United States would sell Britain sea-borne Polaris missiles and that a multi-national nuclear force would be created inside the North Atlantic Treaty Organization NATO.

Behind His Back

De Gaulle, according to officials who should know, considers the Nassau agreement was reached behind his back and that he then was presented with an accomplished fact and told he could join if he desired.

French sources said he regarded the agreement as one more sign that in United States' eyes France still does not rate the same treatment as Britain.

Furthermore, French officials said, De Gaulle considers the whole NATO nuclear force plan something of a fraud.

All the various setups proposed so far, De Gaulle reasons, go back ultimately to one basic fact — that the United States intends to keep its own finger on the nuclear trigger of any NATO force.

Wants Independent Force

French officials said all this has confirmed De Gaulle's determination to press ahead with his own independent nuclear striking force, which France alone will control.

Aides said De Gaulle also still is irked by what he regards as American attempts to high-pressure Britain into the Common Market. They said that as the negotiations progressed, De Gaulle became progressively more convinced that Macmillan was trying to remold the Common Market along British lines rather than take it as it is and become a member without reservations.

Officials said that until he is convinced Britain has become truly "European" in its htinking — not simply "European" on paper — he will maintain his veto.

For Riding Nude Horses: In Pursuit Of The Ridiculous

We have repeatedly suggested that in this age of the sensitive, searching student, we ought to occasionaly lower our guard, relax our probing intellects, and think a little.

The tendency to take ourselves too seriously is a common malady; and yet as such, it is one from which there are innumerable routes of escape. A person can, if he pursues nonsense with the enthusiasm normally directed to the pursuit of a grade, fairly well manage to lose himself in the realm of the ridiculous.

It is difficult at first, after all today's students are not wont to dilly-dally, but it becomes easier with some little practice and a minimum of research.

For example:

A short while back, the attention of DTH readers was directed to the actions of a group which goes by the initialed name of "SINA;" that is to say, The Society for Indecency to Naked Animals. These are the people who want desperately, frantically to clothe any animal, living we presume, that stands higher than four inches or is longer than six inches.

Don't snicker. They have a cause in which they believe, and this is pretty serious business.

Who knows but that some young co-ed might resent the freedom of the local dogs and shed her cardigan and kilt in protest? Is the office of the Dean of Women to say that a co-ed can't even lead a dog's life? Perhaps so, and therefore we support the SINA, so that the temptation might be removed from the campus.

But we make light of an issue, and, sure, this is not the way of today's student. So let's continue the pursuit of levity in all earnestness — with a serious demeanor, more fitting for troubled times.

* * *

In the latest press release, we are told by SINA that some 250 of its members from the greater Baltimore area have arranged to march on Washington and picket the White House.

Ah, this is the stuff students are made of.

The president of the organization, Mr. G. Clifford Prout, explained that the demonstration would serve a two-fold purpose: First, it is in keeping with the President's physical fitness program, and secondly, it is "a protest against Mrs. Kennedy and daughter Caroline for rading nude horses."

Lest we think they are tardy with their protest, SINA is quick to point out that they have ignored the situation so far "because the President's family have been discreet enough to do most of their riding in private;" however, they act now with the realization that "the continued practice could be detrimental to general public morality. . . ."

We would but suggest that the student of any or all righteous causes note well the sincere and ordered fashion in which it is possible to dissent. Raise your protest high; stand on soap box tall; but don't, no don't, lead the charge astride a naked horse. (CW)

Boondogglers

In politics it is a standing rule that you pay for what you get. If you want somebody to do something for you, you do something for them. This works in UNC campus politics as well.

If you want a bill passed in Legislature, the usual procedure is to be nice to the legislators, smile at them, and make them feel happy.

The Tar Heel always has played this game badly. (We call the game "boondoggling".) We have found it unable to conceal our alternating mirth and displeasure with the antics of the legislators.

Apparently, we've done it again. Several recent editorials on campus politics have angered a number of the august solons. In retribution tonight they will vote against the Tar Heel's bill for three staff reporting salaries. This is to be expected from campus politicians; nothing more should be hoped for.

It is all too predictable — even to the point of being able to name the legislators who probably will vote against the bill:

We congratulate these legislators on saving the body a great deal of time by making up their minds before hearing anything about the bill. (JC)

Black Muslims Law-Abiding

Part III in a series on the Black Muslims.

Although the Nation of Islam has been repudiated by the orthodox Eastern branch of Islam, and its teachings do not always agree with the basic tenets of Islam, the Black Muslim Movement is considered to be a legitimate religion. It rests ultimately upon a belief in one God, as His will is expressed through a prophet. It may be an extremist sect with unorthodox beliefs, but its allegiance is to Allah and an interpretation of His word.

Judge Burnita S. Matthews of the U. S. District Court for the District of Columbia used this definition of religion in ruling (in Fulwood v. Clemmer, July 2, 1962) that Black Muslims are entitled to practice their religion in prisons and cannot be subject to discrimination on that basis. "It is sufficient to say that one concept of a religion calls for a belief in the existence of a Supreme Being controlling the existence of man." Judge Matthews wrote. "That concept of religion is met by the Muslims in that they believe in Allah as a supreme being and as the one true God." Judge Matthews went on to note that it was not the function of the court in that case "to consider the merits or fallacies of a religion, or to praise it or condemn it, however excellent or fanatical or preposterous it may be."

The holding in Fulwood v. Clemmer that the Muslim faith is a religion an dthat its practitioners in prisons are not subject to religious discrimination should be compared with the ruling In re Ferguson, 55 Cal 2nd 667. In that case the Supreme Court of California found that restrictions upon Muslim religious practices in state prisons did not constitute a denial of their right to religious freedom. That holding was based in part upon the 1958 policy of the California Director of Corrections which refused to accord Black Muslims in prisons the privileges of a religious group. The decision was also based upon a provision in the California State Constitution which effectively excepts prisoners from the state guaranties of religious freedom.

Other cases involving Black Muslims include Pierce v. LaVallee, 293 F. 2nd 233 (2nd Cir. 1961) upholding the contention of a Black Muslim prisoner in New York that he had been unfairly denied the right to purchase a copy of the Koran and Sewell V. Pegelow 291 F. 2nd 196 (4th Cir. 1961) holding that the U. S. District Court has jurisdiction to determine claims of Black Muslims prisoners that religious liberty under the First Amendment had been violated by prison discipline rules.

At the present time the Black Muslims are law-abiding. They do not advocate total disobedience to the laws of the United States, although they feel no allegiance to this nation. "If there's one thing we make certain of," Malcolm X has said, "it's that we stay within the law. When you obey the law, the white man has no power over you." The only conflict the Black Muslims as a group have had with United States law has been over draft laws; they refused to register for the draft during World War II and many, including Elijah Muhammed himself, went to jail. Yet, for reasons that are unclear, the Muslims refuse to claim status as conscientious objectors.

Charges that the Black Muslims are a para-military, fascist organization are based largely upon the existence of a military cadre within the Nation of Islam known as the Fruits of Islam. Primarily concerned with security and discipline, the organization appears to be a mixture of secret service and secret police. As an elite guard, the carefully selected and trained group is responsible for the safety of the Muslim leadership, but it also roots out and punishes deviations from the Muslim moral code. The FOI is organized along military lines and holds regular drill sessions. FOI men receive training in judo, wrestling and other methods of self-defense, but charges that weapons training is part of the curriculum have been denied and cannot be proved. New York City policemen have supported the Muslim contention that they are not armed, although the question of training with knives and blackjacks remains undecided.

Poll Not Controversial

To the Editors,

Once again, the University Party has revealed an incredible lack of intelligent reflection and critical thinking. "Incredible" is truly an apt description of the U.P.'s recent 'poll' of 200 students, which allegedly was designed to evaluate campus opinion on the questions of the desirability of three-man dormitory rooms and the need for a new student union building. Well, in the first place, no dorm resident would deny he prefers two-man to three-man rooms, and surely everyone is in favor of a new student union building as well as new facilities everywhere.

In the second place, the 'survey' (if that's what you want to call it) is a farce. Suppose, for a moment, that the questions asked on the survey WERE really controversial. How much weight would you place on a sampling of 200 persons? (Assuming, of course, the survey was conducted at all, which is doubtful.) In fact, all the U.P. 'poll' amounts to is an obvious and amateurish political maneuver to gain publicity. It may be true that in times of political stagnation, a party sometimes must scrape the bottom of the barrel for ideas, but what I want to know is, where did the U.P. ever scrape that one up?

Attack Not Reasonable

To the Editor,

A reply to a mudslinger: Mr. Bobrowski:

Since one-fourth of your recent (Friday, February 22) diatribe against Mr. Thomas commented derogatorily on the appearance and psychological state of many pacifists of your acquaintance, I assume that you are not aware that argumentum ad hominem neither is a valid logical argument nor is it usually very effective when offered to intelligent "minds" (of which I believe you asked for the "loan" from your audience). By analogy, however, we may attribute your mistake to (1) your unreasonableness and/or (2) your uncontrollable frustration at pacifists (I assume your mistake was an honest one). (I also assume that you are always properly dressed.)

Though I am something of a pacifist myself, I "forgive" you. Unfortunately your argument 'against a speaker's message upon the basis of his or his followers' appearance(s)" extends unavoidably to the founders of most of the world's major religions (esp., Christianity) or philosophies, and I fear you may have a harder time avoiding the censure of the more proselytive adherents of same. Ah well, we live and learn. As they say, "mud thrown is ground lost."

Bad Theater Projectors

To the Editors:

As students of the University of North Carolina, citizens of the sovereign state of North Carolina, and members of various religious sects, we would like to express our thanks to the town of Chapel Hill.

We are not thanking you for your many restaurants, for Jeff's or for our God-given ABC stores. Instead we are thanking you for your entertainment houses, commonly called theaters.

In this wonderful town you are privileged to have two outstanding theatres, Carolina and Varsity. We are thanking you not for the Carolina but for the Varsity.

We thank you for the Varsity because it is probably the only theatre in this country that can give more entertainment than just a movie. What other theatre in this land of ours can say that the picture is never in focus? What other theatre can say that the picture is never bright enough? What other theatre can say that the film breaks an average of twice a day? What other theatre can boast of black-outs (no picture—just voice)? After going to flicks in this town for over three years we have seen nothing but this in your Varsity theatre.

Thank you Chapel Hill, Thank you very much.

Craige Officers State Gripes

To the Editors,

For the record, Craige Dormitory has, in the course of the present year won two trophies, supposedly. Craige Dormitory took first place in the all-campus division of the Homecoming Display Contest. Later in the fall semester, Craige also won first place in the Men's Dormitory Division of the "Beat Dook" Parade Contest, sponsoring, at the same time the queen of the parade. During the periods of time preceeding these two contests, the officers of Craige were led to believe that the organization winning these contests would receive trophies. Well, it has been one hell of a long time in waiting. Efforts were made, by the dorm officers, to contact the chairman of each of these organizations. The two persons concerned were are Charles Shaffer, chairman of the Carolina Athletic Association, and Ted Roberson, chairman for the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity of the "Beat Dook" Parade.

Mr. Shaffer has made statements to several of the dorm officers to the effect that the trophy for Craige was in the hands of an engraver and would be awarded to the dormitory within a short period of time. This was, at the most recent instance, over a month ago.

It seems as if Mr. Roberson is more elusive. After a two week stake-out of the PIKA house, with no sign of Ted Roberson, the officers of the dorm have decided that perhaps the dorm might have to give up on that trophy.

In summation, the several officers of the dorm have decided, as the ultimate recourse, that the only way the persons within the dorm, who put forth a great deal of effort and time to further the dormitories cause, could see tangible results, was to issue an appeal through the campus news media. We appeal to the above mentioned two persons to let Craige know whether or not we will receive the above mentioned trophies.

We submit this letter for the residents of Craige Dormitory and ourselves as individuals.

'Hard Facts' On Soviet Cuba

To the Editors,

Viva la revolucion! . . . Who of you has not heard these words of an evening as you tuned your radio? The propinquity of Havana makes the danger from Cuba more apparent and real. The Kennedy Administration has repeatedly glossed over the threat of Cuba and has gone to great lengths to quash the legitimate misgivings of Congress. In his news conference of February 7, President Kennedy asseverated that Cuba was no longer a military threat to the United States and that the paramount danger to the Americas were economic and social. Kennedy maintained his point of view despite the fact that Cuba has trained hundreds of subversives since the revolution, that seventeen thousand Soviet troops remain in Cuba, and that there is good reason to believe that there are still atomic missiles concealed on the island.

Perhaps Kennely's aim in trying to allay the well-rounded fears of the public and of Congress is an attempt to cover up the half-hearted invasion, in which American fighter aircraft given to Cuba during the Batista regime were used against the hapless invaders. Why are we so willing to believe the Russians removed all their atomic missiles from Cuba?

The immutable facts must be faced. The Russians intend to destroy the United States by any means: dissimulation, perfidy, or subversion. Cuban trained revolutionaries will eventually spread Communism throughout South America. The Soviet Union will never abandon its stronghold in the heart of the Free World, which Premier Khrushchev made blatantly clear in a recent speech. Our inaction and credulous acceptance of Soviet claims will eventually destroy us. The waters around the United States are no longer safe. The answer is an ultimatum that all Russians leave Cuba strengthened by the adamant and courageous determination of the people of the United States to make freedom a reality in Cuba. It is almost too late.

Letters Welcome

The editors of the Daily Tar Heel gladly accept letters from students and other members of the University community.

Letters must be free from libel, in good taste, and limited to 300-500 words. They should be typed, double spaced, if possible. Letters on any topic are welcome.

All letters become the property of the Daily Tar Heel, and may be published unless the writer requests otherwise.

VIEW FROM THE HILL

Armistead Maupin, Jr.

Aunt Jemima was coming to town. So last week in Rochester, New York, leaders of the NAACP and the Congress of Racial Equality stormed before the city planning board to formally protest her entry.

It seems a proposal was being considered to build a roadside Aunt Jemima Pancake Kitchen. The outcries that arose from the local racial groups constituted a sudden turn of events for the planning board, which had expected only the customary consideration of traffic problems. As a matter of fact, the Quaker Oats Company had already franchised 31 such shops across the country without a complaint.

Aunt Jemima, according to one NAACP official, is "a mammy-type, handkerchief-head menial." Another labeled her "a negative stereotype of a Negro subservient to a white family."

The fact is Aunt Jemima has been selling her flapjacks for three quarters of a century. And they've been selling (as Newsweek puts it) like like hotcakes. The NAACP's case against the old Negro is the most comical we've heard since The News and Observer officially denounced Little Orphan Annie as a member of The John Birch Society.

Certainly, the Rochester planning board didn't need a brigade of COREmen to inform them that Aunt Jemima is "a mammy-type, handkerchief-head menial." Of course, she's a mammy. As far as we know, no one ever mistook her for Althea Gibson or Marian Anderson.

Well, so what?

Most folks (even backward Southerners) face facts. Everyone recognizes that the mammy is a figure of the past, an image that lives only in the rich lore of our country. And, admittedly, that image has through the years grown into a stereotype. But a "negative" stereotype?

The Negro mammy, as thought of today, was a paragon of generosity, loyalty, self-pride, and industry. If the NAACP considers these qualities "negative", it's high time they reexamined their standards.

The idea that Aunt Jemima is some sort of stigma on the Negro race is too absurd to merit serious consideration.

Me Worry?

The Word, according to Prof. Kahn, Dr. Edward Teller and the U. S. Defense Department, is that bombs are good for you, and anybody who worries about bad health effects from nuclear testing is just a crazy kook.

So there is no need to worry. Just see news item yesterday — "LONDON (UPI) — The level of strontium 90 in British milk in the year ended Sept. 1962, increased by 60 per cent." (JC)

Three Attend Meet On Youth Proposals

Three UNC representatives attended USNSA's National Service Corps Conference in Washington last weekend. The conference of three hundred colleges and universities was called to inform students of the Kennedy administration plans for a Domestic Peace Corps and to advise the President's Study Group on what American students would like to see in such a project.

Anne Lupton, Bob Brown, and Mike Putzel attended the conference from UNC. All three reported that although they were in favor of a domestic Peace Corps, they felt that the students had not been given enough information before the conference to be able to judge the merits of the President's plans.

No legislation regarding the National Service Corps has been introduced in either house of Congress.

Agency Co-Ordination

Resolutions passed by the conference favored a Corps which would work with existing agencies, public and private, to improve health, housing, and educational facilities especially among migrant workers, Indians, and urban slum and low-income areas.

The selection procedure for the Domestic Peace Corps would be essentially the same as the present international corps and would have a maximum first-year enrollment of one thousand, and an enrollment of six thousand for each of the next two years.

Corpsmen would be eligible for draft deferment and would serve for one year with the opportunity of a one year reappointment.

The conference also resolved that the corps would not go into segregated areas or work with segregated agencies.

One of the most controversial resolutions passed by the students dealt with whether or not the Corps should go into areas without the permission of state or local governments.

The resolution passed stated that decisions of the National Service Corps directors to go into blighted areas would not be subject to state government veto.

Harry DeLung, NSA Campus Co-ordinator, announced yesterday that further information on the conference would be available in the Student Government Offices later this week.

Fine Arts Division Discussion Tonight

Tonight WUNC Radio (91.5 FM) will present a discussion entitled the "Fine Arts Division of UNC" on "Carolina Roundtable" at 7 p.m. The discussion will concern the proposed Fine Arts Department at UNC.

Participants in the program will be Dr. John Clayton of the RTVMP Department, Dr. Russell Graves of the Dramatic Art Department, Dr. Joseph Sloane of the Art Department, Dr. Wilton Mason of the Music Department, and Dr. James Gaskin, Moderator, of the English Department.

Carolina Roundtable is a discussion program designed to bring issues of current interest into perspective. Guests are members of the faculty and administration of UNC. During the program listeners are invited to telephone (942-3172) the WUNC studio to direct questions to the panel.

Refugees Asked To Have Control Over Emotions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., gently cautioned Cuban refugees in Miami Wednesday to curb their emotions even when they are provoked by other groups.

Less gently, Fascell warned peace demonstrators that they may be aiding the Communists by preying "upon the emotions of refugees from oppression."

In a speech prepared for House delivery, the Miami congressman said the riot of Cubans Feb. 21 — which he said was provoked by pickets for the Committee for Non-Violent Action — "should not have occurred and should not happen again."

"They would do well to remember," he added, "that in our democracy, we settle our differences through judicial, peaceful means rather than with emotional and riotous outbursts."

In a separate speech, Fascell said the problem of the heavy influx of refugees into Miami was the responsibility of the entire nation.

"Uttering nice words about the wonderful way in which the Miamians have reached to the situation," Fascell said, "was and is no substitute for more equitable actions — actions of other cities states and the federal government to share in greater proportion a burden which is theirs as well."

Auburn Prof To Lecture Here Friday

Dr. Paul L. Lehmann, Auburn Professor of Systematic Theology at Union Theological Seminary in New York, will give two public addresses in Chapel Hill on Friday, March 8th, and Sunday, March 10th. Both lectures will be at 8:00 p.m. in Howell Hall Journalism School).

Dr. Lehmann is a graduate of Ohio State University, Union Theological, and Harvard University. He has taught at Eden Theological School, Wellesley College, University of Zurich and University of Bonn, Princeton Theological, and Harvard Divinity School.

He has published "Forgiveness," "Decisive Issue in Protestant Thought," and his "Ethics" will be published this summer. He was a close friend of Dietrich Bonhoeffer, the martyred German theologian, and has been involved in discussion with the political revolution in Latin America (Brazil, in particular).

Schedule: Friday, March 8th, 8:00 p.m.: "The Decline and Fall of Conscience" (Howell Hall). Saturday, March 9th, 3:00 p.m.: "Theological Method Today" (Presbyterian Student Center — open to everyone interested in contemporary theology). Sunday, March 10th, 11:00 a.m.: Sermon at Presbyterian Church; 8:00 p.m.: "The Ethical Reality of Conscience" (Howell Hall).

Dr. Lehmann is the fifth theological lecturer to be brought to the UNC campus by the Wesley Foundation. Previous lecturers were: Paul Tillich (1958), Carl Michalson (1959), Samuel H. Miller (1960), and Markus Barth (1962).

Fliers 'Served Their Country,' President Says

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy said Wednesday the four American fliers lost during the 1961 Cuban invasion were "serving their country" on a voluntary basis but he left the details a mystery.

Kennedy, at his news conference, declined to answer specifically whether the four were employees of the Central Intelligence Agency or some other government agency.

He said: "I would say that there are a good many Americans in the last 15 years who have served their country in a good many different ways, a good many abroad. Some of them have lost their lives."

In the struggle against communism, he said, it was not always "helpful to our interest" to "go into great detail."

The four aviators, Kennedy said, "were serving their country. The flight that cost them their lives was a voluntary flight and . . . because of the nature of their work it has not been a matter of public record."

Informatian about the airmen was largely obscured until recently when news stories reported that their widows were receiving $225 pensions every two weeks.

Summer Job Registering Still Open

Students looking for summer jobs should register now with the Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall. The registration procedure will explain how the facilities of the Placement Service can help you locate a summer job. Every day new job opportunities are listed with the Placement Service, and students are advised to make early application for summer employment.

A wide variety of positions are available, including such jobs as camp counselling, resort work, social work, sales jobs, research positions in the sciences and mathematics, and administrative positions with various government agencies and business and industrial firms. Some of the openings would be of particular interest to graduate students as well as undergraduates.

Students should take advantage of the interviews now being held on the campus. Several camps are coming to recruit men and women counsellors, and a number of the business firms and government agencies, currently hiring students for full time employment after graduation, are also interviewing solely for summer employment.

Anyone interested in talking with these visiting recruiters or consulting the job listings on file should contact the Placement Service for further information.

Dormitory Spotlight: Joyner

After winning the coveted title of 'Best Dormitory on Campus' in the Interdormitory Council's contest for the past two years, Joyner is well in the running to win the award again this year. The prize is both a cup and a sizeable check. It is given yearly on basis of dorm participation and activities.

Joyner is being led this year by Wes Collins, President; Gordon Appell, I.D.C. Representative; Spencer Barnes, Vice President; and John Medlin, Secretary-Treasurer. The Editor of the Joyner paper is Reed Johnston, who is doing a capable of bringing out a humorous and informative newspaper.

The quiz files, although not the most complete on campus, are at least still in existence. Old quizzes are constantly being sought, as is someone to reorganize the files.

Joyner has again earned the Co-ed Visiting privileges and has 'open house' in their recently redecorated social room every weekend. Also several successful parties have been had with women's dorms on campus and there are occasional stag parties for the residents in the social room. The social committee headed by Spencer Barnes has been especially effective this year, aided by the newly increased social fees.

The executive committee has plans for painting the spacious and well-lighted study room this Spring. Also walls will be installed to divide the study room from the mail box and food and drink machine side.

Joyner has voluntarily contributed to Care and other charity organizations this year and in making plans to support a child overseas as foster parents. This dorm will again have a booth in the Campus Chest Carnival and members of the dorm will aid with the soliciting.

Three of the four Legislative Representatives from District III live in Joyner and report both in dorm meetings and in the dorm newspaper about the activities of the legislature, occasionally even taking opinion polls.

Peace Corps Pay Scales Readjusted

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Revisions in living allowances have brought pay raises to some Peace Corpsmen, pay cuts to others.

Peace Corps officials announced the revisions in Africa, Asia and Latin America Wednesday. They said the changes are part of a continuing effort to insure that the volunteers have living allowances comparable to citizens of the host nation.

Peace Corps volunteers are not salaried. They receive a monthly living allowance while in service. At the end of the tour, they receive a readjustment allowance of $75 for each month of completed service—$1,800 in all.

"The living allowance is designed to let the volunteer live at a level like that of the people with whom he works," the Peace Corps said. "If he's a teacher in Ghana, he gets an allowance similar to a Ghanian teacher. If he's a health worker in Bolivia, he gets about what a Bolivian health worker makes."

In Nigeria, monthly peace corps allowance pay has been reduced from $163 to $149, in Tanganyika from $182 to $160, in Bolivia from $150 to $125 and in Colombia from $150 to $119.

But allowance pay in India has been increased from $63 to $70 a month, and in West Pakistan from $74 to $81.

Adjustments have been made in other countries as well.

Early in the Peace Corps program, which observed its second anniversary March 1, there were complaints from volunteers that they did not have enough money for food, clothing, housing and incidental expenses. There also were reports that some volunteers were living too "high."

The Peace Corps estimated that the cost of its program—including all administration, allowances and equipment—is about $9,000 per volunteer a year.

70 Years After Graduating, Morehead Still Loves UNC

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

With an alertness that belied his 92 years, John Motley Morehead turned to the "Stocks and Bonds" page of his newspaper and scanned the tall columns of figures.

". . . R . . . S . . . T—I think maybe I ought to go back and read my primer again . . . and learn how the alphapet goes. I can't see Union Carbide any place here . . ."

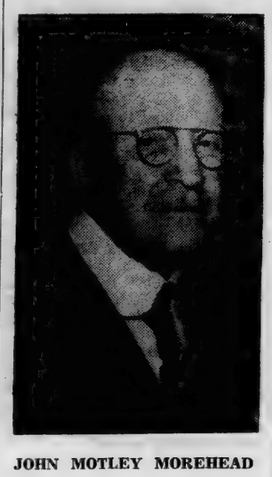
His secretary walked over. "Here, I'm on your payroll, let me do your reading for you."

He surrendered the paper without a struggle.

He waited until she had looked for a minute, then confided in a low voice, "It's on the next page."

Union Carbide was up one and an eighth and the man who serves as a consulting engineering for the company smiled.

It was 8 o'clock Tuesday morning as John Motley Morehead was sitting in the lounge of the Carolina Inn glancing through the Daily Tar Heel and two other state newspapers. He had about 30 minutes to spare before going to the Planetarium to interview the last finalists in this year's scholarship awards.



"Let's go in this smaller room, so we won't bother anybody," he said. After adjourning to the smaller room he said, "You had better sit on my left side. That's my good ear, you know."

Just as we were sitting down, Hugh Chatham, a member of the foundation trustees, came up and spoke to Mr. Morehead and Morehead ask Chatham, "Have you seen John (John Lindsay Morehead) this morning?" Chatham replied that John L. was having breakfast and would pick him up close to 9 a.m.

Morehead pulled his pocketwatch out and said, "It's a quarter past eight now, so I'll be leaving in about half an hour." Also attached to the watch chain was a small key with the Greek letters Phi Beta Kappa.

"Heavens, it's been 70 years since I was a student here," Morehead said when asked to compare UNC now and UNC when he was here. "We had 21 students in our graduating class and today's classes are something like 2100. There are only two of us left, myself and Sheppard Bryan of Atlanta. I've proposed several times that we meet and have a great re-union of the class of '91. But Sheppard has been in the hospital for several years so we haven't been able to get together."

Morehead is most widely known as a designing electro-chemical engineer, but he is also a diplomat, having served for four years as Envoy-Extraordinary and Minister-Plenipotentiary to Sweden under President Hoover. However, Morehead doesn't recommend the diplomatic service.

"I remember that Washington, D. C. would send coded telegrams to me when I was in Stockholm," he said. "One day I got one and it was horribly complicated. I finally figured it out, but I didn't have time to code my answer so I just sent it back in plain English. And you know, they wouldn't pay for it either, so I had to . . .

"They paid me $14,000 but it cost me $100,000 of my own. It was about to break me. About the only thing you get is a social standing. It's kind of like society in Washington. If you don't belong to the senate or if you're not a judge or something, then it's hard to break into that society. When I was in Stockholm, there were were 27 ecuntries there and each embassy ambassador and others would go out each night and drink the native drinks . . . There's an awful lot of entertaining, just like Washington . . .

"They have to pick a man to serve as a diplomat who not only has the money but is willing to spend it. I wouldn't advise it unless a man is independently wealthy and has a year or two to spare."

One good thing about Morehead's stay in Sweden, he was awarded the gold medal, Kungl. Svenska Vetenskopsakademien, the only foreigner ever so honored.

Morehead shifted slightly and adjusted his gray vest which matched his suit. When asked about the man who appointed him to his post in Sweden, Morehead replied, "I don't see Mr. Hoover any more. He's quite ill and not seeing anyone. His doctors don't want him to be bothered too much.

"I used to see him quite often. He's come to my house in Rye quite often, but he's sick now."

Morehead has a good deal of praise for the former President. "Mr. Hoover has done a lot for Stanford University. He built them a fine library and has helped a lot of people through school."

Morehead spotted one of his firends and hollered rather loudly, "Hey!" The friend didn't hear so Morehead whistled at him . . . the kind of whistle that occurs right after you've eaten saltine crackers.

Morehead then turned his toughts to education or as he put it, "mandatory education."

"Education is becoming an essential thing. A girl can't get a job clerking at a dry goods store if she dosen't at least have a high school education.

"You look in these trade papers and journals and if you have a good education, you can write your own ticket.

"The apprentice system of learn while you earn doesn't work anymore. The companies just can't afford it. That day has just gone in this country. The companies today can still train their men but they can't educate them."

The discussion then turned to Morehead's favorite and possibly most famous endeavor, the Morehead Scholarships.

"e though once about including girls in our program, but we received such a ruckus from the girls' schools around that we had to give that program up. Right now, there are no plans to include girls in the scholarship program."

The only restriction on a Morehead scholar is that he cannot get married. "We think they make better students if they devote their full time to their work. A lot of these boys are getting married too young anyway," Morehead said.

Morehead admits that his committee has made a few mistakes in selecting some of the scholars. "If some of the boys make mistakes, we take our hats off and say we're wrong. But so far we've been very fortunate with our boys."

Around this time, several passers-by noticed Mr. Morehead's presence, and several of them dropped by "just to say hello." One lady from New Zealand said she couldn't help but overhear about "some of your wonderful experiences in Sweden, and I just wanted to give my regards."

"Thank you so much for speaking to me," Morehead replied.

Morehead pulled the pocket watch out again. "Quarter till nine," he said. "It's about time for us to leave."

So "Uncle Mot," the man who has crossed the ocean 68 times and has given the University of North Carolina over $17 million walked slowly to the door of the Carolina Inn and made his way to the Morehead Planetarium to "meet his new nephews."

YWCA Executives will be chosen today in elections in all women's dorms and sorority houses from the above nominees. They are (left to right, front to back) Laurie Clark, (and Mary Ellis Carrere, not pictured), vice president; Luck Kennerly and Betty Ward, President; Gayle Matts, treasurer; Alice Stewart, (and Charlotte Wieland not pictured), religious emphasis chairman; Becky Jo Green, Betsy Meade and Barbara Mansfield, secretary; and Sally Rawlings and Hildy Wells, membership chairman.

String Group From Queens To Play Here

The Queens College Quartet will be presented Sunday in Hill Hall by Graham Memorial as a Petite Musicale.

The Quartet was formed in 1960 with the purpose of providing high quality performances of the great works of chamber music on college campuses and for other audiences in southeastern United States.

Rober Snyder, the group's first violinist, studied at the University of Illinois and Indiana University. He holds the Ph.D. in violin and chamber music literature and performance.

Derry Deane, violinist, is a graduate of Eastman School of Music and the University of Illinois. She has won numerous prizes, fellowships, and performer's certificates and has appeared as soloist, recitalist, and chamber musician in Europe and various sections of the United States.

Mary Anne Snyder, violist, was graduated from Queens College and then studied with Roman Totenberg of the Mannes School of Music. She is currently principal violist of the Charlotte Symphony Orchestra.

Roger Drinkall, cellist, is a graduate of the Curtis Institute and the University of Pittsburgh. He has received a number of prizes and is a member of Concert Artists of Pittsburgh.

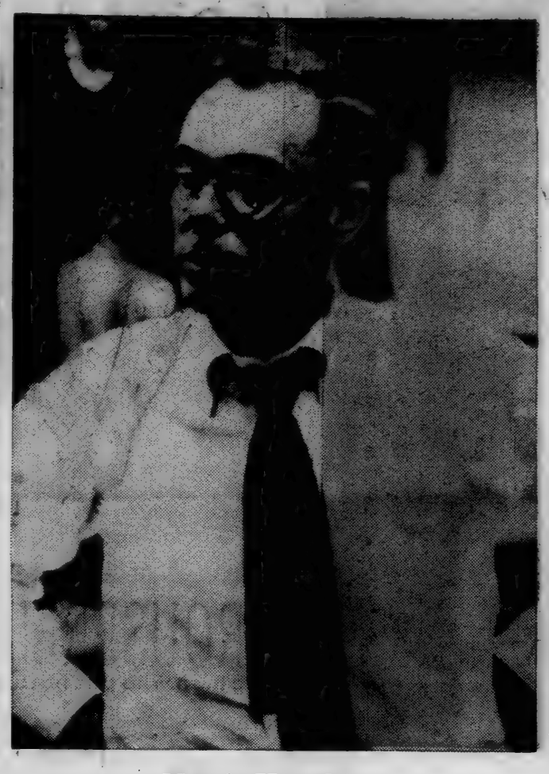
Author To Be Drama Meet Guest

Norris Houghton, nationally prominent author and director, will be a special guest for the first national Outdoor Drama Conference to be held on the University campus, March 22-23, it was announced today by William C. Trotman, director of UNC's Outdoor Drama Institute and director for the first national conference.

Mr. Houghton, a founder of the well-known Phoenix Theatre in New York City and chairman of the Department of Drama and director of the Experimental Theatre at Vassar College, will attend the conference to advise and participate in all seminars and discussions.

Mr. Houghton is interested in every phase of the theatre and has expressed special interest in new mediums such as the outdoor drama which Chapel Hillian Paul Green originated with his play "The Lost Colony."

Designer, director and producer both on and off Broadway, Mr. Houghton spent eight months in Europe on a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1960-61. During three months of that time, he was in the Soviet Union under the Cultural Exchange Agreement between the United States and the USSR. While there, he collected material for his latest book "Return Engagement: A Postscript to 'Moscow Rehearsals.'"



A former member of Princeton University's faculty and Creative Arts Program, Mr. Houghton is also the editor of two anthologies: "Great Houghton has also been on the faculty of Columbia University and Barnard College as well as serving as a visiting lecturer on drama at Smith College, the University of Denver and at Union Theological Seminary.

He is a 1931 summa cum laude graduate of Princeton University and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He was an associate editor of "Theatre Arts" magazine from 1945-48. He is author of "Advance from Broadway" and of "But Not Forgotten," as well as of numerous articles in various magazines.

In 1953, he founded the Phoenix Theatre with T. Edward Hambleton. The two men have presented more than 50 productions running success "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma's Hung You in the Closet I'm Feelin' So Sad."

at the theatre including the long-Russian Short Stories," and "Great Russian Plays."

The Outdoor Drama Conference is open to all interested in any phase of outdoor drama. Conference registration will be held from 12 to 2 p.m. on Friday, March 22. Conference seminars will include discussions on architecture and theatrical design for the outdoor theatre; the symphonic drama as a medium for the playwright; directing and staging the outdoor play; the actor in the open air; and management and promotion of outdoor theatre.

Perry Named Adviser On Education

Francis Keppel, U.S. Commissioner of Education in the Kennedy Administration, has appointed Dean Arnold Perry to the National Advisory Committee on the "Education of Leadership Personnel in Special Education."

Dr. Perry is head of the School of Education here.

The advisory committee on which Dean Perry will serve will make recommendations about graduate fellowships and development of college and university programs for the training of teachers for the mentally handicapped children, under provisions of Public Law 85-926.

Mr. Keppel, former Dean of Harvard University's Education School, has recently undertaken his new duties in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in Washington. Appointment of the advisory committee in the special education problems of which Dean Perry is a member, was one of his initial planning and appointive actions.

Juniors Name Dr. Wallace Top Teacher

Dr. Earle Wallace has been chosen the "Teacher of the Month" for the month of February by the Junior Class.

Dr. Wallace is Assistant Professor of Political Science and Associate Dean of the Graduate School. He has co-authored a political science text book, Politics, U. S. A., and has written numerous articles for the Raleigh News and Observer.

Before World War II, Wallace was a reporter. After finishing his term in the service, he attended the Citadel and received an A.B. in Political Science. After leaving the Citadel he received a M.A. in Political Science at UNC. Dr. Wallace said that he had intended to return to journalism, but he was asked to teach American Government and, as he puts it, "From then on there was no doubt in my mind."

In the classroom, Dr. Wallace attempts to stimulate an interest in politics and government and to teach the basics of the federal system.

Even though his sections usually exceed 200 in enrollment, Wallace teaches just as though he only had 25 there. Questions are welcome at any time during the lecture.

Discussion is not encouraged because Wallace feels that it is much more effective when conducted in small groups. For this reason, he organized the seminar system in Political Science 41.

Final Interviews Slated For 4 UNC Scholarships

CHAPEL HILL—Final interviews for four different sets of scholarships to the University of North Carolina will be conducted during the month of March on the UNC campus, it was announced today by Julian Mason, director of Student Aid and assistant professor of English.

The awards and the dates of the final interviews are: the Herbert Worth Jackson Scholarships, Saturday, March 9; William A. Whitaker Scholarships, Saturday, March 16; and the Marvin B. Smith Jr. Memorial Scholarship and the Andrew Bershak Interfraternity Scholarship, Saturday, March 23.

Final interviews for each of the sets of scholarships will be conducted by members of the UNC Faculty Scholarship Committee along with members of the family or agency awarding the particular scholarships.

The Herbert Worth Jackson Scholarship is valued at $2,800 covering four years of study. It was established 26 years ago as a memorial to the late H. W. Jackson, native North Carolinian and graduate of UNC.

The William A. Whitaker Scholarship program was set up two years ago at the bequest of the late William Asbury Whitaker of New York and Winston-Salem. The scholarships have consisted of stipends of $750 per year, renewable annually by mainteinance of above average grades.

Beginning next fall, the stipend for the Whitaker Scholarships will be determined on a sliding scale based on the need in each individual's case. The amounts of the stipends will vary between $400 and $1,000.

The Marvin B. Smith Jr. Memorial Scholarship provides $400 per year for study at UNC. The scholarship was established in 1946 in memory of Marvin B. Smith Jr., class of 1926, by his parents Mr. and Mrs. Marvin B. Smith Sr., his sister, Alyce, and brother, Harold, of Burlington.

The Andrew Bershak Interfraternity Scholarship is made possible by contributions from the University's social fraternities. It was set up in 1948 as a memorial to Andrew Bershak, class of 1938.

The interfraternity council of the University has just increased the amount of the Bershak Scholarship from $500 to $600 per year of study. The increases will go into effect in the fall of 1963 and will apply to those students already enrolled at UNC and studying under Bershak Scholarships.

Posts Open In Summer Program

Applications are still available for the Experiment in International Living's Summer Ambassador Program. They may be picked up at the information office in Graham Memorial or in "Y" Court.

The International Students' Board is sponsoring the program and will select one undergraduate to receive the scholarship. He or she will choose one of 38 different countries in which to represent UNC. The two-month program consists of a home stay with a native family for approximately five weeks, a two-week tour of the country itself, and a week's visit in a major city. The student will be enabled to see the country from the "inside" and to live and communicate with the people there.

Applicants should be students who are planning to return to UNC next semester and who would be willing to give a report of the program to various campus groups.

The deadline for returning applications is March 15. Any person desiring more information and any group wishing to contribute to the scholarship should contact Aimee Gibson at 968-9012.

Sports On TV

NBC will telecast one of the first-round games of the 26th annual National Invitation Tournament for college basketball teams from Madison Square Garden.

NBC's "Sports International with Bud Palmer" will devote its 90 minutes to the training and working of gun dogs in the United States.

"ABC's Wide World of Sports" covers the "500" stock car championship race at Daytona Beach, Fla., and New England's sled dog races at Wonalancet, N. H.

Welterweight boxing champion Emile Griffith puts his title on the line in a scheduled 15-rounder against Luis Rodriguez of Cuba in a Los Angeles bout to be telecast on ABC's "Fight of the Week."

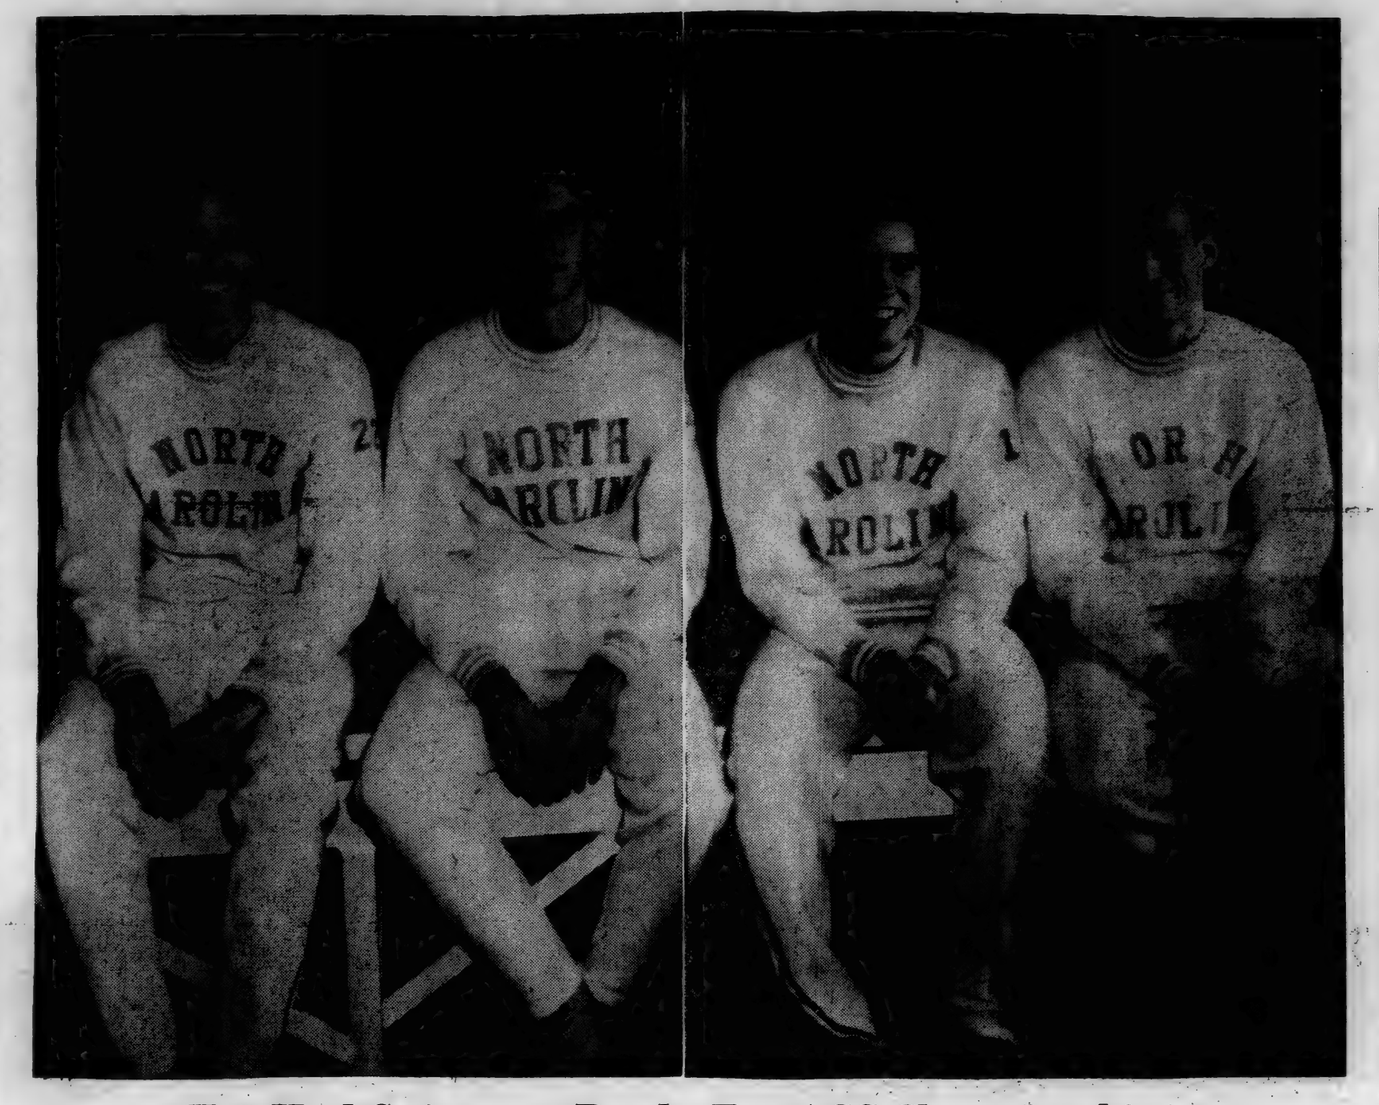
Conference Swimming Finals Start At Raleigh

State, UNC, Terps Collide

A red-hot battle is expected to take place during the next three days when three of the East's top swimming teams collide in the Atlantic Coast Conference Swimming Championships in Raleigh.



The teams—North Carolina State, North Carolina and Maryland—have all breezed past the other swimming teams in the conference. The Wolfpack swimmers are currently in first place and have the best chance to win the conference title on the point-system.

The first-place team in the regular season gets eight points, the second-place team seven points and so on. North Carolina is second with seven points and Maryland third with six points going into the finals.

The point-system will also be used in the finals—and will be added to the regular season results. If State finishes as high as second in the finals, then the Wolfpack can finish no lower than a tie for first for the entire season.

The possibility of a three-way tie for first makes the meet one of the most interesting in the league's history. If Maryland takes the top spot in the finals, Carolina gets second and State finishes third, then each team will finish with 14 points.

Each team is loaded with star performers. State has four All-Americans in Ed Spencer, Bill McGinty, Pete Fogarasy and Smoky Ellis.

In picture at left, four of UNC's distance freestylers await the start of the Atlantic Coast Conference Swimming Championships in Raleigh. The Tar Heels placed second in the regular season and must take first place in the finals to gain undisputed possession of the championship trophy. N. C. State finished first in the regular season. The freestylers (from left to right) are Thad Adams, Frank Lea, Harrison Merrill and Mike Bissell.

Tar Heel Swimmers Ready For ACC Championships

Surprises, Disappointments On Hardwood

Cunningham Dominates UNC Statistics

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Filled with many victories, some surprises and a few disappointments, North Carolina's 1962-63 basketball season must, above all, go down as the year of the coming of Billy Cunningham.

Final statistics just released point up Cunningham's dominance of the Carolina basketball picture in full detail.

Billy's 477 total points and 22.7 average for the 21 games are just a start and, actually, figures that are overshadowed by the rebounding accomplishments of the 6-5 sophomore star.

They are overshadowed by the simple fact that players have come and gone before whose scoring talents and totals have exceeded those of Cunningham. But rebounding? Nobody in UNC history has ever rebounded like Billy Cunningham.

Pete Brennan, in 1956-57, rebounded 332 times over that perfect season; Doug Moe, in 1960-61, averaged 14 rebounds per game. But Cunningham, whose gifted jumping ability accounted for 339 total and 16.1 average retrieves this season, has buried all former board marks forever. His 27 in one game (a 79-63 Charlotte victory over Clemson) is also a new UNC record which may stand for a long time.

Accounting for Cunningham's 22.7 average was a 48.7 field goal percentage. Accounting for Cunningham's failure to average 25-30 points per game was a 61.8 free throw percentage.

Carolina's 15-6 overall record (10-4 in the ACC) and third place league finish may have come as a surprise to many people.

But, actually, UNC played only one team of better ability. As a team, the Tar Heels shot 45.9 per cent (to 43.8 for opponents), rebounded 918 times (to 878 for opponents) and scored 76.6 points a game (to the opposition's 70.8).

In support of Cunningham, UNC had two men in double figures for the year and a third who just missed averaging 10.

Larry Brown's 14.2 average took a back seat this season to the fine all-round floor game which won him a spot on the ACC all-star team.

Yogi Poteet, the other sure-to-be-missed departing guard, averaged 13.4 points.

Brown's high for the year was 27 against Duke in the last game of the regular season. He also reached 20 against Maryland. Poteet hit 21 against Georgia in the season opener and added 20 in the first Virginia game.

Charlie Shaffer came in with a 9.9 scoring mark with a high of 20 against Georgia.

Bryan McSweeney (at 6.8), Ray Respess (at 6:7) and Mike Cooke (at 5 points even) rounded out UNC's scoring averages of note.

Grail-Mural Jamboree To Start On March 16

Milton's Traditional Musings

Our Cupboards in Chapel Hill, Atlanta and Dallas serve as a connoisseur's haven for the exclusive "Old School" styling. Mint sets Milton's especially apart from other smart shops is their ability to offer new exclusive unique items not found elsewhere, and most importantly, at modest sensible quotations.
Whereas the average shop anticipates their needs six months in advance at most, many of the unusual items found in our Cupboards have their gestation period at least a year ahead of the ensuing season. In this way, we can keep ahead and continue to offer our patrons the most unusual innovations well in advance.
Won't you join our connoisseur's club and view our inimitable spring collection?

When the Germans Club presents Count Basie and the Tokens at 8 p.m. tonight in Memorial Hall, Basie's "Big Band Sound" will be competing for attention with 17 pretty sponsors.

The sponsors of members of the Germans Club are almost as popular a tradition at Carolina as the Winter Concert itself.

Sponsors for tonight's concert are top row, left to right: Bonnie Hoyle, Henderson, with Dexter C. Rumsey III, Presilent, of DKE; Patricia Cook, Charlotte, with Jon Brady, Sigma Chi, vice president; Mary Elizabeth Steele, Winston-Salem, with George Watts Carr III, ATO, secretary; Monnette Powers, Jacksonville, Fla., with Brooks Emory, Zeta Psi, treasurer.

Second row: Martha Temple, Paris, France, with Craig Redwine, Sigma Chi; Sara Moss, Washington, N. C., with Sammy Thompson, Zeta Psi.

Third row: Patricia Ann Pritchard, Huntington, W. Va., with William C. Nelson Jr., Phi Gamma Delta; Kren Nelson, Quetta, Pakistan, with James Kirkman III, St. Anthony Hall; Anne Cecil, Thomasville, with Bill Beam, Pi Kappa Alpha.

Fourth row: Anna H. Potter, Snow Hill, with Bill Clapp, Sigma Nu; Charlotte Winstead, Roxboro, with Gardiner Garrard, DKE; Peggy Humpfer, Salt Lake City, Utah, with Neil Harrell, SAE.

Chinese Attack US Reds

TOKYO (UPI) — Communist China attacked the American Communist party Thursday for supporting Soviet policy on Cuba and accused it of willingness to "sing the praises on President Kennedy."

The Communist New China News Agency, monitored here, added the American party to its attacks on Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev and the foreign Communists who agree with his policy of peaceful coexistence.

Quoting an editorial in the Peking People's Daily, it charged that the American party, by criticizing the Chinese demands for a tough Communist stand in Cuba, "confounded right and wrong."

In New York, American Communist party spokesman Arnold Johnson called the Chinese attack "twisted . . . . distorted." He said there was "no support for Kennedy or for the blockade" in the American Communist statement but only backing for Khrushchev's stand, which he said avoided war and kept Cuba in the Communist camp.

Peking disclosed in the same attack that although it still threatens to "liberate" Nationalist-held Formosa, "we are striving to solve the question of effecting the withdrawal of U. S. armed forces from Taiwan Formosa and the Taiwan Strait" through the ambassadorial meetings between the Chinese and U. S. representatives in Warsaw.

The New China attack followed similar criticisms of the Italian and Yugoslav parties, which support Khrushchev against the Chinese had line in foreign policy.

Moscow gave an implied answer Thursday to these attacks in a pravda editorial against left-wing communism.

Have Asked U.S. To Grant Asylum

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A half-million Cubans—more than 7 per cent of the island's population—have asked the United States to grant them asylum from the Castro regime during the past two years.

This was reported Thursday by officials elaborating on statements by Secretary of State Dean Rusk in a radio interview. Rusk said about 200,000 Cubans had left the island since Fidel Castro came to power in 1959 and "several hundred thousand" more want to leave.

Officials said in elaboration that slightly more than 500,000 have sought "visa waivers" from the U. S. government since January, 1961. About 100,000 have been admitted to the United States, leaving 300,000 still waiting in Cuba.

About 100,000 applications have been denied as ineligible under immigration laws.

Population Almost 7 Million

According to United Nations estimates, Cuba had a population of 6,933,000 in 1961.

Prospects for Cubans on the waiting list are not bright at present. Before the missile crisis last October, Cubans arrived at the rate of 7,000 to 8,000 a month. Since then a few groups have arrived on returning ransom ships. But the flow has slowed because regular commercial transportation is not available.

The visa waivers are granted under a provision of the immigration law that permits special admission of certain people fleeing Communist regimes, including close relatives of people already in this country. The provision also applies to children who otherwise would be Communist indoctrinated.

Rusk said in his interview (AFL-CIO—Washington Reports to the People) that "there is great and growing discontent" in Cuba.

Will Be Free

"There is no question whatever in my mind that the Cuban people will again be free," he said. "But we cannot be precise today about just how and when this will come about."

Campus Chest To Benefit American Friends Group

One of the four charities benefitting from the 1963 Campus Chest is the American Friends Service Committee.

The American Friends Service Committee includes volunteer workers from varying races, religions, occupations and political opinions.

These volunteers share in the financial responsibility of the program, and last year the AFSC helped 900 students. The work with students is one aspect of an extensive international effort to build a foundation for a peaceful world.

The AFSC also sends aid to underdeveloped countries. There are projects for community improvement and social agencies that work in recreational activities. The volunteers work with mental hospitals or emotionally disturbed children and the mentally retarded.

Under the Voluntary International Service Assignments young people are carefully trained to take specific jobs in our community and abroad. Projects are now underway in Tanganyika, India, Germany, and Haiti. Major organizations under the AFSC program are overseas workcamps which began in Europe. One of its most successful and valuable projects recently was a series of reciprocal study seminars with Russian youth organizations.

AFSC thinks the knowledge of people, customs, and languages that comes from working alongside them is the greatest reward. This nosectarian service committee is an appropriate channel for funds contributed by the Campus Chest.

Di-Phi Urges Allowing Coeds In Men's Dorms

By CHUCK NEELY

"A resolution advocating the opening of all men's dormitory rooms to female guests during specified hours" was passed by the Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society Tuesday night after a stormy debate.

The resolution, introduced by Rep. Charles Neely, was passed by the Society by a vote of 6-2, and by the Society and guests by a vote of 7-3. Debate centered around the practicality and the possible consequences of opening men's dormitory rooms to women guests.

Opponents of the resolution debated that students would take advantage of the situation and that immorality would increase. They further said that many of the dorm rooms were unsuitable, and that dorm social rooms could be renovated and improved.

Backers of the resolution said that those who would take advantage of the proposed system could probably accomplish their objectives in some other place. It was pointed out that most dorm rooms could be made very suitable for small parties, while few dorm men would ever wish to take their dates to a dorm social room in any condition. It was argued that there is a tremendous lack of social facilities at Carolina and that implementation of the resolution would do much to improve these conditions.

Speakers in favor of the resolution also pointed out that many schools across the nation already have such plans in use, and that they have been very successful in these schools. Finally, it was stated that if male students were mature enough to be at Carolina, they were mature enough to be entrusted with the privilege and responsibility of having female guests in their rooms.

Rep. Hubert Hawkins introduced an amendment which added a fourth article condemning the "in loco parentis" attitude of the administration and of the parents in North Carolina to whom the administration is responsible. The amendment was passed.

Conditional Rep. Josephine Loveland was initiated into the Society after her application for full membership was passed upon by the Society.

Urban Design Topic Of Talks Here Next Week

Morton Hoppenfeld, nationally recognized authority on urban design, will give two talks at UNC next week.

On Monday, March 11 Hoppenfeld will speak on the subject "The City as Seen by an Urban Designer." On Tuesday the topic will be "An Approach to the Design of Cities." Both talks will be open to the public.

Hoppenfeld is presently an urban designer with the National Capital Planning Commission, Washington, D. C. He has done architectural work with firms in New York, Los Angeles and Berkeley. He has also done city planning work for Richmond and Berkeley in California and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Hoppenfeld presently teaches Urban Renewal and Urban Design at Howard University in Washington. In 1952 he was awarded a Fulbright Fellowship to study in London. He has been published widely in professional journals of Planning and Architecture, and is a member of the American Institute of Planners, the American Institute of Architects and the International Federation of Housing and Planning. Mr. Hoppenfeld's talks are being sponsored by the Planners' Forum and the Department of City and Regional Planning.

PUBLIC HEALTH CONFERENCE

Graduate students in the Department of Health Education, School of Public Health, will sponsor a Spring Education Conference on Friday, March 8th, at the school.man of the Program.

First item on the agenda will be a debate on the topic: Resolved—The Health Education Specialist Has a Place on the Health Team.

The afternoon session, which will follow luncheon at Lenoir Hall, will open a talk on "International Programs in Health Education," by Mr. William Darity.

Lawler Urges SP To Be Independent Of Administration

By DIANE HILE

"Now the Student Party will express the profits of its recent evaluation of itself," said Mike Lawler, vice president of the student body, to the Student Party members Wednesday night.

"We believe in the student perspective and its importance. Raise our voices then to place students on faculty committees; to place the president of the IDC on the Faculty Committee on Discipline along with honor council people. We must champion a concept of the presidential assistant who is dynamic and is not just a political appointee.

"Do not champion the 'politics of the image'," Lawler continued, "unless that image be of independent thought—thought that affirms the virtues of free debate no matter how slow nor how like a three-ring circus it can get at times.

"We want thought that will not sacrifice principle to expediency; thought that will commit itself to a Student Government directed at the education of its citizens, that they might play their part in the decisions of government and become more creative and contributing individuals; thought committed to the welfare of the student body with no qualifications of living unit, race, class or political importance; thought dedicated to expand the opportunities for the students of this University."

Lawler, speaking on the "Student Government and the Student Party," further stated the party position. He said he felt that the party commitment of an inclusive form of government is served by our maintainance of critical attitude and affirmation of freedom of opinion, so that any minority may become the majority.

"This party's members must always speak with each other and more important, with the people, not at them and not to them. Let us recognize the task of subduing those more inclusive causes of our varied difficulties.

"There is an inherent direction and a more enlightened electorate from such a critical, constructive posture," Lawler continued. "From the mundane to the sublime we can see this quality. We can voice our endorsement for the pathways of communication which are both structural and personal between the legislative branch and the judicial branch. And again between the Y, legislature, and for example the academic affairs committee.

"From this communication, from your critical posture . . . will come the solutions to the causes which are behind the effects which are so apparent.

Lawler compared the Student Government to "this ole house" of pop tune fame a couple of years ago.

"The song commented on the state of disrepair of 'this ole house' and questioned whether it would long endure (to paraphrase Mr. Lincoln). Ours will endure. That is not the question. The question is—as Inman Allen has stated—a question of 'being.' What is the condition of our house?

"It is somehow important that with great regularity the past two years has seen a published and spoken unanimity of opinion as to the ills of the body politic: geographical apportioned judicial systems were proposed to you and

BANDCONCERT

Eleven maestros will conduct one band group here tonight at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

UNC Professor Herbert Fred will turn his baton over to ten other conductors when the UNC Symphonic Ensemble plays in concert for the national convention of the American Bandmasters Association.

Over 200 bandmasters from all over the United States and Canada will attend.

Guest conductors will include nine from outside North Carolina, including conductors of bands of the U. S. Navy, Ohio State, University of Illinois, the National Music Camp, at Interlochen; and others.

Prof. Earl Slocum, president of the American Bandmasters Association, and member of the UNC music faculty over 30 years, will also conduct.

Mennen Williams, Frank P. Graham Here For Speeches

G. Mennen Williams, Frank Porter Graham, and Mrs. Marion H. McVitty will be featured speakers for the 13th annual Conference on World Affairs to be held at Carroll Hall Thursday, March 14.

Williams, past governor of Michigan and now U. S. Department of State's assistant secretary for African Affairs, will speak on "Democracy and the Emerging Nations" at 11 a.m.

Mrs. McVitty, official United Nations observer for the United World Federalists, Inc. of New York City, will speak on "Nations and the Emerging Democracy" at 10 a.m.

Frank Porter Graham, United Nations mediator, will give the concluding remarks of the conference at 3:30 p.m. Graham will speak on "An Example of Mediation As Background for one Emerging Nation."

The conference will begin at 9 a.m. with a film entitled "Pilot for a Peace Corps" will be shown. The film is introduced by President Kennedy, contains comments by Sargent Shriver, director of the Peace Corps, and is narrated by Edward R. Murrow.

The conference officially convenes at 10 a.m. with a welcome by Consolidated University President William C. Friday.

A luncheon will be held at noon in the Carolina Inn Ballroom. Mrs. McVitty will also speak at the luncheon on the topic "Is Disarmament Practical?" Mrs. McVitty is editor of the Independent Observer, a periodical concerning the U. N.

Afternoon discussion groups on Africa, India, Latin America, and Southeast Asia will meet in Hanes and Gardner Halls beginning at 2 p.m.

Dr. J. Harris Proctor of Duke University will speak on Africa, with the Reverend Mr. Neal Hughley of North Carolina presiding. Resource persons for this session will be Dr. Caulbert A. Jones of North Carolina College and Dr. Guy Johnson of UNC.

'ISP Doesn't Exist' Says Legislator

Charles Cooper, chairman of the Judicial Committee of Student Legislature and one of eight legislators who broke away from the Student Party several weeks ago, yesterday released the following statement to the Daily Tar Heel:

"AS OF FEBRUARY 27TH, I have not been a member of the ISP. At that time I wrote a letter to Ford Rowan stating that I was to be no longer considered a member because it has not and does not exist.

"I feel that a party that was born amidst much repetition of the phrase "political realities" should admit to itself the reality that the ISP does not exist. I am still in agreement with the intent and purpose of the party but do not think that it is reasonable to continue to delude ourselves by thinking that we are members of a non-existent political entity. I have asked Ford to publicly declare to all concerned that the ISP can no longer realistically be said to exist."

COUNCIL CANDIDATES

Honor council candidates will meet Monday at 6:30 p.m. in 203 Alumni. The meeting is compulsory for endorsements for both men's and women's honor councils.

Candidates will hear talks by the Attorney General, the chairmen of the two Honor Councils, and the president of the student body.

Candidates are urged to bring paper and pencil since they will be tested Wednesday night on material taken from these talks.

All interested persons must go through this orientation program in order to run for Honor Council positions. Those missing Monday night's meeting will be dropped from the program and will there fore be ineligible to run.

The Liberal Hour & The Know-Nothings

The Student Party is a unique body. It has one of the finest traditions and some of the grandest names of any campus political party in America. In years past it has acted with distinguishing vigor and courage in situations where other student groups have faltered and failed.

Most initiative for student government in the past fifteen years has come from the Student Party. Its energy has been expended in broadening student government's base, in including more students in its functions, in sounding out and then acting on controversial proposals, and in advancing the causes of dormitory improvements and "liberal" political ideals.

* * *

The SP attracts members by its two traditional concerns — an expanded, stronger student government; and a student government interested in all segments of the campus. Translated into campaign oratory, this means campus "liberalism" and the dorm man.

Because of its dual attraction the SP is often split on major political issues. In fact, the party has become an example of institutionalized schitzophrenia — with permanent disagreement built into its "open-forum" nature.

The present makeup of the party reflects this split. On the one hand are the Traditionalists — those whose prime concern is the overall entrance of student government into the lives of the student, and who expound the traditional liberal views of the party. Foremost active Traditionalist is Mike Lawler, student body vice-president.

With a vastly different set of ideals and goals is the other segment of the party — what we call the Know-Nothings. This group has no interest in liberal legislation (or any other kind, for that matter) other than to stop it.

From last April to February the Know-Nothings have reigned supreme over the SP, electing their own officers and hindering the legislative activities of fellow party members.

Comes March and a change of heart for the Know-Nothings. Elections are not far away and they don't have a suitable candidate (one who has always stood for nothing, who now stands for nothing, and who will never stand for anything, no matter what the temptations).

The Traditionalists suddenly find themselves listened to, their ideas accepted with open arms, and friendly smiles all around. Vice-President Lawler is given a standing ovation after his speech Wednesday night. (How long has it been since the SP "stood", or even moved for you, Mike?)

Since his election last spring, he has been a politician without a party; the SP has not heeded his words, has not followed where he has sought to lead, has refused to accept the political fact that he was their lone winning 'Big Four' candidate last spring. But now it's all changed and Lawler again can be of use to the party — because he is the lone person given any chance to defeat a strong University Party slate this spring.

* * *

So, the Liberal Hour has returned — for the moment. And if he chooses to run, Lawler will be nominated for president. But if he wins, things will go back to normal for the Student Party — the Know-Nothings will ignore his leadership and attempt to maintain control of the party.

But for the moment, the cry is, "Run, Lawler; for the salvation, yea, for the existence of the Student Party." (JC)

Uncle Mot's Boys

John Motley Morehead is a fine man. Everyone at UNC knows this. Everyone knows what he has done for the University with the planetarium, bell tower and Morehead Scholarships.

He has contributed more money to the University than any other man. In recognition of his contributions and interest in the school's welfare, he has become one of UNC's most honored alumni and the subject of an annual John Motley Morehead Day. Because of this feeling, members of the University community have looked the other way when his actions seemed a little less than admirable.

Tuesday night "Uncle Mot" appeared on television to present his 53 Morehead scholars for the coming year. His 53 boys, said Mr. Morehead, are tall, strong, heavy —"and all white."

Needless to say, none of "Uncle Mot's" scholarly few are chosen from among the Negro high schools of North Carolina. Since no schools are on his "approved" list, we assume Mr. Morehead feels no Negro graduate could possibly possess the sterling qualities of intellect and physical prowess needed to be a Morehead Scholar.

There is one problem which "Uncle Mot" has yet to face: what if one of the Northern prep schools he has so painstakingly wooed, sends him a dark-skinned scholar-to-be? Ah, the problems of being a benefactor. . . . (JC)

Black Muslims' Cries: Real Ones

(This is the fourth and final part in the series on the Black Muslims — On their political orientation.)

The press has devoted much attention to the Muslim's demand that the United States cede several states to the Nation of Islam in partial payment for the indignities heaped upon the black man in the past. However, Professor Eric Lincoln in The Black Muslims in America as well as Prof. Eissen-Udom believe that this demand is used mainly as a device for emphasizing in a dramatic fashion the value of owning property to the flock.

This is yet another example of the deep ambiguities between Muslim rhetoric and practice, since the idea of acquiring several states is not being aggressively pushed at present. For the most part, in fact, the Muslims are apolitical. They are urged not to exercise their voting franchise because this is participation in the white political process which is by nature both sinful and corrupt. Malcolm X, however, has stressed on several occasions the latent political power of the Nation of Islam, so the position here is most unclear.

Because the Black Muslims advocate separation of the races, regard the U. S. Government as a tool of the devil ("run by devils for devils") and utilize the concept of the War of Armageddon in their rhetoric, it is suggested that they might be subject to prosecution under the Smith Act. Yet the application of the Act is unclear in this instance. The Muslims are not advocating over-throw of the government; their religion predicts it. While waiting for Allah to work his will, the Muslims are preparing themselves by establishing a separate economic and social community. This is another manifestation of the millenium phenomenon common to many religions and is a type of activity which is not ordinarily deemed to fall within the purview of the Smith Act.

There are so many uncertainties, however, surrounding the Black Muslims that their political orientation must be investigated more thoroughly. Can one distinguish between a rhetoric of militancy and more subdued practice, or does the Smith Act encompass both? Bloc voting or other political participation by the Black Muslims at some future date would not necessarily make the organization a political rather than a religious group. Many religious groups, for example, took an active part in the 1960 Presidential campaign. Since the Muslims do indeed challenge the entire American social and political fabric, it is extremely difficult to remain objective when evaluating the Muslim's political position; hence, there have been repeated calls for investigation by that well-known paragon of American principles, the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

* * *

Professor Eissen-Udon offers the following summary of the Black Muslim movement:

"The Nation of Islam represents an esoteric in-group struggle to provide standards by which the social, cultural, and moral life of the Negro masses can be raised to a meaningful community fabric. It seeks an outlet for Negro striving and performance . . . combining the attractions of religion, nationalism, and political "pie in the sky" with a peculiar sense of belonging and achievement. . . . It assists its members to strive for traditional American middle class virtues while maintaining their identity with the Negro community . . . these values are interpreted for members via the dogma of Islam, which in a direct and uncompromising way assists them to overcome lower class values which are held to impede advancement of the Negro masses."

In many ways, then, the Muslims are an unknown quantity. Their positive aspirations can be readily understood, but the strange dogma and practices tend to place their practical program of self-improvement in a suspicious light. Much of the doctrine is offensive; how much of it is believed is unknown. Although the need for remedying current social dislocations is great, the way of hate is unacceptable. The Muslims may indeed be the gadflies of the Negro movement and by emphasizing the extreme may secure advancement for the more moderate majority.

The goal of human dignity, however, cannot be realized from a platform of hatred and contemptuous intolerances. By refusing to acknowledge, in James Baldwin's phrase, "the transcendance of the realities of color, of nations, and of altars," The Black Muslims negate much that is fine in the human dream. Their cries are real ones, and given the burdens of their race, it is perhaps presumptuous to ask for still more love. The Muslims are trying to tell white America that there is sickness in the land which must be cured, and if the message is heard and acted upon, then the movement will lose its appeal. If the cries fall on deaf ears, love will indeed be pushed aside by hate, and who will have the right to protest?

Sanford & Bennett

Campus Careers Of Two Politicians

By TOM McKNIGHT
In The Mooresville Tribune

The most bizarre political wedding in all of North Carolina's long history took place when Bert Bennett, the so-called ultraconservative, agreed to manage the gubernatorial campaign of Terry Sanford, the so-called ultra-liberal.

So far as we know, the inside story of this merger has never before been published. It comes to us from close mutual friends of the two men. We have never discussed it with either of them, but the evidence is conclusive that the story is correct.

Terry Sanford belonged to no social fraternity at the University of North Carolina. He came to Chapel Hill from a home of modest circumstances, one in which his mother's salary as a public school teacher was a strong financial factor. But Terry came to the University already deeply interested in politics and government.

Bert Bennett came to the University from a family of considerable wealth, was quickly tapped by one of the leading social fraternities on the campus. And Bert, too, came to Chapel Hill with politics and government buzzing in his young mind.

The University of North Carolina campus is a political hot-bed. At few places are contests for the multitude of offices and honors more fiercely fought than on the University campus.

It was natural that through the years two major campus parties would come into being and clash at the drop of every election hat. It was, to put it in raw perspective, the have-nots versus the have-gots, in short the fraternity population versus the nonfraternity population.

As far back as 30 years ago the non-fraternity group became known officially as the Student Party, the fraternity faction as the University Party. There is, of course, a crossing of political lines among the student body, but it is the exception rather than the rule.

It was inevitable that Terry Sanford gravitate to the leadership of the Student Party, and just as inevitable that Bert Bennett become one of the leaders in the University Party. They were not classmates, but both left and came back to campus on two occasions and were contemporaries there.

Bert and Terry were bitter political enemies at the University of North Carolina. It was not because they lacked respect for each other, but because it is the American tradition that the heads of opposing political factions accuse each other of stealing sheep, yea even convict each other without benefit of judge or jury.

The years passed, Terry became a Fayetteville lawyer, then the state campaign manager for Governor Kerr Scott in his successful bid for the U. S. Senate.

Terry was a natural to consolidate the "branch-head boys" behind Scott. After all, hadn't he won his political spurs learning and speaking the language of the have-nots on the University campus? And it was the yote of the "branch-head boys" that spelled the difference between victory and defeat in Scott's senatorial fight.

When Terry decided to run for Governor, he knew he could maneuver among farmers, laborers, and small businessmen. But he was badly in need of a man who could work the other side of the street, a staunch Democrat who could discuss the campaign issues in terms of millions rather than in terms of bushels-to-the-acre and the 40-hour week.

Who was better qualified for this assignment than his old campus enemy, Bert Bennett?

Terry flew to Winston-Salem and bearded the lion in his office den. "Bert," he said, "I'm going to run for Governor and I want you to manage my campaign!"

The story we get is that Bert buzzed his secretary for the smelling salts and, sufficiently recovered, replied, "Terry, I'm flattered, of course, but I don't know that I could even vote for you, much less manage your campaign."

In three hours and 10 minutes Terry outlined to Bert his dreams for a better North Carolina. He told Bert of his goal to give every child in North Carolina a better education, of his aim to raise the standards of living for all classes of people in the state. It was a story of better care for our aged, our sick, our lame and our blind. It was also the story of a tax structure that would be fair to the poor and the rich alike. And, above all the story of a program that would put North Carolina into the main stream of progress and prosperity, administered always with a strict economy that would, eventually, bring tax reduction to the people of North Carolina.

Bert confided to friends later that he was overcome with emotion when Terry had finished. Here, he told himself, is no left-wing radical, no spend-happy fool, no political charlatan, no party hack or demagogue seeking office on hot air.

Bert stood up, pushed back his chair and held out his hand. "Terry," he said, "when do we start campaigning, tomorrow?"

"No," replied Terry, "this afternoon."

The end of the story is becoming history. Sanford, at the halfway mark, is already assured of a place among North Carolina's great Governors.

The complete story on Bert Bennett may still be making. He has given to the Democratic party in North Carolina a new, youthful, and energetic leadership. He is putting new vitality into a political organization that was going to seed for the lack of hard work, good planning, and able direction.

His name is frequently mentioned as a possible gubernatorial candidate in 1964. Bennett inherited one fortune and, still in his first forties has made another one. He is the largest individual oil distributor in the United business community has been the result of hard work, careful planning and spending, an honest and reasonable code of ethics, and the ability to command a genuine respect from all with whom he deals.

Bennett is a conservative in the sense that he wants a dollar in value for each dollar spent and is concerned with the question of from whence is coming said dollar. He is a liberal in the sense that he believes North Carolina must broaden its economic base and enlarge its opportunity potential for the state and its peoples to prosper. He probably pays more taxes in a month than Beverly Lake and Henry Jordan combined pay in a year. His North Carolina tax bill is spread into some 20 counties and he is a good student of the state's tax structure.

There are those who say Cloyd Philpott, had he lived, would have been a shoo-in for Governor in 1964. Bert Bennett of Winston-Salem comes closer to fitting the Philpott pattern than any man whose name has yet been mentioned for Governor in 1964.

Don't 'Push' Voters To Poll

Letter to
The Editors,

Re: Your nearly libelous comment on my statement to Student Legislature concerning the advisability of adding polling places in campus elections.

May I elaborate on my position on this matter in full context which was so irresponsibly denied me in the DTH editorial column.

The topic under consideration at Legislature was the possible addition of ballot boxes for the spring election. The issue was raised by Rep. Larry McDevitt's (UP) amendment to the General Elections Laws which would have added several polling places in predominantly fraternity-sorority districts. After considerable debate the proponents of this amendment conceded that justice would demand that additional boxes be added in dormitory districts. Then, when a substitute motion was introuced to place the whole problem of polling places in the lap of the Elections Board, I obtained the rostrum to expound on my philosophy concerning elections yhich may be summarized as follows:

(1) Speaker after speaker took the floor to advocate additional polling places on the grounds that "we must cultivate interest in student government" and "we must provide each individual with an opportunity to vote." It seems entirely illogical to me that one should attempt to stimulate interest in student government on the day of the election by providing more ballot boxes. If interest and enthusiasm in campus elections has not been spurred by the preceding campaigns and publicity, it certainly is not going to be elicited by the appearance of more "Vote Here" signs. Similarly, if one is going to measure the response of the electorate instead of the stimulus of the candidate by the number of votes cast, the obvious solution is to require by statute that every member of the student body vote on election day. This could lead only to perversion of the democratic process, to political machines, and to anarchy.

(2) Proponents of this increase-the-vote-at-any-cost philosophy were quick to suggest placing additional polling places on alternate floors of every dorm. I kept waiting for someone to propose a mobile poll which would move from door to door to solicit votes. Since this proposal was not forthcoming, however, I addressed the body and expressed my opinion that "If putting a ballot box on every floor would lead to 50 more votes being cast in the election, I'm not sure that I would be in favor of it." And I'm not. For votes that would be obtained from third floor residents who are not concerned enough about campus elections to walk down two flights of stairs to vote are certainly not indicative of interest in and concern for student government. In my opinion, those who have to be pushed to the polls or have to stumble over the ballot box to get them to vote would be doing a greater service to their government and to their peers if they refrained from making their unsophisticated choices. Interest and responsibility in government tmust be elicited from within and never coerced from without.

It is only within this context that I made the statement so ignobly attributed to me. If the Daily Tar Heel would pursue a more responsible policy in reporting the essential arguments on bills before the Student Legislature instead of squeezing juicy tidbits out of context for its weekly slander column, I am sure that popular confidence in the noble objectives of student government would increase manyfold.

Chuck Wrye, Joseph Collier Receive Rockefeller Grants

For the third consecutive year UNC students are recipients of Rockefeller Brothers Theological Felowships providing an all-expense-paid "trial year" at the divinity school or seminary of their choice.

T. Joseph Collier Jr. and Charles L. Wrye were among 60 winners in a competition across the United States and Canada. Both have accepted the awards that were announced by Harvard President Nathan M. Pusey, chairman of the board for the Fund for Theological Education. The grant is especially for outstanding students who feel they might be interested in, although not at present committed to, a church vocation.

Neither Collier nor Wrye has decided which school he will attend. The two previous winners from UNC, David Price, '61, and Robert Sherer, '62, both selected Yale Divinity School for their studies. Both were history majors here.

Collier, also a history major, is former rush co-chairman at Chi Psi Lodge. A member of Phi Eta Sigma and the University Glee Club, he has lettered in soccer. A former orientation counselor, he also has been active on the Wesley Foundation Council and is now Foundation president.

A native of Bayboro, Collier was valedictorian of his high school class and is now a Morehead scholar. He was a national president of the Future Business Leaders of America and was chief page in the state House of Representatives in 1957. His father, a UNC alumnus, is superintendent of schools in Pamlico County.

Wrye, assistant varsity swimming coach this year, was a varsity swimmer last season. A letterman in soccer, he has participated in intramural wrestling and has been house manager of his fraternity, St. Anthony Hall. He has worked for both Dr. Pat Earey and Dr. Carl Blyth in the physiology lab of the UNC physical education department.

His research involved lactic acid analyses of blood samples to discern the relationship between the accumulation of the acid in a swimmer and his efficiency in the water. The results were a part of Dr. Earey's doctoral dissertation.

While in high school in Greensboro, Wrye was a member of DeMolay and active in the athletic program. This past summer he coached the Greensboro Swimming Association girls' team. An English and religion major here, he is co-editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

3-Way Battle, Individuals Share ACC Swim Spotlight

By ED DUPREE

The Atlantic Coast Conference swimming finals should be a hectic three-team battle, but the team championship won't be the only highlight of the three-day meet at Raleigh.

The winners of all 12 individual titles in last year's event will participate again, but not necessarily in the same event as last year.

The defending champions and their credentials are:

Ed Spencer, N. C. State All-American. Spencer won the 440-freestyle, 100-butterfly and 200-butterfly a year ago. He holds the record for the 100-yard butterfly at 54.5 seconds, but has done 53 seconds this year. Spencer has done the 50-yard freestyle in 21.6 this season. His teammate Smokey Ellis, another Wolfpack All-American, holds the record of 22.5, so if Spencer swims in that event he could add another record to his credit.

Thompson Mann, UNC All-American. The Tar Heel junior won both the 100 and 200-backstroke events as a sophomore. He has bettered both his meet times of last year during dual meets and should win both events.

Smokey Ellis, N. C. State All-American. In addition to his 50-freestyle title, Ellis joins teammates Bill McGinty, Pete Fogarsy and Spencer on one of the strongest freestyle relay teams in the nation.

Pete Fogarasy, N. C. State All-American. Fogarasy won the 100 and 200-breatstroke events last year and the 200-yard individual medley. He is expected to repeat on both breaststroke races, but he's not likely to better his 2:18.9 time in the individual medley.

Hugh Lupien, Maryland. Lupin won the 1,500 yard freestyle last year, but it has been replaced by the 1,650-yard freestyle. He may have trouble winning again this year.

Bill McGinty, N. C. State All-American and Kevin Gilson of Maryland. This pair tied for first in the 100-yard freestyle last year. Their time was 50.7 seconds. Gilson has done 49.4 since then and McGinty 50.1.

Willie Bloom, North Carolina. Bloom won the 220-yard freestyle last year, but this event has also been discontinued. Its replacement is the 200-yard freestyle.

Though not a defending champion, UNC's sophomore star Harrison Merrill, has to be rated as highly as the rest. Merrill has the best time in the 100-yard freestyle —48.9, almost two seconds better than the winning time posted by McGinty and Gilson. Merrill also has a time of 1:52 in the newly-added 200-yard freestyle. In the 400-yard individual medley, another new event, the best time has also been posted by Merrill.

Ron Squiers, Maryland. Squiers won the 1-meter diving championship last year and is expected to repeat.

Spencer is probably the most versatile swimmer of the lot and Coaches Pat Earey of North Caro- will probably try to juggle their lina and Maryland's Bill Campbell lineups around him.

State is strongest in the breaststroke ,the butterfly and the medley relay. UNC is strong in the freestyle and backstroke. Maryland has more depth than the other two and could walk off with the championship by garnering most of the second and third places.

Trials were scheduled for Thursday afternoon with more to follow this afternoon and tomorrow morning. Five finals to be completed by tonight with the remaining seven slated for Saturday afternoon in the N. C. State pool.

Florida Training Camp Briefs

LAKELAND, Fla. — Frank Lary will test his arm for the first time in an exhibition game Monday when the Detroit Tigers meet the Chicago White Sox at Henley Field, manager Bob Sheffing announced Wednesday when he set up his pitching rotation for the first three games of the grapefruit season.

Lary will team up with Paul Foytack and Ron Kline to face the Sox.

Scheffing will use Bob Anderson, Doug Gallagher and Larry Foster in Saturday's exhibition opener against the Minnesota Twins in Orlando. Then he'll use Hank Aguirre, Phil Regan and Bill Faul against the Twins in Lakeland Sunday.

fought bitterly by the opposition; the codification of the procedures and the rights of a defendant in the Honor Council cases was a three year effort which saw its culmination in the success of Hank Patterson; a concern for the fraternity academic situation was expressed in concrete action by members of this party; the doctrine of broad-based student government was nurtured in this party and grew to the IDC; and the legislative branch now finds its expression in the redirection of the WRC and the proposals of a restructured executive branch.

Sumarizing the main thought of his speech Lawler closed by saying that the "degree to which we recognize the task of subduing these more inclusive causes of our varied difficulties with integrity of purpose and patience of labor—to that degree we will bestow a better 'Ole House' for the generations which shall forget you and me but will spend four years in the house we made."

UNC's Larry Brown Places On 'Small America' Team

From UPI Wire Reports

North Carolina's playmaking co-captain Larry Brown has been named to a second team spot on the 15th annual United Press International "Small America" team for players no taller than 5-10.

Brown, a 5-10 senior guard from Long Beach, N. Y., was the number two scorer for Dean Smith's Tar Heels with a 14.2 average, but his value to the team didn't stop there. He was a top defensive man, a very capable dribbler and the take-charge guy for UNC. Brown had the shooting ability to average 20 points a game, but turned down many shots in favor of better shots for his teammates, especially the team's leading scorer, Billy Cunningham.

Brown seemed to have a built-in radar set for detecting a teammate open for a shot, resulting in countless assists for the All-Atlantic Conference guard. He set an ACC tournament record with 13 assists against South Carolina in the opening game this year.

Named to the first team were Larry Singleton (5-10) of Cincinatti, Jimmy Gilbert (5-9) of Texas, Vinnie Ernst (5-8) of Providence, John Egan (5-10) of Loyola and Manny Newsome (5-9) of Western Michigan.

Joining Brown on the second team are Tom Baxley (5-10) of Florida, Eddie Evans (5-9) of Oklahoma, Doug Hutton (5-10) of Mississippi State and Jim Lynam (5-10) of St. Joseph's of Philadelphia.

Brown was the only player receiving mention on the team.

High School Star Decides On UNC

Jeff Beaver, much sought after Myers Park High School football star from Charlotte, has accepted a John Motley Morehead Scholarship to UNC.

The scholarship apparently decided Beaver between scholarships to Duke or UNC. Until Tuesday, Beaver hadn't decided whether to play his football at Duke or Carolina.

Beaver was one of the top quarterbacks in the state during the past high school season. UNC has already signed Danny Talbott, another outstanding back, to a grant-in-aid.

Cassius M. Clay Poetry Champion

And He Can Box Too!

NEW YORK (UPI) — Cassius Marcellus Clay, Kentucky's pugilistic poet, had his hand raised in victory Thursday over seven opponents—six of them girls.

Cassius triumphed in a self-composed poetry-reading contest in New York's Greenwich Village.

He said he considered the contest a preparatory workout for his heavyweight contenders' fight with New Yorker Doug Jones at Madison Square Garden next Wednesday night.

"The rhythm of my poetry gives me an unprecedented rhythm in the ring," he explained modestly to the arty, beatnik crowd at a special luncheon in the "Bitter End"—a coffee-house night club.

The humble "Lip from Louisville" won the contest with his flamboyant reading of "Ode to a Champion: Cassius Marcellus Clay—By Cassius M. Clay."

Disk jockey Scott Muni of the ABC network refereed the contest, and the crowd of about 200 decided the winner with its applause.

Clay's unpretentious poem started:

"Hail to a man of muscle and brawn, a fighter so stout of heart

"That shadow-boxed and sweated and punched and learned the boxer's art."

After proving that Clay is greater than the great gladiators of yore, and that he will knock out Jones in six rounds, the poem concluded with a title triumph over Sonny Liston:

"So when the gong rings and the referee sings out 'the winner'

"And Sonny Liston will fall

"Cassius Marcellus Clay will be the noblest Roman of them all."

Hubbard's Record Refuses To Fall

Most indoor track records by Atlantic Coast Conference teams have been set or equaled within the past five years. The lone holdout is the broad jump.

The ACC's finest will try their prowess at blasting records off the boards here Saturday in the 10th annual Indoor Games, but it's likely the broad jump mark, set in 1935 by Charlie Hubbard of North Carolina, will still dominate.

Hubbard, then a student from Sanford, scaled 23 feet 8 1-4 inches some 28 years ago. No one in this area has been able to erase the mark.

Now a Methodist minister in Wilson, N. C., (last year Rev. Hubbard was a Chapel Hill minister) he is described by North Carolina track coach Dale Ranson as "a young fellow who got off to a good start and who utilized his leg spring to the utmost."

Thirteen events will be spotlighted at the Indoor Games. Track experts of the area believe that records could fall in at least six or seven events.

Tickets for the major indoor attraction of the South are priced at $2. However, students, both high school and college, can attend for one dollar.

Good seats are available at all sessions, first of which will be Saturday morning. Some events will be clocked Saturday afternoon, with the finals reeling off that night. Warm-ups begin at 6:30 p.m., with competition starting at 7 o'clock.

DTH Reporters To Be Paid; Orientation Is Reorganized

By Joel Bulkley

Student Legislature Thursday night overwhelmingly approved by a vote of 40-3, appropriating $360 to the Publications Board for salaries of $10 a week for three Daily Tar Heel reporters.

Legislature also passed a bill reorganizing the campus orientation committee. Action on a resolution calling for the "transformation of the Germans Club into an all-campus social coordinating committee" was postponed until next Thursday's session.

The reporter's bill, introduced by Rufus Edmisten (SP), cited a lack of personnel on the news staff, a lack of experience and dependability as the reasons for establishing these three paying staff positions.

Jim Clotfelter ,co-editor of the DTH, stated that each of the three paid reporters will be responsible for dependable news coverage of a specific area of the campus. One reporter will cover all items concerning the administration, one reporter will handle all student government activities while the other will be responsible for all other campus activities.

The bill to reorganize the campus orientation committee, introduced by Bob Spearman (UP), established a committee which will be composed of a chairman, an orientation coordinator and 22 representative students. The bill provides for the committee to conduct both the fall and spring orientation programs. An amendment to the bill added the editor of the Carolina Handbook as an ex - officio member to the committee. According to the bill, he should make every effort to correlate the handbook with the orientation program. The internal organization of the committee will be left to the discretion of the chairman.

A general order, stating that the resolution concerning the Germans Club, will be the first order of business of next week's session was approved by SL. The resolution, introduced by Phil Baddour (SP) for Neal Jackson, states that since the Germans club has the experience and potential to be an excellent social organization this tradition should be continued. The bill resolves that the Germans club should coordinate the entertainment for large social events on campus and that membership in the club should not be based on "any socially selective system, but instead upon the interest and ability to pay."

A bill for the creation of a conference coordinating committee was referred back to committee because, as Rufus Edmisten noted, everyone was in a "state of confusion concerning the bill."

Legislature also approved the IDC Court by-laws.

The following representatives were absent from Thursday's session: Dave Williams (TM 3, SP) and Charles Lefler (DM 3, SP).

Ky. Mine Strike Leader To Speak

Berman Gibson, leader of the striking mineworkers in Harlan County, Kentucky, will talk here March 20, sponsored by the Di-Phi.

The Harlan County miners have had their welfare cards revoked by the United Mine Workers union, and have vowed to starve before giving in to the mine operators in Kentucky.

Gibson quit his job as a milkman to join the miners in their fight. He is described as a "typical mountaineer," plain-spoken and forceful.

Rudy Edwards proposed Gibson's appearance here to the Di-Phi on behalf of the New Left Club, which initiated the idea. Other campus organizations are expected to sponsor the striker's visit jointly.

"I think many students will enjoy hearing Mr. Gibson's views," a Di-Phi statement said, "and this situation in Kentucky is certainly an interesting one. It can provide some important insight on the times in which we live."

Place and time for the talk have not yet been determined.

Student Party Member Drive Begins This Week

By DIANE HILE

A Student Party membership campaign began this week under co-chairmen Beth Walker and Richard Vinroot.

Purpose of the campaign is twofold. The first is to inform the students of the purpose and function of the Student Party and of the nature of its recent revitalization and redirection," the SP said.

The second purpose is to gain new members for the party among those students sympathetic with the ideals of a party committed to the needs of the campus as a whole, the SP statement said.

The membership campaign is being conducted in anticipation of the Student Party nominating conventions to be held Sunday and Tuesday.

Sunday night the convention will elect party officers, consider endorsement for the Daily Tar Heel editorship, nominate Senior Class officers, name delegates to the National Student Association convention and chairmen for the Carolina Athletic Association and the Woman's Athletic Association.

Tuesday night the Big Four officers and prospective legislators will be nominated.

Ghost Group Sets Program

By Hubert Hawkins

Leaders of the UNC Parapsychological Discussion Group met Thursday to draft a constitution for the new group, and announced that the subject of the next program will be "poltergeists."

Dr. William G. Roll, parapsychology and Project Director of the Psychical Research Foundation, will lead an informal discussion of this subject Thursday at 8 p.m. in 105 Hanes.

Dr. Roll has been president of the Oxford Society for Psychical Research, editor of the Journal of Parapsychology, and research associate in the Duke Parapsychological Laboratory. He has investigated such phenomena as the Seafford, Long Island, home in which sugar bowls danced, bottle tops popped, and objects moved with no apparent cause.

His main interests include life-after-death research and the investigation of poltergeists ("noisy spirits").

Recently the Parapsychological Discussion Group has sponsored trips to the Duke labs and has been in contact with Dr. J. B. Rhine. Plans were made Thursday to coordinate activities and establish the organization on a permanent basis.

All interested persons are invited to participate.

Syrian Military Junta Takes Over; Middle East In Crisis

Pro-Nasser Force Threatens Israel

BEIRUT Lebanon (UPI) — A pro-Nasser military junta claimed Friday to have seized control of Syria without firing a shot in a lightning revolt that alarmed neighboring Israel and threatened the peace of the entire Middle East.

Rebel broadcasts extended a "hand of friendship" to the United Arab Republic regime of President Gamal Abdel Nasser and pledged to work for Arab unity. But there was no immediate answer to the big question: Would Syria, which severed its union with Egypt in a revolt 18 months ago, rejoin Nasser's U.A.R.

Radio Damascus said the coup was bloodless. But Israeli sources reported heavy firing was heard Friday morning for about 30 minutes in Syrian encampments on the eastern shore of Lake Galilee, across from Israel.

The new junta, apparently headed by a strongly pro-Nasser and anti-Communist intelligence officer named Brig. Abdullah Jabrili, proclaimed a state of emergency, imposed a dusk-to-dawn curfew on the nation and closed all borders, airfields and seaports.

Premier Fled

The revolt toppled the regime of Premier Khaled El Azm. Reports from Istanbul said Azm and his family leaped over their garden wall when the dawn uprising began and took refuge in the Turkish Embassy next door.

It was the third Middle East revolt in six months. Like the previous revolts that rocked Iraq and the Yemen in recent months, its leaders pledged friendship with Cairo and set a possible time bomb ticking under the Arab monarchies in Saudi Arabia and Jordan.

Observers said the recent series of Middle East upheavals almost certainly spell trouble for pro-Western Kings Hussein of Jordan and Saud of Saudi Arabia and may open up new threats to Israel.

They said the Shah of Iran also could be expected to feel the shock waves of a new regime friendly to Nasser and that trouble in any of the three monarchies easily could involve the United States which has close ties with them.

Backs Arab Unity

First reports indicated the Syrian rebel junta was neither pro-Communist nor pro-Western. Instead it quickly proclaimed the ideals of Arab unity and extended the "hand of friendship" to Nasser and the new revolutionary governments of Iraq, Yemen and Algeria.

Campus Chest Opens Mon.

The Campus Chest Solicitations Committee will launch its annual Spring drive beginning Monday and running through March 13.

Some 300 solicitors will be participating in the drive which will contact students living in dormitories, sorority and fraternity houses, Glen Lennox, Victory Village, and the various professional schools.

The goal is $1 per student, announced co-chairmen Clay Kenan and Mac Boxley, with the money from this year's drive going to the Children's Mental Hospital in Butner, the World University Service, the American Friends Service, and the Panama Exchange.

Last year Carolina students gave $3,700—or only about 40 cents per student—a figure considerably below the $1 asked. "We hope the students realize that this drive is the only drive of a charitable nature at UNC and that it comes only once a year," the co-chairmen said.

"Certainly going to classes is only a part of a student's life at Carolina," Boxley stated. "Included in this University life are various responsibilities to fellow students and the University itself, one of which is a sincere and generous attitude of giving, relating to worthwhile charities which are assisted by the Campus Chest. The support that the Campus Chest will be able to provide for the four charities this year depends directly on the participation and support of Carolina's student body."

"Each student contributing a dollar or more," added Kenan, "will receive a Campus Chest button with a number on the back. Three numbers will be drawn at Saturday's Carnival, and students holding the lucky numbers will be given prizes—gift certificates for clothes and steak dinners."

In addition, the dormitory with the highest percentage of contributors at the dollar or more level will receive dorm points towards the "Dorm of the Year" award.

Education Needs Sacrifice Says Federal Commissioner

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

U. S. Commissioner of Education Francis Keppel yesterday urged N. C. educators and citizens to "sacrifice long-standing hopes as well as long-standing hostilities" in the field of education and to "unite in another crusade on behalf of a new generation."

Earlier in the Memorial Hall program, N. C. Governor Terry Sanford had briefly thanked the people of the state for their part in an extensive educational program. "If it werent for the support of the local communities," he said, "this program could not be carried out."

Speaking to an annual meeting of the N. C. Citizens Committee for Better Schools, Keppel said, "Educators themselves must be prepared to reassess positions that were taken under different circumstances. We are faced today by new facts that call for new solutions to old problems. As I see the situaton, national security and economic growth now change the need for a Federal program in education from a desirable domestic goal to a deadly serious necessity.

"We have waited too long; we are face to face with a problem that must be solved at once or our national future will be in jeopardy."

Keppel said educators are citizens just like everyone else and as such "should voluntarily and gladly subordinate our particular interests to the larger good." He told a Memorial Hall gathering that as educators they must face up to economic and political realities.

"If we as a society are to make the forward leap in education that the times demand, he who trips us as we come to the place of the jump must have the national well-being on his conscience."

Keppel urged the educators to unite and speak out for education. "If the educators are either silent or divided in their counsel, in the face of the difficulties besetting any legislation on education, it is not reasonable to expect that the public will take the necessary action. Elucators cannot pass good legislation, but by their action or inaction they can keep it from passing."

Dwelling on legislation, Keppel said the Kennedy administration has recently proposed to Congress a comprehensive and interrelated program of aid which "recognizes that the chain of education in our society must be strong in all its links."

Keppel said the proposed legislation would include "expanding and extending the student loan and graduate fellowships programs . . . providing Federal Government insurance of long-term loans to students from families of moderate means . . . increase the number of graduate fellowships . . . additional, educationally-related, work-study opportunities for college students."

He said aid would be provided for the construction of public community and junior colleges — "a matter of considerable interest to you at the moment in North Carolina."

"The bill is concerned with the essence of quality—the preparation and continued improvement of teachers," Keppel said. "It seeks to broaden and improve programs of teacher preparation and in-service training, with special emphasis on the usbjects to be taught," he added.

Keppel said the bill "would include substantial increases in the salaries of career teachers, increases in starting salaries that are exceedingly low, and increases in the salaries of teachers in economically-disadvantaged districts; constructing classrooms in areas of critical and dangerous shortage; and initiating pilot, experimental, or demonstration projects to meet special educational problems, particularly in slums and depressed rural and urban areas."

The bill would also authorize grants to states for the expansion of University extension centers and would make additional grants to states in adult basic education programs.

"An estimated 8 million Americans 25 years of age and older have less than 5 years of schooling, and almost 23 million have less than an eighth grade education," Keppel said.

Keppel praised Gov. Sanford for his work in education. "No one has been more dedicated or more vigorous in advancing North Carolina in this field than Gov. Sanford, and I believe that his ability to communicate this dedication and the fact that his reputation stretches beyond the boundaries of his own State.

Reading Course Open To Students

Dr. Paul L. Lehmann of Union Theological Seminary will conduct the Sunday morning service at the Presbyterian Church at 11 a.m. The fifth in the series of Completion Dedication speakers, Professor Lehmann will speak on "The Mission of the Church in Contemporary Culture."

Professor Lehmann was educated at Ohio State University, Union Seminary, and the Universities of Zurich and Bonn; and has taught at Elmhurst College, Eden Theological Seminary, Wellesley College, Princeton Theological Seminary and Harvard Divinity School. He is the author of "Forgiveness, Decisive Issues in Protestant Thought," and a forthcoming work, "Ethics." He will be in Chapel Hill delivering the Wesley Lectures, speaking Friday at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall on "The Decline and Fall of Conscience," Saturday at 3 p.m. in the Presbyterian Student Center on "Theological Method Today," and Sunday at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall on "The Ethical Reality of Conscience."

Dormitory Spotlight: McIver

Anyone who thinks that it is difficult to organize a girl's dorm should look at McIver.

President Nancy Earle has combined an active social slate with imaginative extracurriculars, and the result has been a diversified program that has met with success.

The dorm won the "Beat Dook" parade trophy with its float, will sell car washings at the Campus Chest Auction and will have a booth at the Carnival.

Three parties were held before exams, and several more are planned for this semester. The Halloween party, the Christmas dinner and a mixer with Carr were highly successful. Social Chairman Caroline Davis has planned another mixer with Carr in addition to other events.

Residents hosted one of the women trustees during the recent conference, and a reception was given at that time.

CWC representatives Lynn Taxis and Sandy Dotson helped set up a bridge tournament, and there has been excellent participation. Coffee breaks were arranged for each evening during exams.

Next—Lewis.

Debate Team 10th In Navy Tournament

The UNC debate team ranked tenth in the field of fifty-eight teams that participated in the U. S. Naval Academy Debate Tournament at Annapolis, Maryland last weekend.

Carolina debaters Mack Armstrong and Haywood Clayton compiled a 4-2 record in debating both sides of the proposition that the non-Communist nations of the world should establish an economic community. They won over Manhattan, Colby, Canisius and Johns Hopkins and lost to Dartmouth and St. Josephs. The UNC team had defeated Dartmouth earlier in the year, according to Dr. Donald Springen, Director of Debate.

The next tournament in which Carolina will participate will be held at Duke today and tomorrow.

Otelia Discusses Manners

It was her night. Mrs. Otelia Conner held the podium at Howell Hall Thursday evening and spoke on the subject about which she is most concerned: the manners of the Carolina student.

Mrs. Conner, who has taken the campus under her wing, told her listeners her grandfather graduated from Carolina in the 1880's, both her father and her grandfather were trustees, and that she has lived in Chapel Hill so long that she feels as though she almost owns the place. Mrs. Conner said that all her choildren are grown. "I don't have any more children," she said. "I sort of feel like you're all my children."

On the manners and behavior of students at Carolina, Mrs. Conner recounted many of her own experiences. She commented that bad manners were a reflection of one's "home-training." Mrs. Conner concluded her talk by saying that, "people expect good manners from the college set. Manners should be learned at home, before you come to college, because then they will be innate. The first thing to remember," she said, "is that having good manners is nothing but being thoughtful."

In the question period following her talk, Mrs. Conner was quizzed about a reference in her talk to a "famous war" that was caused by bad manners. "The Trojan War was caused by bad manners," she replied. She urged the students to brush up on their Greek history. "There was a man named Paris," she said, "who ran off with Helen, the wife of his host. Though she was willing to go, this was still a flagrant violation of a host's hospitality." This, she said, caused a nine-year war between the Greeks and the Trojans.

One member of the audience asked Mrs. Conner if she thought it was proper to correct the manners of "people who are older than you are." Mrs. Conner replied "You don't think I have corrected anyone older than I am, do you?" Another asked her if she thought it was proper to correct other people's manners in public. Mrs. Conner said, "What about the person who puts a tray on your table at Lenoir? You'll probably never see him again, you've got to get him right then."

One person expressed an interest in hearing Mrs. Conner's opinion about the current sex morals, but Mrs. Conner replied that she was "only on the campus during the daytime."

One student asked Mrs. Conner whether she was in "the habit—I mean, do you occasionally tap people on the head with your umbrella? Do you think this is polite?" "Well," she said, "I've never tapped anyone on the head with my umbrella—I've thumped 'em with my thumb sometimes."

Mrs. Conner was also asked if she thought manners were becoming "more casual." She replied that this was true and referred to the swimsuits of a few years back that covered the "shoulders, arms and legs." Now the swimsuits are more casual, she said, "but you still wear something. It's the same way with manners. You still have to observe the fundamentals."

When asked whether she thought that manners were a "serious problem at Carolina," she replied that she thought "disrespect to other people is bad, here or anywhere else. On the whole manners are good, but there are a few little things you ought to know. Having good manners is just being thoughtful."

At one point it seemed the session would turn into a floor debate on the anthropology of manners. Mrs. Conner, however, remained the center of attraction. "I love all of you," she said at one point, "so don't take me too seriously."

OTELIA CONNER lectures to the student body on the virtues of good manners. "Having good manners is nothing but being thoughtful," she said, noting that "people expect good manners from the college set."

REACTIONS to Mrs. Conner's lecture varied. Some listeners were attentive, others were amused, and some like this boy looked like they just weren't sure.

Student Art Show Opens At NC State

UNC students with an artistic yen have an opportunity to exhibit their talents this week.

The First Annual Student Art Competition will be held at State College beginning March 10. Undergraduate students enrolled in colleges and universities in the Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill area are eligible to compete.

Entries may be in four categories: paintings, sculptures, prints and drawings.

The works will be judged by Claude Howell, associate professor of art at Wilmington College. The entries will be on exhibition at the State College Union March 10-28.

Today is the deadline for entering. There is no entry fee.

Entry blanks can be obtained at GM.

Ye Olde Feude

One time-honored tradition of the Daily Tar Heel is that it be the constant critic of student government. Recently the Student Legislature has come under fire in accordance with this tradition. Thursday this old feud reached a new low when the social conscience half of the co-editorship of this year's Tar Heel came up with the brilliant piece of childish psychology that if you say some one is going to do something for a wrong reason, he will not do that something because he will be afraid that people will think that he is doing it for that wrong reason. Therefore the campus is treated to a personal list of bigots: the reasoning is that these people are opposed to more funds for salaries for Tar Heel personnel; the Tar Heel has been critical of Student Legislature; the bigots in Student Legislature did not like this criticism; therefore these bigots will not vote for anything remotely connected with the Tar Heel.

Student government needs to be criticized. The Executive has been engaged in a re-run of the Eisenhower years: stop, consolidate, look backwards and forwards, then stay in the middle and do not go any place. For sheer slow-footed inefficiency, Student Legislature is hard to beat. But there is a difference between criticism because student government does not see the light that streams forth from the Tar Heel and criticism because student government does not achieve the ends which it sets for itself.

Student government has been too much a gtme and too little a part of the educational experience. We are fortunate to have the responsibility of governing ourselves; too many of us refuse to take part in this governing process. Not every one is politically oriented, but every one does live in a governed society. This small and isolated society, the University, has a government; the reaction of the individual student to the fact that he is supposed to govern himself probably serves as an indication of many of the problems America faces today.

More than anything else, apathy, just plain lack of concern, plagues America. Politics is for politicians. Politicians appropriate their own tax money. They make laws which govern themselves. Government (of the people, anybody?) is the enemy of the individual.

So on the Carolina campus a few people are concerned while many would just as soon let the faculty do it. Accepting responsibility is part of growing up. In this case accepting the responsibility of governing oneself, by becoming informed and participating if only on the role of casting an informed ballot, is part of growing up. It is about time for some maturing on this campus. Student government needs to flex its flabby muscles and do something. A good start would be to launch an all-out campaign to crate an awareness of its existence among the student body. The Tar Heel would do well to stand back and survey the problems of Student Government not in light of how sad it is, but in terms of what it can do and why it is not doing these things. The student body should try to meet Student Government half way.

Things We Like . . .

"Plugging" something or someone you like, is an old American pastime—as anyone who watches television or reads newspapers and magazines can testify. We certainly are not above such activity; bult we feel "plugs" should not be subtle, or cancealed—instead blatant and announced.

Thus, the following random plugs:

—For Rufus Edmisten, the People's Choice for everything, and the choice of many in the Student Party for vice-president this year. Rufus undoubtedly will deprive the campus of a fine show and, in kindness to the UP, not run.

—For SHOW magazine, which for 75 cents is the greatest reading bargain in America today. Next issue will feature articles by Clifford Odets, Joseph ("Catch-22") Heller, Arthur ("This is what FDR would have done, Mr. President") Schlesinger Jr., Igor Stravinsky and John O'Hara—plus beautiful art work.

—For the Campus Chest which, in a frighteningly-small minority of such college functions in this country, has chosen admirable and worthwhile recipients — and thus deserves to be a success.

—For Charles DeGaulle, the Angelic-Anglophobe, who rushes in where fools fear to tread—and has the glory and drama, in this gloryless age to lead his country, with clashing cymbals and flourishing trumpets into the abyss of isolation, defeat and destruction. And, who, all the while thinks he is Napoleon.

—And a plug, believe it or not, for student government, for which there is hope. (JC)

Otelia

Otelia Connor has a suggestion for college officials wondering (?) how "manners" can be imbued in today's unruly student generation:

Why not let her, she asks, speak for 30 minutes to all the freshman orientation classes next year? What about it?
